"The section on the Voice is well considered and trustworthy, based as it is on the writings of authorities on the question of the Hygiene of the Vocal Organs."—STAGE.

"The Book contains many valuable hints in regard to Voice and Gesture."—VOICE (New York).

POST FREE, 1s. 2d.

London: Bemrose, 23, Old Bailey, E.C., and of the Author, at his residence, 49, Torrington Square, W.C.

IN SIX GRADES,

Price Two Shillings each.

Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:

A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,

By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWANN SONNENCHEIN and CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE; And all Book and Music Sellers.

The Organ World.

OUR CATHEDRALS.

THE late John Crowdy, a large, keen-sighted writer, dealing thoughtfully and earnestly with the vexed topic, Church music, observed, in writing on our cathedrals, in the course of an interesting article :—

No one who keeps himself informed on the current politics of the time in their ecclesiastical bearings can fail to see that, in the crisis which threatens the relations of Church and State in England, cathedrals must become a prominent subject of attack and defence.

The place of cathedrals in the economy of the English Church is not seldom inadequately estimated. Cathedrals are sometimes spoken and written about as if they were merely the largest specimens of Anglican architecture in their several counties ; at anothe ; as though they existed only for the maintenance of sacred musicr, while of late years a habit has grown up of remembering that they have naves as well as choirs, and present tolerably palpable evidence of having been designed to bring multitudes under the influence of religious oratory. He must see with one eye only who does not perceive in cathedrals an intention of centralising and presenting, on a large scale, every form of public church life—the ritual which appeals to the eye and begins with a magnificent structure, the ritual which engages the ear and is exemplified in every day's choral service, and the oratory which enchains the mind and finds its auditorium in the nave. Room is provided in a cathedral for the employment of every talent capable of public exercise for religious purposes. With one branch of the work of the Church to which they belong the cathedrals, strictly speaking, have nothing to do; that is, with the private portion of priestly duties, parochial charge. It could not have been without design that the vast majority of cathedrals have no cure of souls attached, and we conceive that any proposal to make them merely enormous parish churches involves a mistaken conception of their proper functions.

All this, however, is foreign to a musical consideration of the subject, except in so far as it clears the way to a proper estimation of the place held by music in the cathedral economy. Criticisms of the cathedral system have already appeared, in which it has been assumed that the sole object of cathedrals is the maintenance of sacred music. We have shown in our reviewing columns how fatally such a narrow definition of their functions must vitiate any plan of reform based upon it as a starting-point. Those who wish well to the future of English Church music in connection with its natural nurseries will do well to ascertain first its due place, which is not that of a weedy flower, overgrowing the plants which should flourish by its side. Cathedrals, if they are to be reformed, should and will be reformed with a view to other besides musical uses; and any idea of turning them into gigantic colleges of ordained church musicians, or of keeping out of its dignities and rewards Churchmen conspicuous for other talents than music, can only meet with rejection, perhaps involving the suppression of much of the musical element in indignation at its exclusive claims. We must dismiss, then, from our mind pleasant but selfish dreams of Deaneries being given exclusively to clerical musical amateurs, and Canons chosen for proficiency in counterpoint. What church musicians have to do is to accept the position of music as one of the several provinces of public worship which claim place in cathedral administration, and do their best to get for the art the means of achieving results which shall compel respect, and stay the hand of the unsympathising reformer. Whatever is good of its kind stands a fair chance in England of holding its own ; and the only circumstances under which we should ourselves fear for the interests of English sacred music in any coming reconstruction of the cathedral system, would be that the reconstruction should find its musical corporations in a state of lifelessness and dilapidation, overgrown with abuses and eaten into by neglect. How far the condition of the choral element in cathedral foundations is such as to inspire fear or confidence and respect, is a question which has been discussed for many years past, and on which judgement has been given beyond appeal. In the first place the literal observance of founders' wills becomes, by the changes which time brings about, impossible ; in the second place, the right of existing society to deal with existing property independently of the wishes of a dead owner cannot philosophically be contested ; in the third place, even if we hesitated to accept the doctrine that a dead man has no right to control property, we cannot fail to see that modern legislation in the reform of foundations analogous to cathedrals has, as a matter of fact, gone upon that theory. We cannot, therefore, in our consideration of this subject assume an absolute indefeasibility for statutory claims, or challenge the right of the country, through its Legislature, to modify them or set them aside. At the same time it must be recollected that the statues of the foundation are law for the time being, and in the absence of authoritative modification, their perversion to the injury of any section of the body corporate is a crime. That in many instances these provisions have been grossly perverted to the injury of the musical staff of cathedrals, and in a few instances by the musical officials themselves, we shall probably discover and set forth. On the other hand, there may be, and probably are, many tolerated departures from foundation statues which not only involve no wrong, but point to the direction which reform should take. To fuss over such technical transgressions would be unwise.

It has already been indicated that in any observations we may have to make, it will not be assumed that cathedrals exist solely, or in a paramount degree, for the sake of music. It will be no part of our desire to stipulate for a musical dean, or to lock the precincts against all but musical canons. But as regards the offices in a cathedral which are essentially musical, the not unfrequent abuse of filling them with men utterly incompetent to perform musical duty could scarcely hope to escape animadversion. Minor canons who cannot or do not chant, and precentors ignorant of the musical alphabet, are abuses palpable to the eyes of all, and for which no excuse could well be alleged.

The robbery of the musical section of cathedral bodies is, we fear, not infrequent, and perhaps the most cruel form it can take is the keeping down of choristers in the social scale by means of inferior education. On this point there can be little room for difference of opinion. Music and the Church have suffered keenly by the neglect of choristers' schools, and reducing choristers' education to the level of the ploughboy's. On this head we fear there is much to lay bare, both of direct neglect and of plausible evasion. Nothing ought to satisfy the well-wishers of church music short of the complete development of those means by which in most cases it was intended by founders to provide for them should be the business of an enquiry."

These words were written, a few years ago, and our cathedral music has been greatly improved since the gifted writer now quoted laid down the new. All the same, there remains the great task as indicated in his words, of reforming many our cathedral corporations, especially in view of doing justice to our many gifted and painstaking cathedral musical officers. Choristers proceeding to the Universities and entered a learned profession. Whether cathedrals are open to serious attack on the ground of their repentony of music doubtful. To condemn the work of the old-fashioned cathedralists, involves a forgetfulness of the excellence and beauty of that older style of devotional music which aims more at a permeating gravity than at a restlesss intellectual effort. In all directions it is palpable that the best fortification is self reform. To these words it is only necessary to add, little has been done in any of the old cathedrals in the way of restoring the original educational privileges of our choristers. Much, however, has been done to develope cathedral music. Some indeed, think this branch of the art has indeed been developed too diligently in the modern direction to the neglect of the graver ancient school; but it must be borne in mind, that larger have services and the bringing of the oratorio to its home, the church, are the cause, not to speak of an increased love of dramatic effect, whereby modern musical mannerisms have so largely entered our cathedral service and anthem music.

ON ORGANISTS.

The following words from a provincial journal, written some time ago, are still of interest to Church musicians :—

"There should be the same sympathy and friendly co-operation between the clergyman and the organist as generally exists, or is supposed to exist, between the vicar and his curate, or incumbent and his curate. In the latter cases any manifest want of cordiality brings down public reproof, or the active interference of superior authority. It is not so in the case of the organist. The importance of music in sacred worship is not sufficiently recognised or appreciated by congregations to insist upon a more careful selection of efficient organists. The majority of the clergy themselves are also too much like their congregations in indifference to the abilities of their organists; hence it is that the organ-seat is so often occupied by persons who, in the eyes of the clergy, rank with the sexton in the question of status.

"The correct training of church choirs depends, in a great measure, upon the tact and ability of the organist, particularly when he has likewise to perform the duty of choirmaster, which is very frequently the case. How important, therefore, is it that the greatest care should be exercised in the selection of organists. Better salaries and more appreciative congregations will soon produce a better class of organists: the latter result is approaching, and the solution of the other difficulty will soon follow; and then, we hope, we shall witness greater cordiality between minister and organist, and experience in all churches a musical service more practical and general than it is in the present day. The degrees of efficiency manifested by church choirs just now are various: a few are thoroughly efficient, many are passable, but some are execrable. What is desired is a more uniform character of church music, so that casual attendants may join in the worship at any church as well as in the one at which they usually worship. There is, or should be, a standard in the rendering of church music not dependent upon the taste of crude organists and choirmasters.

"Some of our best composers are givinggreat attention to the Church in producing original matter, and in reproducing the writings of their predecessors in more acceptable forms, so as to popularise the subject. The duty of an organist is no child's play, if he has a proper sense of his position—the opening voluntary will generally show whether or not he has that proper sense of the duty before him. There should be nothing trivial or secular in that neglected portion of his day's duty. A clever and feeling organist has, in that introduction, the power of creating such impressions as would prepare the mind for a right and solemn appreciation of the service."

A RECENT DECISION.

Of the many intricate features of English law, surely none can exceed in want of clearness the laws affecting ecclesiastical matters.

A contemporary observes in a leading article:—

"What are 'necessaries?' will occasionally involve a jury in considerations of a delicate and perplexing character; but such cases as these appear to be simple when compared with the knotty point which has lately been decided by Mr. Justice Stirling. Here the difficulty was to determine what are 'necessaries' in the case of a church. From early times certain valuable lands in Stoke Newington have been held in trust to apply the rents towards 'the necessary occasions' of the church of that parish, and they have been so applied. All appears, indeed, to have gone smoothly till 1858, when the late Sir Gilbert Scott was called in to design and build a magnificent new edifice, including a lofty spire. For the body of the work with all its fittings and accessories, money was duly forthcoming; but what about spire? Was that a necessary feature? and if not could the trustees defray the expense of the costly superfluity without making themselves liable to the penalties of breach of trust? How fine a point is put upon these matters by the lawyers is shown by the fact that, while it is admitted to be allowable to provide out of the trust fund for the salaries of the sexton, the verger, and the tuner of the organ, it is held to be not allowable to pay the organist, the assistant organist, the organ blower, the bell-ringer, or the singers, because these functionaries are not concerned with the maintenance of the church. The spire, however, is the place in which it is at all events usual to hang the bells—it is the most convenient place if the summons to prayer is to be heard far and wide as it is intended to be: and bells are held to be part of the necessary furniture of a church. It is even considered by legal authorities that erecting a steeple might come within the definition of a 'reparation' although no steeple had been there before. So Mr. Justice Stirling has finally decided. The result is that the folk who will seek recreation in the new Clissold Park will ere long look at a church with a tall and elegant spire."

It may well be asked if the organist and other musical officers of a Church are not necessary for the performance of public worship? and further, if public worship is not the primary motive for the maintenance of Church? Mr. Justice Stirling, by his decision, not only illustrated the subtlety of the law, but also unconsciously showed that with a curiously reverse legal view of the requirements of public worship, those who handle Church furniture, as organ and bells, are, in the eyes of the law, persons of less responsibility, and consequently of less importance, than those who do subordinate though useful work in connection with the Church. The climax of illogical absurdity is attained in the inference that the organ-tuner is more concerned in the preservation of Church property than the organist who is constantly called upon to handle a costly instrument with care and skill. Such a judgment is probably based upon the thoroughly English idea "the sacredness of property," and is not intended as a large and complete view of the use of Church property and of the responsibility of those called upon to make use of Church furniture, notably of the most costly furniture, the organ. But even on this narrow and partial ground such a judgment cannot be called large-sighted, recognising, as it does, only one and a limited form of responsibility, and overlooking, as in the important case of the organist, that larger form of responsibility combined with usefulness, which is the result of special educational preparation, habitual care, and trained skill.

MR. GRIFFITH ON CHURCH MUSIC.

(Continued from page 754.)

Since the last article on this subject, a protest from musical people has come to hand, curiously enough, against the sentimental adoption of a low, or rather very low, note for the recitation of the Confession, on the ground of difficulty to many of clear enunciation on a low sound, and that such a pitched note is sure to lie below the best average reading tones of most voices. However, to pass on, Mr. Griffith proceeds to the brief consideration of "Preces and Responses," sticking firmly to his belief in E as the true reciting note. Next he turns to chanting and it will only be necessary to quote a few observations on this well-worn but difficult subject. He reasonably protests against certain defects of the Anglican Chant:—

"Here our people are often compelled to stand as listeners, simply from a too high and exacting recitation note, and the ornate character of the chants selected. Why these and other unnecessary obstacles are deliberately invented by composers is, to me, a mystery. Even in our cathedrals it is often painful to listen to the boys when chanting upon a high recitation note; while there is absolutely no good musical purpose served by it. In the first five or six ages of the Church the singing in religious worship consisted mainly of chants, sung either in unison or in octaves. It was not sufficient, however, to express all that was deemed necessary to be sung; and we find Gregory, in the year 590, uttering his protest against the light music which was creeping into the Church. He endeavoured to meet the need of the people by arranging music, the main characteristics of which should be simplicity and gravity. If our Church composers, with all the resources of more modern harmony, had, in some degree followed in the spirit and devotional character of these old melodies or Tones, and not introduced the flimsy, florid, and secular style which is too often met with in Anglicans, our congregations would, as in the sixth century, be now singing both Psalms and Canticles. Immediately, however, the sensuous appetite for prettiness was pandered to, the solemn, stately chant was laid aside; and, as a natural consequence, silence reigned among the people. I have no desire or intention to advocate the exclusive use of Gregorian chants, although, I confess, they have the great charm of reverence and devotion, when sung (as they always should be) in unison and appropriately accompanied. I know full well what divisions and heartburnings have been caused in many parishes by the abrupt introduction of this more severe form of chant, when the gradual use of a simple, melodious, and solid Angelican might have prepared both choir and people for a beneficial change. It cannot > well be expected in these musical times that a limited range of eight tones—even with a variety of endings introduced from the Continental schools—would meet the requirements of our 150 Psalms and Canticles. Even in many churches where Gregorian chants are used to Psalms and Canticles, the irreverent gabbling of choirs at the utmost possible speed—often at variance with the organ—effectually destroys all attempts of the congregation to join in the chanting."

Of course the silly story of "Saul" throwing his javelin at David turns up at this point; lecturers and speakers on Church music like other mortals have their little jokes. With regard to Psalms, Mr. Griffith observes :—

> "It seems quite clear to my mind that congregations generally, will never take any effective part in chanting the Psalms till every verse, word, and syllable, be printed under their corresponding notes. By this arrangement, all the present difficulties (very numerous) of 'pointing' would be got rid of and freedom from the rigid form of Angelicans obtained.
>
> "On nine occasions and in various places, including five churches (town and country), my musical illustrations were sung by the people antiphonally with choir, in an effective manner, and with evident interest and enthusiasm. This, let me add, was done without any opportunity for previous rehearsal, and often bore favourable comparison with the well-practised choir. I do not think, however, that such satisfactory results could have been reasonably expected, if each member of the congregation or audience had not been supplied with all the music; or, indeed, if such music had not been written with the special object of giving confidence to many, probably, who for the first time heard their own voices in God's temple. We need to restore music to its original connection with the Psalms, and to acknowledge it, here as elsewhere, the natural expression of our deeper and united emotions. Our incomparable Liturgy demands more than a half-audible murmur from a fourth part of the congregation; but not until deep and earnest thought is given to the music and responses, and these are placed in the hands of regular members of congregations, will this murmur burst into the full, fearless, loud voice of praise and thanksgiving. Why the uninspired hymn-book (often a source of dissension) should receive so much more attention than the inspired Psalter is, to me, perfectly astounding. Briefly, then, let me venture to suggest the following course in any first attempt with congregations :—1. Use only the best single chants, very easy, and of moderate compass in recitation and melody. 2. Sing in unison (choir and people) for a few weeks; and for the first effort at antiphonal chanting with choir and people begin with 'Venite,' 'Benedictus,' or evening Canticles. This, of course, after due notice to the people of what will be expected from them. 3. Use the 'pointing' you have been accustomed to, and do not change till you see good reason for doing so."

Next, Mr. Griffith considers the Canticle question. Of course, he can be nothing unless he is simply congregational, however, let us read one or two of his observations :—

> "Nothing can justify the prevailing practice in our churches of singing the Canticles to elaborate and anthem-like music called 'Services.' These Canticles are the property of the congregation, and should never be used for select performances by the choir. If the congregation cannot be supplied with some of the best and simplest compositions for unison singing, suitable chants should be used. Fortunately, the 'Venite' has not yet been set as a 'Service,' and may it never be. The late Dean Burgon, on this and similar matters affecting the services in our churches was very severe. In a letter to me he 'deplored the prevailing disposition to imitate a cathedral service in an ordinary parish church; it was a grave mistake.' Another correspondent says he has succeeded in obtaining antiphonal chanting with choir and congregation in three churches by the use of such music as before mentioned, and he finds this practice to conduce towards greater attention and enthusiasm in the service of praise.
>
> "Truly, our Church Liturgy, 'if thus illustrated and made real, would lead us as one family of believers to the sanctuary.' What must then be the responsibility resting upon those who, by encouraging artistic performances in the choir, deny to the people the grand and glorious privilege of joining in the great hymn of triumphant praise, the "Te Deum;" or, indeed, any of the Canticles? If, as I have before stated, it is possible, by a judicious choice and arrangement of the music to get congregations to sing simple and expressive settings of the 'Te Deum' and other Canticles antiphonally, why deny them the privilege? Few persons in any church could fail to follow or sing such simple music as given above. It is the full-voiced congregation which gives meaning to our worship as one family; 'such the Church might be, such its Liturgy designs it should be."

There is something to be said against this conscious or unconscious Puritanism. The Canticles cannot be duly expressed in congregational music; the people with increasing musical taste will not now consent to service music being confined to cathedral precincts; again, on the ground of artistic humility being a virtue, like every form of humility, the people should be taught to listen and learn, as well as to assist at the proper times; and our choirs must be encouraged to use their "best" as well as their weaker methods of performance to the "praise and glory of God." The quotation of Dean Burgon's opinion is not altogether a happy stroke of policy. However, more need not be said on this topic. Possibly Mr. Griffith will offer more matter for quotation and consideration in Church Bells of next week.

(To be continued.)

THE POSITION OF THE CHURCH ORGAN.

Some curious evidence lately came to light regarding the position of the organ in ancient times in a famous English Abbey :—

Some excavations have recently been made at Fountains Abbey, and Mr. St. John Hope, of the Antiquarian Society, has made some interesting discoveries. A party of about one hundred and fifty archæologists met at Fountains to hear a statement by Mr. St. John Hope and to examine the ruins. Mr. St. John Hope stated that the excavations which had been begun were to be continued, and he described the results so far attained. It was not easy, he said, to discover the original disposition of the church. The popular idea was that when in mediæval times people built a church like that they intended to have a grand view from end to end; but that was an erroneous opinion. That style of building was adopted because it was the easiest, and the erection having been completed it was cut up by screens. There was no documentary evidence to show how the house at Fountains was divided, but the original limits of the church were different from what they were now. It was, he thought, difficult to say whether the nave and the aisles showed their original setting out. There were indications that the Cistercians generally completed the plan of a church before going on with the other portions of the structure. The choir originally, like most Cistercian choirs, was flanked on either side by three chapels, projecting eastwards from the transept. The old choir must have been very dark, because there was only room for a narrow window on either side. There was ample proof of walls dividing the church from end to end, and in some of the Cistercian abbeys they were even more marked than at Fountains. There were strong indications of an organ having been erected at the west end, and against the west end of the choir there was a solid stone screen, with a sort of music gallery at the top. He had found imbedded in the walls 24 earthenware pots, and he said the theory had been advanced that they were intended to augment the sound of the music. He had come to the conclusion that the central tower collapsed at an early date; it had fallen just before the suppression of the house. The great tower was one of the most imposing in the North of England. The Norman part of the choir was utterly gone. Behind the altar and underneath the perpendicular window were the nine altars against the east wall.

SPEÇIFICATIONS.

A large three manual organ has just been erected for the Rev. Charles Voysey, in his Church, Swallow Street, Piccadilly, containing the following .

Great Organ.

1	Open Diapason (large)	8 ft.
2	Open Diapason (small), groved to No. 3	8 ft.
3	Hohl Flute	8 ft.
4	Gamba	8 ft.
5	Principal	4 ft.
6	Flageolet	2 ft.

Swell Organ.

7	Double Diapason	16 ft.
8	Open Diapason	8 ft.
9	Bell Gamba	8 ft.
10	Stop'd Diapason.	8 ft.
11	Dulciana, grooved to No. 10	8 ft.
12	Voix Celestes	8 ft.
13	Principal	4 ft.
14	Piccolo	2 ft.
15	Mixture	various
16	Cornopeon	8 ft.
17	Oboe	8 ft.
18	Tremulant.

Choir Organ.

19	Salcional	8 ft.
20	Lieblich Gedacht	8 ft.
21	Viol d'Armour, grooved to No. 20	8 ft.
22	Flute Harmonique	4 ft.
23	Corno di Bassetto	8 ft.

Pedal Organ.

24	Open Diapason	16 ft.
25	Bourdon	16 ft.
26	Violoncello	8 ft.

Couplers.

27 Swell to Great (unison).
28 Swell to Great (super octave).
29 Swell to Choir.
30 Choir to Great.
31 Swell to Pedals.
32 Great to Pedals.
33 Choir to Pedals.

5 Composition Pedals:
2 to Great, 3 to Swell.

This Organ has been built by Mr. Henry Fincham, of 150, Euston Road, under the direction of Mr. E. R. Terry, Organist of the Church.

RECITAL NEWS.

The famous Bow and Bromley Institute weekly recitals re-open this evening, Saturday, September 29, when Mr. W. Stevenson Hoyte will be the organist, and Mr. Barrington Foote the vocalist. Lovers of high class organ music and the public at large will, it is to be hoped, support these most deserving and admirable performances, which have done so much to popularise organ music in our midst.

BATH.—An organ recital, on the occasion of the visit of the British Association, by the eminent organist, Mr. Minton Pyne, of St. Mark's Cathedral, Philadelphia. in the Abbey where his father has so long been a familiar figure, drew together a large assembly. The programme included some of the greatest masterpieces of organ music. No. 6, of Mendelssohn's wonderful Sonatas, the same composer's "Cornelius" March a Prelude, a Fugue in D major of Bach's, an Andante of Handel, and an Adagio of Beethoven, were in excellent style.

LIVERPOOL.—A recital was given by Mr. W. T. Best at St. George's Hall, on September 15. The programme included: March (in the Dorian Mode), Guilmant; Cantiléne Pastorale, Jules Grison; Organ Concerto, in B flat major, No. 7, Handel; Air, "Giusto Ciel," Rossini; Fugue, in A minor (con moto perpetuo), Bach; Overture, "I promessi sposi," Ponchielli.

BOLTON.—Mr. W. Mullineux, F.C.O. gave a recital in the Albert Hall, on September 15. The programme included: Prelude and Fugue, in C major, Bach; Gavotte, in B flat, Klaus; Communion for the Organ, Grison; Organ Concerto, in D minor, No. 1, arranged by Mr. W. T. Best, Handel; Elevation for the Organ, in A flat, Guilmant; March Romaine, Gounod.

CONSTANTINE.—The new organ of the parish church of Constantine, which lies about mid-way between Helston and Falmouth, was recently opened. The congregations at both the afternoon and evening services were very large, several clergymen from the neighbourhood being present. The instrument was built by Messrs. Hele and Company, of Plymouth, and contains a rich collection of stops. It cost about £250, and sustains the reputation of the firm. Mr. Edward Quintrel presided at the organ during the day. At three o'clock the instrument was formally dedicated by the Rev. T. S. Carnsew (vicar), the ceremony being followed by a full choral evensong.

PARISH CHURCH, WYCOMBE.—An organ recital was given by Mr. J. G. Wrigley, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.C.O. on September 24. Programme: Toccata et Fuga, D minor, J. S. Bach; Andante in G major, S. S. Wesley; Romanzo in E flat (Sinfonie, La Reine de France), Haydn; Prelude "The last sleep of the Virgin," Massenet; Overture in F minor, Morandi; Intermezzo, Macbeth; "The Lost Chord," Sullivan; Wedding March, Mendelssohn.

NOTES.

Dr. Scholz in his "dreaming" observations lately discussed in Germany, aptly illustrates, in his own experience, the lasting power of organ music in its hold on the imagination. He says:—"After excessive bodily fatigue and a day of mental strain, of a not disagreeable kind, I betook myself to bed after I had wound up my watch and placed it on the night-table. Then I lay down beside a burning lamp. Soon I found myself on the high sea on board a well-known ship. I was again young, and stood on the look-out. I heard the roar of the water, and golden clouds floated round me. How long I so stood I did not know, but it seemed a very long time. Then the scene changed. I was in the country, and my long-dead parents came to greet me; they took me to church, where the loud organ sounded. I was delighted, but at the same time wondered to see my wife and children there. The priest mounted the pulpit and preached, but I could not understand what he said for the sound of the organ, which continued to play."

The newly-built Montpellier theatre is remarkable for a very fine organ, built by Merklin and Co., and possessing a duplicate keyboard playable, by means of electric connexions, from the orchestra. The plan is said to work admirably.

The King of Sweden, in a paper on Swedish music, notes the name of Philip Johnsen, probably originally Johnson, who was born in England in 1717. He arrived in Stockholm in 1743. where he remained to his death (1779). He was Court organist and conductor at the French theatre. He was an excellent contrapuntist and organ player, especially in rendering difficult fugues. During 1771—72 he held the post of Librarian at the Royal Academy of Music, Stockholm.

The Nantwich Choral Association, now affiliating with the Chester Diocesan Choral Association, lately held a festival at Nantwich Parish Church.

Canon Knox Little preached at St. Paul's Church, Burton-on-Trent, on the occasion of the re-opening of the organ. The instrument has been thoroughly repaired, and two new stops added, by the builder, Mr. Alfred Kirkland, of Holloway Road, London. The work has been done at the cost of Lord Burton.

Mr. J. Welsh Leith (late of Peebles Parish Church) has been appointed organist and choirmaster to the Tron Parish Church, Glasgow.

In speaking of Clifford's Manual on Cathedral Services, first printed in 1663, Mr. J. S. Bumpus, in his excellent papers on the organists and composers of St. Paul's Cathedral, notes the following points of organ use in brief directions for the understanding of that part of the divine service performed on the organ at St. Paul's Cathedral on Sundays, etc.:—In Morning Prayer, voluntary after the Psalms; after the Blessing another voluntary; and a voluntary was played, it seems, as the Clergy proceeded to the Holy Table. In the Evening Prayer, a voluntary was played after the Psalms. In addition to these, the organ was, of course, employed in accompanying the Service music, Anthems, Psalms, etc.

Mr. W. G. Marshall in his book "Through America," has much to say of that misguided people, the Mormons. Of the present temple in Salt Lake City, stated to be a very large building of remarkable acoustic properties, with a roof like an inverted pie-dish, he tells us the musical arrangements include a large organ built by an English Mormon named Ridges, and containing 2,000 pipes. The tabernacle porter, an Englishman who had been living there for many years, was a sort of assistant organist. He was formerly a French horn player in the Crystal Palace and Drury Lane Theatre orchestras. There is, it seems, a smaller and more comfortable tabernacle for winter; and in this there is a good sized organ which cost £990 9s. 8d. Mr. Marshall heard a concert in the tabernacle at which the instrumental pieces for band and organ were selection "Girofle, Girofle," Riviere, Overture "Semiramide," Rossini, and "Pastoral Symphony," Handel. There was also an organ solo by the tabernacle organist. The music included vocal selections from Oratorios and Operas, and appropriately terminated with Handel's Chorus, "All we, like sheep, have gone astray." The traveller describes the performance as very indifferent, even the playing of the organist, J. J. Danes. The conductor, George Careless, was "judging his power as by the performances of his pupils, very well named."

A distinguished musician visiting England, has recently expressed himself as greatly impressed by our Church music and by some of our choirs. He also considers our organists to be in the very front rank if not the best set of organ-players to be found, as regards technical skill and in the varied treatment of the instrument.

The Sunday afternoon oratorio services at St. Nicholas-Cole-Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, were resumed on September 23, on the occasion of the Harvest and Dedication festival. Weber's "Jubilee," or "Harvest" Cantata, with other music, was sung at 3.45 p.m.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' CALENDAR.

The Library will be open on Tuesday next from 7 to 9. Further arrangements will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Secretary.

85, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury.

MADAME OSCAR POLLACK.

Madame Oscar Pollack, the subject of our present sketch, has a reputation as a vocalist by no means confi
Birmingham, the city of her adoption. As Mélanie Kuschel she achieved success in Germany and Hungary, where sł known as a contralto of much culture and skill. She was born in Graz (Styria), in which town she received her first m education from Madame Tipka Weinlich, a teacher celebrated in Styria, and the wife of Kapellmeister Weinlich.

Madame Pollack afterwards completed her musical studies at Dresden, under the well-known professor, Fre Baumfelder.

PROFESSOR SIR GEORGE ALEXANDER MACFARREN:

His Life and Work.

A Paper Read before the College of Organists by Henry C. Banister.

More than fifty years since, a violoncellist who was distinguished for his discernment of, and desire to encourage rising talent, gave to a young composer who, though making his mark, was still little known, and quite in the struggling stage, a commission to write some small works for the violoncello, with pianoforte accompaniment. The means of the violoncellist were but limited, and the honorarium was, probably, of no great amount; though, I feel sure, the principle was acted on that "the labourer is worthy of his hire." But it was the young composer's first commission; and right proudly did he go home that day at having a commission at all, to write anything, at any terms. The works produced were twelve Ariettes and three Rondos, very fresh and charming, but little known. It was, from the business point of view, the commencement of a long, honourable, and, though chequered and marked by many a disappointment which had to be patiently borne, an eminently successful career as a composer. He looked back to it, and referred to it with grateful recollections of the timely recognition, and kindly-held-out helping hand. The appreciative violoncellist passed away forty years ago; the young composer lived on, with recognition of his powers gr accorded to him, and was increasingly honoured and acknow not only by his own countrymen, but wherever music is throughout the world. But he also has passed away, full of and by a pleasant, though melancholy coincidence—by qu reverse of what is sometimes termed "the irony of events"— of that violoncellist has been honoured with the commission the first publicly-spoken tribute to the memory of him wh father was one of the first to recognise. The violoncelli Henry Joshua Banister, remembered by very few here, but r bered with respect and honour. The composer was Alexander Macfarren. The tribute offered, with great diffi this evening, is offered with a desire to be in sympath the old injunction: "Thine own friend, and thy f friend, forsake not," or, as we may well and justifiably a it, forget not. For he, to whom my father was a frienc a friend to me all along his professional course; and it is pe grateful to me that the Council of the College of Organists, t quite unacquainted with these circumstances, has entrusted this task, one of the greatest professional honours ever con upon me. My recollections of the musician whom we deli honour extend over the whole of the period to which I have all
I remember those early visits to my father's house. I rememb own early visits to Mr. Macfarren when he resided near Be Square, and I went to him for a volume or two of Dussek's So which he kindly lent to me, as a boy, and which I revelled in. I remember his calling at my father's house, about the same period, or soon afterwards, where a quartet party were playing; and how my father said, "I wish we had one of your quartets here," whereupon, Macfarren trudged back to his lodging, the instrumentalists, in the meantime, enquiring of my father, "Who is he?", although at that time it must certainly be averred that not to know him was to confess themselves unknown. And there the Quartet (in A minor, I think) was tried, with interest, I fully believe; with some discomfiture, I also recollect. Moreover, that very call was to thank my father for help rendered at one of a series of concerts given at the Princess's Concert Room by Messrs. G. A. Macfarren and J. W. Davison, the eminent musical critic, at which concerts most of the music was by the two concert-givers; although one of the works performed was Beethoven's Posthumous Quartet in C sharp minor, led by Ernst, and at one or more of which the boy, Joseph Joachim, played, Mendelssohn being present; and the set of six songs dedicated by Mendelssohn to Miss Dolby were sung, alternately by herself and Miss Marshall, and I sat by Dr. Alfred Day, whose theory of harmony Macfarren espoused; and I thought it very odd that he said he did not like Beethoven's quartet. I remember, also, reading a paragraph by Mr. Davison about Macfarren's solid powers, prophesying that the day would come when his dictum would be universally acknowledged as authoritative; and I looked out for that day, and I witnessed its advent. Much else do I remember of that stainless artistic career, and of generous personal appreciation and kindness. And as these memories crowd upon me, my only fear is that I may be led into some personal references which may lay me open to the charge of egotism. But, if so, as they will all tend to illustrate the simple, open-hearted, generous artistic character which is my theme for the evening, I must run that risk. You have not asked me to read up a subject for the lecture; but to speak of a man I have known, known long, and known well; and I will do it, reverently and gratefully.

And now, how little will it avail for me to recount the facts and dates of Macfarren's life, such as are readily accessible, in the ordinary summaries of such information. But, to give completeness to my sketch, and as the necessary prelude to such remarks as I shall make upon his characteristics, and upon the lessons to be learnt from his career, I must just briefly summarise those facts; supplementing such as may be easily known by a few that are not quite such common property.

He was the son of George Macfarren, dramatic writer and manager, whom I remember as a blind gentleman, but it is gratifying to record that, by oculistic treatment, he recovered the enjoyment of his sight for the last two or three years of his life. He was for a time editor of the Musical World, at the time when my father wrote, in its pages, a series of letters entitled "Domestic Music for the wealthy." Some years ago, while the Musical World was under the editorship of James William Davison, an interesting account appeared in its pages of George Macfarren, senior, from the pen of his eminent son. He was for a time manager of the Queen's Theatre, Tottenham Street, now in the hands of the Salvation Army, and brought out Handel's Acis and Galatea, on the stage, with additional accompaniments by Cipriani Potter. He was a man of prompt vigour and of considerable literary attainments, and wrote the libretti for several of his son's operas and other works.

George Alexander Macfarren was born in London in 1813, March 2, and commenced the regular study of music when about 14 years of age, under Charles Lucas, well-known and remembered as an excellent violoncellist, a solid composer, a versatile musician, and an efficient conductor. In 1829, Macfarren entered the Royal Academy of Music. Composition was his principal study; but he also practised the pianoforte under Cipriani Potter, and the trombone, which latter instrument, I believe, he used to play at the orchestral practices which have all along been so valuable a feature in the educational training of the Royal Academy. Either at this same period, or later on, he also made some practical acquaintance with clarionet playing, and, in after years, wrote an instruction book for that instrument. He also wrote a little instruction book for the pianoforte, entitled "Little Clarina's first lesson-book," in the quaintly chatty diction which not unfrequently characterised his conversational lesson-giving. To return, however, to our narrative: he was highly distinguished as an Academy student, and, in 1834, was appointed a professor of harmony in the Institution. I had better pursue the subject of that professorship at once, especially as mis-statements respecting it have appeared in a popular Encyclopædia. In the year 1838, his previously formed acquaintance with Dr. Alfred Day, homeopathic physician, "ripened into closest intimacy" (to quote his own words), and certain novel theories about harmony which Dr. Day had evolved and elucidated were then propounded to him. They were so opposed, however, to all that he had previously learnt, that he "combated" them, "point by point," but, as he confesses, every one of his own opposing arguments "fell under the convincing weight of Dr. Day's novel principles" The newly propounded principles took possession of his mind, and, from conviction of their truth, he began to teach them to his pupils. But the profession were soon up in arms against the innovation. A non-professional official of the Royal Academy one day found Macfarren using, with his class, a book other than that then authorised, and exclaimed, "Halloa! what is that book? We can't have any new-fangled notions here." Mischief was made, a round-table conference was held, at which Cipriani Potter as Principal, Sterndale Bennett, and three others, discussed the new theories with Macfarren. Neither side knew when it was beaten: Englishmen do not. But Macfarren, though personally convinced that he was victorious, knew that those whom he considered his vanquished opponents out-numbered him; though, as he believed, they did not outwit him; and, with that tough independence which always characterised him, he resigned his professorship, rather than teach contrary to his convictions. This was about the year 1843. Within a very few years, however, better counsels prevailed; not the acceptance of Day's theory, but the wise persuasion that it was better to have a musician of unquestioned competence and power teaching that which he believed from his own outthinking, than that any old traditions should be so stereotyped in an educational system or curriculum as to bar all free-thought, and alienate from the Institution one whose worth was so fully recognised. Macfarren resumed his professorial work in the Royal Academy at the instance of Cipriani Potter, his own old teacher, who said to him, "Come back, and teach anything you please." This, substantially, and I believe literally, is the history of the case, details of which have, at different times, been told me by Cipriani Potter, my teacher, as well as Macfarren's and Bennett's, and by Macfarren himself. In the year 1860 he published his "Rudiments of Harmony," in which the Day theory, with some modifications, was set forth, in somewhat more practical fashion than in Day's own book. I shall have to recur to this theoretical matter later on.

I again recur to his earliest years. In the year 1834, Macfarren's Symphony in F minor was produced by that highly useful body, long defunct, the Society of British Musicians. An arrangement of this Symphony as a Pianoforte Duet was published.

In 1836, Drury Lane Theatre was under the management of Alfred Bunn, the musical arrangements being under the direction of Tom Cooke. A piece by Planché, entitled Chevy Chase, was to be produced on Easter Monday. Music was required in it; and Tom Cooke, the responsible conductor, composer, and arranger for the theatre, asked Macfarren, only the previous week, to write some, adding that, if he would write an Overture as well as incidental music, his name should appear in the bill. Time was very short, but, desirous of publicity, Macfarren undertook the task, and wrote a Hunting Chorus, and a Chorus of Nuns: perhaps some other vocal music.

(To be continued.)

SCHUBERT'S REMAINS.

As a necessary sequel to the exhumation and removal from the Währing Cemetery to the Central Cemetery at Vienna of Beethoven's remains, which took place last May, the remains of Franz Schubert were on Saturday last taken from their quiet resting-place, to be re-interred in a more pompous tomb. That the ceremony, which was, perhaps, an inevitable if regrettable proceeding, should not be the occasion of such shameful scenes as occurred in the case of Beethoven, as few persons as possible were allowed to attend. A few of the surviving relatives of the dead composer, the "Manner-gesang-verein" of Vienna, a few musicians, and a few journalists and scientists were the only witnesses of the ceremony. The tombstone was removed, and a vault eight or nine feet in depth was disclosed, at the bottom of which lay a rusty metal coffin, which was raised and carried to the Mortuary Chapel. On opening it, it was found that the skeleton had fallen into pieces, though the skull was better preserved than was that of Beethoven. These remains, after some measurements of the skull had been taken by Professor Toldt, were placed in the new sarcophagus and left in the mortuary for the night.

At eight o'clock on Sunday morning the first funeral service was held, at which Father Andreas Schubert, the composer's brother, officiated, and the Währing Liedertafel sang an anthem. Loaded with wreaths, the coffin was carried to the hearse, which was preceded by a number of outriders in old Spanish costume, and followed by a mute, who bore on a crimson cushion a symbolic golden lyre. The procession was met at the Votive Church by the members of thirty-eight musical societies, who, when a halt was made at the Schiller Platz, sang the dead master's own "Die Nacht." The journey was then continued to the Central Cemetery, where a short service was conducted by Bishop Angerer, after which the coffin was deposited in a vault very near to that in which Beethoven is at last permitted to rest—a rest in which Schubert, the weary, toil-worn Schubert, may now have his portion for ever.

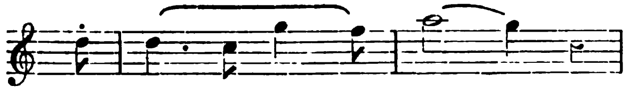
Correspondence.

NEW EDITIONS OF CLASSICAL WORKS.

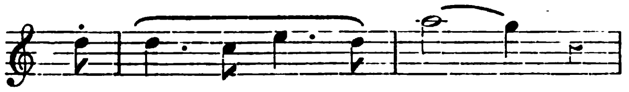
TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL WORLD."

Sir,—New editions of Mozart's and Schumann's Symphonies, edited, I believe, by Herr Brahms and Madame Schumann, have recently been issued by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, of Leipzig. I have not yet had an opportunity of critically examining them, but think it worth while to call attention to one or two important (?) emendations which have been brought to my notice.

I. The passage in Mozart's so-called "Jupiter" Symphony (bars 6—8), which all our lives we have been accustomed to hear played thus :—

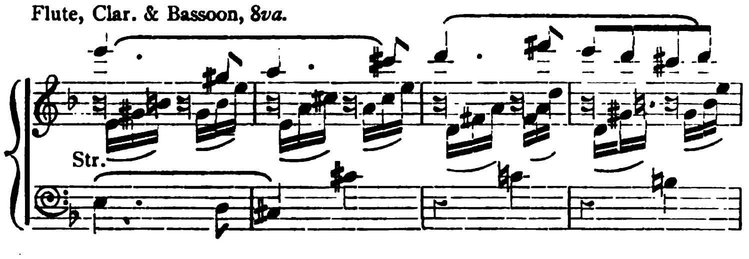


—has been altered to :—



—an emendation which Mr. August Manns has already adopted in performance at the Crystal Palace.

II. In the following passage from Schumann's Symphony in D minor, No. 4, which, omitting second violin and viola parts, stands thus in the original edition of the score :—



—the C natural in the bass of the third bar has been altered to C sharp – an emendation which was adopted by Dr. Richter at one of his last summer's concerts.

In putting forward the alterations quoted above, the editors seem to have been influenced by a desire to maintain a strict uniformity between parallel passages, and to have overlooked the fact that, on the variatio delectat principle, it has generally been the wont of the best composers to aim at variety rather than at uniformity. Unless, therefore, some better and more authoritative reason is forthcoming, should not conductors hesitate before adopting these proposed emendations in performance?

Hoping that some further light will be thrown upon these and other possible discrepancies between the old and new editions of these works,

I am yours truly,

C. A. B.

Sydenham, September 24, 1888.

STUDENTS AS TEACHERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL WORLD."

Sir,—With regard to "L's" letter in your issue of Septen I know nothing of the regulations at the R.A.M. or the G.S. I can assure you and your readers that your correspondent little if anything about those of the R.C.M. I am a schola latter, and I know that no pupil is allowed to give lessons with consent of the Director (Sir George Grove), which consent granted unless the pupil is competent to teach.

I may state that the Director requires the pupils to char which would probably fully satisfy even "L," and which is c much higher than that charged by many "thoroughly cor musicians," if I may judge by the numerous circulars whic been sent to my house, some coming from those who pass a fessionals."

As regards the "inexperienced and often conceited you sons," everyone must have a beginning; and it is to be hop they—the pupil-teachers—will be able to implant in their p greater love for true music, and teach them how to perform greater success than has been the almost universal case up present outside the R.C.M., and no doubt the other two insti —Yours faithfully,

Scho

"LETTERS UPON THE POETRY AND MUSIC OF ITALIAN OPERA."*

LETTER VII. continued.

But to return to the subject; your Lordship will percei between those most violent expressions, and those that are le which this class comprehends, there must be an almost infinite in respect both of kind and degree. I shall, therefore, content with giving your Lordship examples of the principal division and shall begin by that kind which I mentioned before as tak expression, where the aria di mezzo carattere leaves it, and as b this nature, that it might even be sometimes difficult to decide of these classes it belonged to.

Del sen gli ardori
Nessun mi vanti:
Non soffro amori;
Non voglio amanti;
Troppo mi è cara
La libertà.

Let no one boast to me the ardours of his bosom: I suffer not loves adverse to lovers; my liberty is too dear to me.

Se fosse ognuno
Cosi sincero,
Meno importuno
Sarrebbe il vero
Saria pui rara
L' infedeltà.

If every one were as sincere, truth would be less offensive, and infidelit rare.

If the words of this air were put in the mouth of a gay youn thus carefully signifying her insensibility to love and her des liberty, it might with propriety be so composed as to rank wit Airs di mezzo carattere, and well expressed by that pleasing, th unimpassioned, cantileno, which is characteristic of that class. if, on the other hand, we suppose them spoken with a deg earnestness to an importunate lover, in order to get rid of hi must, in that case, certainly be so composed as to belong to the division of the aria parlante.

In the following example no such uncertainty can take place degree of passion, or of interest, at least, expressed by it, referri plainly to this last class: Achilles speaks it, about to leave Deida

Disse che si consoli,
Disse che m' ami e disse,
Che partì fido Achille
Che fido tornerà.

---

* "By the late Mr. John Brown, painter. Edinburgh, 1789."

Tell her to be comforted; tell her to love me; and tell her, that Achilles left her faithful, that faithful he will return.

Che a suoi bei occhi soli
Fia che 'l mio cor si stempre
Che l' idol mio fù sempre
Che l' idol mio sarà.

That her charms alone shall have the sovereignty of my heart; that she ever was, that she ever shall, be my only love.

In order to be as explicit as possible, I shall give your Lordship two other examples from the same piece, which, with regard to the expression, seem nearly equal in degree, though widely different in kind. Deidamia, reproaching Achilles for want of affection, says:

No, ingrato, amor non senti;
O se pur senti amore,
Perder non vuoi del cor
Per me la pace.

No, ungrateful! thou feelest not love; or if, indeed, thou feelest it, thou art not willing, for my sake, to lose the peace of thy bosom.

Amai; se te 'l rammenti,
E puoi senza penar,
Amare e disamar
Quando ti piace.

Perhaps thou lovest; but remember, thou can'st not love, and, without pain, cease to love at pleasure.

The other is put in the mouth of Achilles, on his suspicion of being deprived of his mistress by a rival:

Il volarmi il mio tesoro!
Ah dov' è quest' alma ardita?
A da togliermi la vita
Che vuol togliermi il mio ben.

Rob me of my treasure! Ah, where is this presumptuous soul? He must first take my life who would rob me of my love.

M' avvilisce in queste spoglie
Il poter di due pupille;
Ma lo so ch'io sono Achille,
Ma mi sento Achille in sen.

The power of two bright eyes disgraces me in these weeds; but I know—I feel, that I am Achilles.

Though the general acceleration of speech common to each of these Airs, and which, therefore, brings them under the same class, be, perhaps, nearly equal in both, yet the skilful composer will nicely discriminate, not only between the warlike audacity of Achilles, and the feminine softness of Deidamia, but also between the expression of disappointed affection in the former, and of jealous resentment in the latter.

I beg leave to offer the two following examples also, as approaching, in degree, to the foregoing, though very different in kind; the first partaking somewhat of the tenderness which is characteristic of the cantabile; the second of the dignity which belongs to the portamento.

Parto, non ti sdegnar,
Si madre mia da te;
Gli affetti a moderar
Quest' alma impara.

A DIFFICULT CASE.

There is a certain learned judge who sits in one of the London High Courts of Justice, who says that patent medicines, or what he is pleased to term them, "quack medicines," should never be used except on the advice of a medical man. The judge may be correct as to the large majority of patent medicines, but there are exceptions to this rule. If our readers will carefully follow the history of the case below, we feel quite sure that they will agree with us. The case in question is that of the son of Mr. Thomas Buzzard, of Belton, Uppingham, Rutland, who, in January, 1881, was attacked with rheumatism in the feet, which rapidly extended over the entire body. The family doctor was called in, who diagnosed the case "rheumatic fever," and attended the patient until October, 1882, when he gave the case up as beyond his skill, ordering him to be sent to the Leicester Infirmary, where, at the end of two weeks, he was discharged as incurable. From here he was brought home completely crippled, and very badly deformed, his feet being drawn up to his hips and seemingly firmly fixed. He was perfectly helpless and suffered most intense pain. As a last resource he was placed under the care of a celebrated physician in Leicester, where he remained a long time, but continued to grow worse. Having now been a helpless cripple for over three years, and his case being pronounced incurable by some of the most celebrated medical men in the Midland counties, his parents were persuaded by Mrs. Mary Anne Halls, who lives at Uppingham, to use St. Jacob's Oil; Mrs. Halls relating to them her own case of having been a cripple for years, and being permanently cured by the use of the Oil. A few bottles were purchased, with the result that, after applying the contents, the son was able to get about on crutches. Continuing the use of the Oil, he became perfectly cured, and Mr. Buzzard, writing to the proprietors of St. Jacob's Oil, 45, Farringdon Road, London, under date of March 16, 1888, says that his son now often walks eight miles in a single day, that he is perfectly cured. The case is regarded by himself and wife, as well as neighbours, as a most miraculous cure. From the foregoing it is clearly shown that the preparation in question, although under the ban of a patent medicine, possesses wonderful curative properties, and it being an outward application can do no one any harm. While the learned judge may advise us "not to use patent medicines unless prescribed by a member of the medical profession," there are cases, as the facts above clearly show, where St. Jacob's Oil has accomplished in a very short period, that which the most eminent medical men have vainly tried to accomplish for three years, and then signally failed.

PROVINCIAL.

Glasgow, September 25.

The preliminary prospectus of the Glasgow Choral Union for this season has been published. It is intended to give eleven Subscription concerts—3 choral, seven orchestral, and one chamber. The choral works will include Mr. Hamish MacCunn's new cantata, "The Lay of the Last Minstrel" (written specially for the Glasgow Choral Union), Handel's "Messiah," Sir A. Sullivan's "The Golden Legend," and Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night." Among the artists engaged are Mesdames Nordica, Clara Samuell, Gambogi, and Marion Mackenzie; Messrs. Barton McGuckin, And. Black, George Henschel, Dr. Joseph Joachim, Signor A. Piatti, and Madlle. Janotha, Madame Helen Hopekirk and Miss Fanny Davies. Conductors, Mr. Jos. Bradley and Mr. August Manns.

Mr. H. Cecil Beryl having obtained a lease of the "Grand," has arranged with Mr. Augustus Harris, of Drury Lane fame, to give a season of Italian Opera commencing Monday, October 8. The operas announced are "Don Giovanni," "Faust," "La Traviata," "Le Nozze di Figaro," "Carmen," and "Il Flauto Magico." It is also intended to give a Grand Morning Concert on Saturday, October 13, at St. Andrew's Hall. Among the many artists engaged are—Mesdames Ella Russell, M. Macintyre, K. Rolla, Trebelli, and Bauermeister, Signori Ravelli, Rinaldini, Runcio, D'Andrade, De Anna, Foli, Miranda, and Ciampi. Conductor and musical director, Signor Arditi. It is intended that each opera shall be as well staged as those given at Covent Garden during the past season.

Birmingham, Sept. 24.

Another festival has been added to the list of important musical events in this country, and on Thursday, October 11, 1888, the North Staffordshire Musical Festival will be inaugurated at the Town Hall, Hanley, in the very heart of the famous potteries, for the benefit of the various charities in the locality of Hanley and Burslem. The committee have decided, since the festival is of the nature of an experiment, only to give one morning and one evening performance, and not to attempt any novelties, but to give a well-known and popular oratorio in the morning. "The Elijah" has been decided upon, and in the evening a miscellaneous concert will be given. The Marquis of Stafford has accepted the position of president. Our gifted townsman, Dr. Heap, has been appointed conductor, and will have for his leader Mr. J. T. Carrodus. The principals include Madame Valleria, Mrs. Hutchinson, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Henschel. Mr. W. Sherratt is the organist, and Mr. F. Mountford the chorus master. The band and chorus will number three hundred and sixty. Among the principal items in the miscellaneous concert I may mention a concert overture (first time of performance) by Algernon Ashton, Liszt's Ungarische Rhapsodie, No. 1, in F, and Wagner's march from "Tannhäuser" for chorus and orchestra. In securing the services of Dr. Swinnerton Heap the committee have made a wise choice. Already, as conductor of the Wolverhampton festival, Dr. Heap has won golden opinions, and we may anticipate undoubted success for this new festival venture.

Our musical season was inaugurated on Saturday by the Midland Musical Society's Artisans' Subscription Concert, when the Town Hall was crowded to its extreme limit. The prices for admission are only 3d. and 6d., and the concerts are principally supported by the working classes. The Society itself is an amateur body, and the hon. Conductor, Mr. Stevenson, is an enthusiastic and indefatigable amateur who devotes all his spare time to the training of his chorus, of which he is the very life and soul. Gaul's favourite "Holy City" and Anderton's "John Gilpin" were given with full band, chorus, and organ, with the following principals: soprano, Miss Florence Howle; contralto, Madame Oscar Pollack; tenor, Mr. H. Britton; bass, Mr. R. H. Nicholls; organist, Mr. W. G. Halisley. The choruses were remarkably good, the voices appeared fresh and well balanced, and taken all in all, Saturday's performance was by far the best the Society have yet given. The principals are all local artistes, competent singers, and were well received. M. Gaul, who was present, received quite an ovation at the close of his work. Madame Oscar Pollack created an agreeable impression by her thoroughly artistic rendering of the contralto parts, and Miss Howle who has a pleasant light soprano sang with taste and understanding. Mr. Britton, the tenor, and Mr. Nicholls, the bass, did ample justice to the music, and shared in the applause of the evening. The judicious organ accompaniments of Mr. Halisley must not be omitted. The Birmingham Festival Choral Society's first concert of the 29th concert series will take place at the Town Hall on Thursday, October 18, when Gounod's "Redemption" will be given with the following principals: Madame Dotti, Miss Morley, Mr. Henry Piercy, Mr. Brereton, and Mr. Grice. Organist, Mr. C. W. Perkins, and conductor, Mr. Stockley, as usual.

Concerts.

COVENT GARDEN PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The chief instrumental items on Wednesday were Goetz's delicious Symphony in F; the Allegro from Beethoven's violin concerto, the solo in which was played by Mr. Carrodus; the Overture to "Oberon"; and Miss Dora Bright's Concerto in A, for pianoforte, which we had occasion to praise so warmly when it was heard a couple of months ago at the Royal Academy Concert in St. James' Hall. The gifted young lady, an admirable pianist, was her own interpreter, but the recall with which she was honoured was less enthusiastic than one could have wished. We must not, however, expect an English audience to encourage English Art. Besides, ladies have no business to compose! or indeed to do anything intellectual. Miss Bright was probably recalled for her excellent performance rather than on account of her remarkable talent as a composer. The intelligent public reserved its enthusiasm for Madame Scalchi, Miss Alice Whitacre, Messrs. Carrodus and Edward Lloyd. These being accepted favourites it was safe—nay, the right thing—to applaud them; and applauded they were accordingly, till the rafters rang again. They deserved to be, of course—but then, so did Miss Dora Bright. The Symphony was by no means badly played, though much of its delicate beauty was necessarily obscured by the conditions under which it was heard. Absolute silence is necessary to full enjoyment of such a work; and at the Promenade Concerts absolute silence is out of the question during the performance of a symphony. Yet it is not the "form" of such works which repels, for a concerto is followed with close attention. The explanation is to be sought in the absence of the personal element. The majority are more interested in the performers than in the works themselves. We are convinced that if but one of the orchestra—say the drummer—were placed in front, and described as a soloist, the symphony would soon become a highly popular feature.

TUITION BY CORRESPONDENCE.
Offices—4, MONTGOMERY ST., CARLOW.
ESTABLISHED 1885.
Candidates rapidly prepared for University, Intermediate, Civil Service and other Examinations.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" DEPARTMENT.

STUDENTS and Others wishing to have questions answered on French, German, Latin, Greek, Irish, Spanish or Italian, should send same with a Fee of 1s. each question, or 5s. for six questions.

MATHEMATICAL and SCIENCE QUESTIONS solved for a fee of 6d. each, or 2s. 3d. for six questions.

The Solutions are supplied by a Staff of First Class Graduates, Specialists, etc.

All inquiries and instructions should contain STAMPED ADDRESSED ENVELOPE.

Apply to Secretary, Examination Syndicate,
THE ACADEMY, 4, MONTGOMERY STREET, CARLOW.

PIANOS, PIANOS
Harmoniums, and American Organs,
ON THE THREE YEARS' SYSTEM
Pianos .. .. from 10s. 6d. per month.
Harmoniums .. ,, 5s. 0d. ,,
American Organs ,, 7s. 0d. ,,
Any Instrument sent home on receipt of first Instalment.
OUR UPRIGHT IRON GRAND, Trichord, Double Check Repeater Action, Celeste Pedal, 15s. per month.
This is a thoroughly sound and elegant Instrument, warranted in every respect.
Other Classes equally cheap.
Write for Catalogue to
SHENSTONE, SHENSTONE & CO.,
Steam Works: GRANGE ROAD, LEYTON, E.
Show Rooms: 70, Hackney Rd.; 37, St. Peter's St., Islington; & 29, Kennington Pk. Rd.

ADVANCES
ARRANGED on LIFE POLICIES, REVERSIONS, ANNUITIES, SETTLED INCOMES, and every kind of negotiable SECURITY.
BILLS DISCOUNTED.
W. AUSTIN & CO., BANK CHAMBERS, 44, HAMMERSMITH ROAD, KENSINGTON, W.

THE TRINIDAD
Cocoa and Chocolate Company,
Offices and Show Rooms: 35, Walbrook, London, E.C.
Works: Queen's Road, Battersea London, S.W.
Manufacturers of all kinds of COCOA and CHOCOLATE for the Wholesale and Retail Trades.
PRICE LISTS ON APPLICATION.

ROBINSON & CLEAVERS

LINEN COLLARS, CUFFS, AND SHIRTS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

COLLARS—LADIES' 3-fold, from 3s. 6d. per doz. GENTS' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. to 5s. 11d. per doz.

CUFFS—For Ladies or Gentlemen, 5s. 11d. to 10s. 6d. per doz.

SHIRTS- Best quality Long Cloth, with 4-fold Linen Fronts, 35s. 6d. per half-doz. (To measure, 2s. extra.)

N.B.—OLD SHIRTS made as good as new with best materials in Neckbands, Cuffs, and Fronts, for 14/- the half-doz.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER, BELFAST.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice.

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

Without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s, 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings

FOR

VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP, ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,

Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

Vins de Champagne

ARTHUR ROEDERER, Reims.

MAISON FONDEE 1876.

FRANK W. FOSTER,

Artist and Engraver on Wood,

1, MYATT ROAD, NORTH BRI

ESTABLISHED THREE QUARTERS OF A CENTURY.

A. S. MALLETT, ALLEN & CO.,

CONTRACTORS TO

HER MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE,

Type Music Printers,

LITHOGRAPHERS, &c.

PORTRAITS. (Speciality.)	WINDOW BILLS.	STATIONERY.
POSTERS.	BOOKS.	SHOW CARDS
	CATALOGUES	PLANS, &c., &c.

68 & 70, WARDOUR ST., LONDON, W.

TELEGRAPHIC ADDRESS—"ASMAL, LONDON."

CASSON'S

PATENT

Organ-Building System.

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c., See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart.
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The Late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A.
Mr. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—

CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN COMPANY, LIMITED,

DENBIGH.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Stndio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO.

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had but little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me, or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

To Mr. Ainsworth. BURNHAM-HORNER, F.R. Hist. S.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and Organ student who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music or organ arrangement, with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is, as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours, I. B. THORNTON,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly, HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.
To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilitate the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number), each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS,

BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

Ascherberg Piano Depot,

211, REGENT STREET, W.

To Musicians and Others.

For BUYING, EXCHANGING, or SELLING Books on all subjects, Art Objects, Musical Instruments, Home Pets, Domestic Appliances, or any article whatever of personal property, THE BAZAAR, EXCHANGE and MART is unequalled. It circulates largely throughout the kingdom, and private ladies and Gentlemen have no difficulty in negotiating sales or exchanges without publicity and to the best advantage. Get a copy and judge for yourself. The Globe says:—"Like all grand conceptions, the process is remarkable for its simplicity." Price 2d., at all Newsagents, or copy sent for two stamps from the Office, 170, Strand, London, W.C.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT (REGD).

OETZMANN & CO.,

67, 69, 71, 73, 75, 77 & 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (Near Tottenham Court Road).

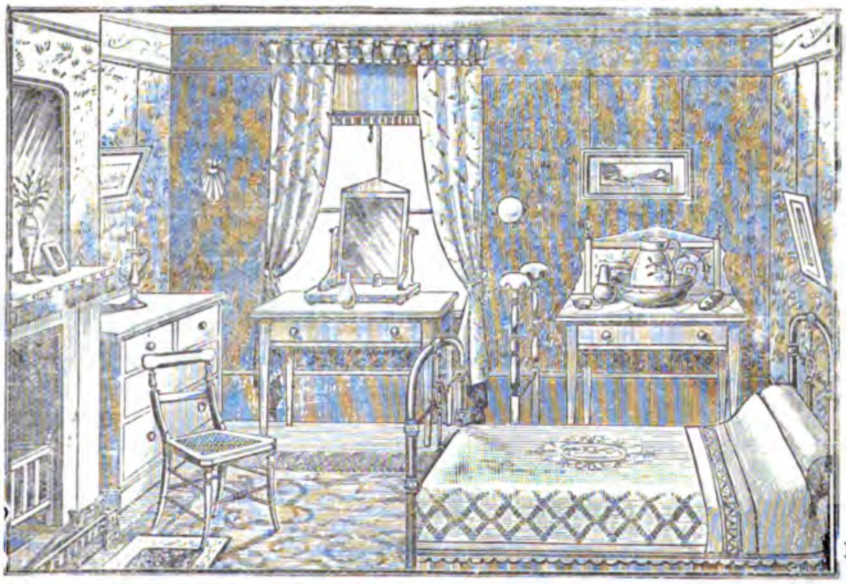
Carpets, Furniture, Bedding, Drapery, Furnishing Ironmongery, China, Glass, &c.

Orders per Post receive prompt and faithful attention.

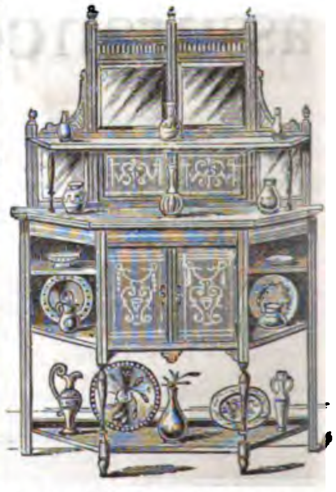
INEXPENSIVE ART TAPESTRY CURTAINS.

The BURMESE. 7s. 6d. per pair, in all colours.

The IMPERIAL. 38s. 6d. per pair, in all shades.



BEDROOM FURNISHED COMPLETE FOR FIVE GUINEAS.



EBONISED CABINET.

Four bevelled silvered plates at back, 4 feet wide.

75s.

Consisting of Chest of Drawers, Toilet Table, Washstand with marble Top and tiled back, Toilet Glass, Towel Airer, in plain art colours or in imitation of various woods, Strong Iron French Bedstead, Palliasse, Top Mattress, Bolster, Pillow, Toilet Set, Water Bottle and Tumbler, Fender, Fire Irons, Carpet (9 ft. by 6 ft.), & Rug. Five Guineas complete.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, THE BEST PUBLISHING GUIDE EXTANT POST FREE.

Printed by A. S. MALLETT, ALLEN & Co, 68—70, Wardour Street, W., and Published by WILLIAM PEARCE, at 138a, Strand, W.C.

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1836.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 67.—NO. 41. SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1888. PRICE {3d. Unstamped. 4d. Post Free.

THE
KARN AMERICAN ORGANS

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,
WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs, equal to, if not surpassing all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

New Illustrated Catalogue and Price Lists Free of the
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:
THE SCHREIBER PIANO COMPANY,
3, NEWMAN MANSIONS, NEWMAN ST., LONDON, W.

The Musical World
IS ON SALE AT THE
PROMENADE CONCERTS, COVENT GARDEN.

METZLER & CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Rose Queen Waltz,

Composed by A. G. CROWE.

Performed every evening at Freeman Thomas' Promenade Concerts, Covent Garden. Piano Solo (beautifully illustrated), 2s. net. Vocal Part 2d. Tonic-Sol-fa, 2d. Full Orchestra, 2s. net. Small Orchestra, 1s. 4d. net.

Also performed at Freeman Thomas' Promenade Concerts, Covent Garden, with great success:—

KITCHEN LANCERS. By EDWARD RAYNER. Specially Illustrated by E. J. WHEELER, ESQ. 2s. net.

WHITE MOUSIE QUADRILLE. By WARWICK WILLIAMS. Beautifully Illustrated 2s. net.

KETTLE-DRUM POLKA. By A. SKRIMSHIRE. Beautifully Illustrated. 2s net.

MARITA WALTZ. By E. H. PROUT. Beautifully Illustrated. 2s. net.

ORCHESTRAL PARTS NOW READY.

METZLER'S RED ALBUM.

Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are now ready.

In handsome cover specially illustrated for this new series by E. J. WHEELER, Esq.

Price One Shilling

METZLER & CO., 42, GREAT MARLBOROUGH ST., LONDON, W.

Special Notices.

SIXTH TRIENNIAL

BRISTOL MUSICAL FESTIVAL,

Colston Hall.

TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, FRIDAY,
OCTOBER, 16, 17, 18, 19, 1888.

TUESDAY MORNING:—ELIJAH (Mendelssohn).

TUESDAY EVENING:—IPHIGENIA IN TAURIS, Act 1, Soli and Chorus (Gluck); Festival Overture in C, Op. 124 (Beethoven); Concerto, Pianoforte and Orchestra, in A minor (Schumann); Two Légendes, Nos. 9 and 10, from Op. 55 (Dvorak); Overture, Ruy Blas (Mendelssohn); and Vocal Selections.

WEDNESDAY MORNING:—FOURTH MASS, IN C MAJOR (Cherubini); THE ROSE OF SHARON (Mackenzie).

WEDNESDAY EVENING:—ROMEO AND JULIET, Dramatic Symphony, Soli and Chorus (Berlioz); Overture, Euryanthe (Weber); Ballet Music, from Polycuete: a Pan, b Bellona, c Venus, d Bacchus (Gounod); Huldigung's March (Wagner); and Vocal Selections, etc.

THURSDAY MORNING:—THE GOLDEN LEGEND (Sullivan); FIRST WALPURGIS-NIGHT (Mendelssohn),.

THURSDAY EVENING:—GRAND EVENING CONCERT— including: Pastoral Symphony (Beethoven); Traume (Study for Orchestra) (Wagner); Introduction and Closing Scene from Tristan and Isolde (Wagner); Lustspiel Overture (Smetana); Orchestral Suite, in D (Dvorak); and Vocal Selections, etc.

FRIDAY MORNING.—MESSIAH (Handel).

Principal Vocalists:

Madame ALBANI, Miss ANNA WILLIAMS, Madame PATEY, Madame TREBELLI, Madame BELLE COLE,
Mr. CHARLES BANKS, Mr. EDWARD LLOYD, Mr. WATKIN MILLS,
Mr. MONTAGUE WORLOCK. Mr. SANTLEY.
CHORUS: THE MEMBERS OF THE BRISTOL FESTIVAL CHOIR.
CHORUS MASTER: Mr. D. W. ROOTHAM.
ORGANIST: Mr. GEORGE RISELEY.
Conductor......Sir Charles Hallé.

PRICES OF ADMISSION, MORNING AND EVENING:—

	Secured Seats.		Unsecured.
	First Division.	Second Division.
Single Tickets for any one Concert	0 15 0	0 10 6	0 7
Four Tickets for any one Concert if applied for before October 8th	2 10 0	1 16 0	1 4 0
Single Seat for all Seven Performances	4 4 0	3 3 6	2 2 0

Tickets, Programmes, &c., at the Ticket Office, Colston Hall, Bristol. Cheques, etc., payable to SIR GEORGE W. EDWARDS, Treasurer. HENRY COOKE, Hon. Sec.

SATURDAY CONCERTS, CRYSTAL PALACE.—The 33rd Annual Series of the World-renowned Saturday Concerts will COMMENCE THIS DAY, SATURDAY, October 13, at 3. Vocalist, Mdlle. Elvira Gambogi. Pianoforte, Mr. Fritz Hartvigson. Conductor, Mr. August Manns,

SATURDAY CONCERTS, CRYSTAL PALACE.—The Programme THIS DAY, SATURDAY October 13, at 3, will include Overture to "The Magic Flute" (Mozart), Symphony No. 1 in C (Beethoven), Air des Bijoux "Faust" (Gounod), Concerto for pianoforte and Orchestra No. 1 in E flat (Liszt), Concerto Overture "The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow" (Hamish MacCunn), Aria "Si t'amo" (Muzio Scevoia) (Handel), and Rhapsodie "Espana" (Chabrier), first time in England,

SATURDAY CONCERTS.—CRYSTAL PALACE.—Tickets for numbered stalls (transferable) for the 20 concerts, two guineas. Full particulars on application to the manager, Crystal Palace, S.E. Numbered stall for a single concert, half-a-crown; unnumbered seats, 6d. and 1s.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SATURDAY CONCERT.—Oct. 20, at 3 o'clock.—Vocalist, Madame Valleria; Violinist, M. Johannes Wolff.—The Programme will include Overture to "Preciosa" (Weber); Symphony No. 2, in E flat (Goldmark); Concerto for Violin and Orchestra (Godard; "Tannhauser's Pilgrimage" (Wagner); and Incidental Music to "The Merchant of Venice" (Sullivan).—Seats, 6d. to 2s. 6d. Admission to Palace, 2s. 6d. before 5, 1s. after.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, or £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the Manager of THE MUSICAL WORLD, 138a, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, HAMILTON TERRACE,
ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N. W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.,
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, FINSBURY PARK VILLAS,
GREEN LANES, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI,
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor).
12, WESTBOURNE PARK TERRACE, W.

Mr. F. ST. JOHN LACY,
(Professor of Singing. Composer, and Vocalist (Baritone),
FITZROY MANSION, CHARLOTTE STREET,
FITZROY SQUARE, W.

Mr. H. MARTIN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor)
Address—7, WIMPOLE STREET,
CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.

Mr. LOUIS N. PARKER, A.R.A.M.
(Composer, Conductor, Lecturer),
SHERBORNE, DORSET.

Mr. G. W. L. MARSHALL-HALL
Gives Lessons in Composition and Dramatic Singing,
151, RUCKLIDGE AVENUE,
WILLESDEN JUNCTION, N.W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts)
BOSWORTH HOUSE, HUSBAND'S BOSWORTH,
RUGBY.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o NOLAN & JACKSON.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorio),
41, WELBECK STREET,
CAVENDISH SQUARE, W

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, PORTSDOWN ROAD, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concerts and Oratorio),
29, ALBANY STREET, REGENT'S PARK, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio)
2, SEDGMOOR VILLAS,
Private Lessons given. CAMBERWELL, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
(Ballad, Oratorio, etc.)
31, MONMOUTH ROAD,
BAYSWATER, LONDON, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, NORFOLK SQUARE, HYDE PARK, W.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts),
56, DUCHESS ROAD,
EDGBASTON, BIRMINGHAM.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 36, ALBION PLACE, HYDE PARK W.; or to Mr. N. VERT, 6, CORK STREET, W.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. ALFRED MOUL,
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.,
Or, 270, ELGIN AVENUE, MAIDA VALE, W.

Mr. IVER McKAY
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concerts),
1, MILNER SQUARE,
LONDON, N.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio),
OLD TRAFFORD, MANCHESTER.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio),
28, DEVONSHIRE STREET, ISLINGTON, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
GOTHIC LODGE,
LORDSHIP LANE, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, ST. STEPHEN'S AFENUE,
SHEPHERD'S BUSH, W.

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
40, STANLEY GARDENS,
BELSIZE PARK, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
VILLA D'ESTE,
LAKE COMO, ITALY.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, UPPER MOUNT STREET, DUBLIN.

Mr. RAPHAEL GORDON
(Operas, Concerts, and At Homes).
c/o Signor ODOARDO BARRI,
60, MARGARET STREET, W.,
Or, 97, TALBOT ROAD, BAYSWATER, W.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. VERT, Esq.,
6, CORK STREET.

Mr. FREDERICK KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, CANFIELD GARDENS, S. HAMPSTEAD.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
EGREMONT, CROXTED ROAD,
WEST DULWICH, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert),
63, STAFFORD PLACE,
BUCKINGHAM GATE, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, etc.), 30, LANCASTER ROAD,
NOTTING HILL, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorios, and Operas),
70, PORTSDOWN ROAD, MAIDA VALE, W.

Harp.

Mr. W. T. BARKER
(Concerts, At Homes, Receptions),
49, EBURY STREET, BELGRAVIA, S.W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22A, DORSET STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified." 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
"YELBANA," 99, ANERLEY ROAD,
Pupils visited and received. ANERLEY, S.E.

Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. ALFRED MOUL (sole agent),
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella (Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST,

Telegraphic Address: "HEALEY'S AGENCY," LONDON

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Madame WILSON-OSMAN (A.R.A.M.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert), (Soprano)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Miss FLORENCE EMERSON (Soprano)
(Concerts, Oratorio, At Homes, Etc)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY.
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W, B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Miss FALCONAR (Contralto),
(Oratorio Concerts Etc.)
24, OPPIDANS RD, PRIMROSE HILL, N.W
or Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor),
28, BELSIZE ROAD, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W

Mr. HENRY PHILLIPS (Tenor),
Sole agent, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio)
Business Manager, W, B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone),
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Herr WALDEMAR MEYER (Solo Vlnst)
Concerts, At Homes, Etc.)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET,
REGENT STREET, W.

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC. Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter 1830. Under the immediate patronage of
The Queen and the Royal Family.
Principal—Dr. A. C. MACKENZIE.
The NEXT FORTNIGHTLY CONCERT OCTOBER 20.
Tenterden Street, Hanover Square. JOHN GILL, Secretary.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, Kensington Gore, London. Incorporatad by Royal Charter, 1883.
President—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director—SIR GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL.D.
NEXT COLLEGE CONCERT will be in October.
Regulations and all information may be obtained of the Registrar, Mr. GEORGE WATSON, at the College. CHARLES MORLEY, Hon. Sec.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and EXAMINATION, etc., and the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music. Instituted 1872.
President, THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.
The NEXT STUDENTS' CONCERT will take place on Tuesday, November 6, at 7 o'clock. The HALF-TERM, when New Students are received, commences on November 5. Prospectus and all particulars on application to the Secretary.

THE BONAVIA HUNT PRIZE FOR MUSICAL HISTORY.

The Academical Board will award a Prize of Three Guineas for the best Essay on "English Opera from Purcell to Balfe." All Members, Students, and Pupils, or Members of enrolled Institutions being eligible to compete All MSS. must be sent in, addressed to the Secretary, on or before November 30, 1888. Regulations on application. By order of the Academical Board.
Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

THE LONDON ACADEMY of MUSIC, St. George's Hall, Langham Place, W.; at 2, Harrington Gardens, South Kensington; and at 1, Old Steine, Brighton.
PRINCIPAL—Professor WYLDE, Mus. Doc. Cantab.
Piano—Dr. Wylde, J. F. Barnett, MM. Henseler, Lowman, Trew, Roche, Mattei, Bromell, Lehmeyer.
Singing—M. Garcia, Visetti, Raimo, G. Garcia, Denza, Badia, Bonetti, Romili, Mesdames Della Valle, Rose Hersee, and Badia.
Violin—Pollitzer, Ludwig, Erba. Harp—Oberthür. Cello—Pezze.
Fee, three to five guineas at St. George's Hall, four to six guineas at branches, is for the Course of Instruction in Four Studies.
Prospectus by post. C. TREW, Hon. Sec.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C. PATRON—THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.
Established to advance the cause of Church Music and the truest interests of its Professors.
Members of the Church of England and Ireland and the Episcopal Church of Scotland are eligible for Election.
Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates), 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members), 15s. per annum; Life Subscription, 5 guineas.
Prospectus and further particulars may be abtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

MUSIC SCHOOL.—CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL for Girls (Limited), 6, Upper Baker Street, Regent's Park.—Head Music Mistress, Miss Macirone, late Professor of Royal Academy of Music. Fee, three guineas per term. Children from 8 to 13 allowed to begin and continue for two guineas per term. Pupils not in the School may pay an entrance fee of one guinea. The fees payable in advance. Pupils wishing to join Violin Class under Mdlle. Gabrielle Vaillant, to send in their names to Miss Macirone. F. J. HOLLAND, Chairman.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

PARENTS seeking ENGLISH or FOREIGN SCHOOLS, TUTORS, or GOVERNESSES for their children, are invited to write fully to
J. F. MOON, M.C.P.,
85, NEWMAN STREET, LONDON, W.,
Who will forward prospectuses and every requisite information, free of charge.

Particulars required are: age and sex of pupil, locality preferred (if any), and about what terms will be paid. Housekeepers, Nursery Governesses, and Companions are also recommended. Hours 11 till 3. Saturdays closed

To Orchestral and Choral Societies.

ALFRED MAPLESON,
47½, LEICESTER SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
(Opposite the Alhambra).
Music Librarian and Copyist to H.M. The Queen, also the Philharmonic Society, Richter, Sarasate Concerts, &c. LENDS ON HIRE Orchestral and Vocal Music of every kind—OPERA, CONCERTS and FESTIVALS supplied.
SOLE AGENTS IN LONDON FOR
RICHARD WEICHOLD'S TESTED (DRESDEN) VIOLIN STRINGS.
Which surpass all others, See Testimonials from Joachim, Carrodus, Sarasate, &c.
MUSIC COPYING A SPECIALITY.

Lessee and Manager.
EVERY EVENING, at 7.30, concluding at 11.15.
A New Grand Spectacular Drama entitled,
THE ARMADA, a Romance of 1588.
By HENRY HAMILTON and AUGUSTUS HARRIS.
Box-office open daily from ten till six.

THE ARMADA at DRURY LANE.—Winifred Emery, Edith Bruce, Kate James, Ada Neilson, and Maud Milton; Leonard Boyne, Luigi Lablache, Edward Gardiner, Victor Stevens, A. Beaumont, Henry Loraine, S. Dawson, Mervin Dallas, Stanislaus Calhaem, B. Robbins, F. Dobel, Basil West, W. Uridge, F. Harrison, U. Winter, Fitz-Davis, W. S. Parkes, H. Denvil, F. Thomas, F. Collins, and Harry Nichols.

THE ARMADA.—The unanimous praise bestowed upon this historical drama and grand spectacle by the leading Press of the country is nightly endorsed by the crowded audience which fill Drury Lane Theatre at each performance.

THE ARMADA.—It is impossible in an advertisement to give an idea of the volumes that have been written enthusiastically commending this play to the attention of the lovers of the artistic, the beautful, and the true.

THE ARMADA.—In consequence of the great success of "The Armada," and, in response to numerous requests, another MATINEE will be gien on SATURDAY, October 20, at 1.30.

SAVOY.—Proprietor and Manager, R. D'Oyly Carte.—THIS EVENING, at 8.20, the New and Original Opera, in two acts, by W. S. Gilbert and Artnur Sullivan, entifled THE YEOMEN OF THE GUARD; or, The Merryman and his Maid. Preceeded at 7.20 by MRS. JARRAMIE'S GENIE. Doors open at seven. Box office open nine a.m. till eleven p.m.

SAVOY.—THE YEOMEN OF THE GUARD, MORNING PERFORMANCE EVERY SATURDAY, at 2.30. Doors open at two.

THE JODRELL (late Novelty) THEATRE, Great Queen Street, Long Acre, Sole Lessee Mrs. Churchill Jodrell.—Mrs. Churchill Jodrell has much pleasure in announcing the engagement of the famous Russian National Opera Company, who will appear on WEDNESDAN, October 17, in Anton Rubinstein's grand Opera, THE DEMON, with the following powerful cast, and the celebrated Moscow Chorus of 30 singers: The Demon, M. Michael Winogradow; Prince Gudal, M. Weisshoff; Tamara (his daughter), Mdlle. Wieber; Prince Sinodal (betrothed to Tamara), M. Bogatirew; the Angel of Light, Mdlle. Olga Puskowa; Servant to Sinodal, M. Ljarow; Maid to Tamara, Mdlle. Gordjewa. Musical Director, Signor Guiseffe Truffi. Morning Performance, Saturday, Oct. 20, and every Saturday. No Fees of any description. Cloak-rooms and Programmes free. Notwithstanding the great expense of this engagement, there will be no increase in the prices of admission, which are as follows: Private Boxes, Two and Three Guineas; Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Dress Circle, 6s. 6d.; Upper Circle (numbered and reserved), 3s.; Pit, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. Box office open on Monday next, where seats may be secured, and at all Libraries. Business Manager, Col. H. J. Sargent.

MR. & MRS. GERMAN REED'S ENTERTAINMENT. Under the Management of Mr. ALFRED GERMAN REED and Mr. CORNEY GRAIN.—TO-DAY, at three. Artists: Miss Fanny Holland, Miss Kate Tully, Mr. Corney Grain, Mr. Ernest Laris, Mr. Walter Browne, and Mr. Alfred German Reed.—St. George's Hall, Langham Place. Stalls, 5s. and 3s. Admission, 2s. and 1s. No fees.

WANTED, AN HEIR.—TO-DAY, at three, written by Malcolm Watson, music by Alfred J. Caldicott.

NOTICE.—Mr. Corney Grain's New Musical Sketch, entitled JOHN BULL ABROAD, will be given for the First time MONDAY EVENING next, October 15.—Mr. & Mrs. German Reed's Entertainment, St. George's Hall, Langham Place, W.

W. G. THOMAS'S PIANOS

ARE the BEST and cheapest in the Professors and others will find an ad sending for the Free Illustrated lists
Iron-framed PIANOS, full-comp
Walnut Wood Cases, at popular
FREE. Contracts taken fo
Old Pianos bought for Cash,

W. G. THOMAS Pianoforte M
Gospel Oak Grove, Malden Road, Kentish T

A BLESSING IN EVERY F
HOLLOWAY'S PILLS &
These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY Y and are pronounced the best medicines for family us testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curati ledged by the whole civilised world to be of the of disease. Sold by all Chemists and F
Manufactured only at THOMAS HO
78, NEW OXFORD S
N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1888.

⁂ MSS. and Letters intended for publication must be addressed to "The Editor." Rejected MSS. cannot be returned unless accompanied by stamped directed envelope.

⁂ Advertisements and business communications generally should be addressed to the Manager (MR. WILLIAM PEARCE), whose receipt—with the sole exception of the Proprietor's—for amounts due since August 1, 1888, will alone be recognised. Advertising, Publishing, and General Offices: 138*a, Strand, London.*

Facts and Comments.

M. Gabriel Fauré is at present occupied in completing a new lyrical work, the libretto of which, taken from the fairy-legends of France, has been furnished by M. Henry Cochin.

According to Dr. Gottschalg, who was an intimate friend of Liszt, there is no truth in the statement that a posthumous oratorio by that master, entitled "Via Crucis," has been discovered. What has been found is simply a collection of choruses to be sung at the twelve "Stations of the Cross." It seems, however, that Liszt left behind him the unfinished score of an oratorio, "Saint Etienne," which he had not touched for twenty years.

Schumann's Early Letters, translated by May Herbert, and with a preface by Sir G. Grove, have just been published in a cheap form by Messrs. G. Bell & Son.

The funeral of the late Professor Ella took place on October 5, at Brompton Cemetery. Among those present were Lord Clarence Paget, Messrs. G. A. Osborne, W. H. Cummings, E. H. Turpin, H. Lazarus, H. Goodban, J. Belcher, T. L. Southgate, Arthur Coleridge, Duncan Davison, &c. A number of ladies were also present. A preliminary service was held in St. Peter's, Eaton Square.

Avis à MM. J. F. Rowbotham, Matthew Cuddlepug, Esq., et Cie.:
Dr. von Bülow has stated that he will not publish the brochure in which, it was announced, he was about to attack the "New Wagnerians." He has even destroyed the material which he had collected for the work. "I am still strong enough," he says, "to be of assistance to musical art without making myself conspicuous by mischievous proceedings of this sort." Dr. von Bülow has reached the age when a man sees that the puny clamours of juvenility have no real place in the highest life, and that an artist should be occupied more nobly than in petty recriminations and childish pugnacities. But then, Dr. von Bülow is a great artist, and— !

Mr. G. W. L. Marshall-Hall, the purchase of whose music-drama, "Harold," by a Continental agent we recently chronicled, has been appointed conductor of the choral and orchestral societies of the "London Organ School."

We are indebted to The City Press for the following :—
"The will of Mr. William Chappell, F.S.A., late of 53, Upper Brook Street, a partner in the firm of Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Chappell, music publishers, who died on August 20 last, was proved on October 1st, by Mr. Thomas Patey Chappell and Mr. Samuel Arthur Chappell, the brothers and executors, the value of the personal estate being sworn under a nominal amount.

"The will of Mr. Henry Littleton, late of 1, Berners Street, and Dunedin House, Sydenham, proprietor of the house of Novello, Ewer, and Co., music publishers, who died on May 11th last, was proved on September 29, by Mr. Alfred Henry Littleton and Mr. Augustus James Littleton, the sons and executors, the value of the personal estate exceeding £8,000. The testator bequeaths £10,000 each to his daughters, Elizabeth Ann and Amy Eliza, which sums are to bear interest at seven per cent., and are not to be called in till 15 years after his death, or till his business is sold; and £500, his household furniture and effects, and an annuity of £700 to his wife, Mrs. Sarah Eliza Littleton. The residue of his property he leaves to his sons Alfred Henry and Augustus James, and he expresses a wish that they will continue to carry on his business, and keep the name of "Novello" in the style or name of the firm."

The first rehearsal of Dudley Buck's "Light of Asia," by the Novello Choir, will be held on Tuesday next, at the Store Street Rooms.

That tricksy Ariel, the electric light, seems to find keen delight in annoying those who congregate in theatres and concert halls. At St. James's Theatre last season, and more recently at Birmingham, he was responsible for not a little discomfort and danger. But at the Court Theatre at Munich he succeeded but a few days since in eclipsing his previous efforts, and himself; for the performance had to be abandoned altogether in consequence of the obstinacy of the electric light, which refused to be lit at all. It would be interesting to know if the sprite is in any way moved to these freaks by the nature of the performances which he is called on to endure. If statistics could be compiled, we should soon learn whether it be Wagner, Handel, or Rossini, who excites his wrath. Or is the actual darkness in which he plunged the good people of Munich perchance symbolical of the gross mental darkness in which certain musicians and critics sit?

The comic opera, "The Barber of Bagdad," by Peter Cornelius, has been recently produced at Prague with extraordinary success. The work has, indeed, been received with great favour wherever it has been heard. Possibly, our great grandchildren may hear this, and a few other novelties, on the English stage.

Apropos of operatic novelties, and variety of repertoires, we commend to the notice of Mr. Augustus Harris the following list of the operas given at the Frankfort opera-house between Sept. 1. and Sept. 29:—"Carmen," "Trumpeter of Säkkingen," "Die Walküre," "Rigoletto," "Tannhaüser," "Lohengrin," "Silvana," "Don Giovanni," "Die Meistersinger," "La Juive," "Traviata," "Le Cid," "The Magic Flute," "Il Trovatore," "Mignon," "Siegfried," "La Prophète," "Wildschütz," "Faust," "Figaro," "Otello." This is something like variety. The only opera of which two performances were given was "Lohengrin." By the bye, was not something said the other day about the extinction of Wagner?

We regret to announce the death, at the age of sixty, of Herr Martin Müller, who for nearly twenty years was the conductor of the London German Liederkranz.

Nikita has departed for a time, but those who admire juvenile singers may find consolation in the person of Miss Fanny Joyce, who made her début at Covent Garden on Saturday last. This young lady, who is reputed to be Nikita's senior by twelve months only, possesses a soprano voice of considerable power and compass, and her style is unusually mature. Miss Joyce must be considered a distinct acquisition to the Covent Garden artists.

Sullivan's "Mikado" is now being performed daily at a Danish circus at Stockholm, but in a strange fashion—no words are given, but each piece is acted and danced. Such is fame!

IS WAGNERISM A FAILURE?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL WORLD."

Sir,—So the Wagner bubble has burst! Mr. Rowbotham's essay in the Nineteenth Century, in which he foolishly takes up this untenable position, was severely criticised in your last week's issue by Mr. L. N. Parker; now allow me to give the finishing stroke with a few plain statistics.

The "Bayreuther Taschen-Kalender" for 1888 tells us (and the statement is an authoritative one) that between July 1, 1886, and July 1, 1887 six hundred and forty-one performances of Wagnerian music-dramas have been given in forty-four German towns! The names of these towns and the number of performances at each are also given, but the statement would take too much space for quotation here. It should be mentioned, however, that these six hundred and forty representations comprised 157 performances of Lohengrin,

131 " Tannhäuser,
103 " Die Walküre,
86 " Hollander,
37 " Siegfried,
35 " Rienzi,
31 " Rheingold,
26 " Meistersinger,
21 " Götterdämmerung,
14 " Tristan.

The "Kalender" for 1889 will not be issued for another month or two, so that I cannot give you the figures for the subsequent years. But 641 performances in the year ending July, 1887, is surely a wonderful aggregate, and an unanswerable rejoinder to Mr. Rowbotham's statement that the bubble has burst. These figures leave out of the reckoning other countries, such as Italy, Denmark, Holland, Sweden, Spain, Russia, and America, &c., each of which is well to the fore with stage representations. Facts such as these are stubborn things, and no amount of wild and harebrained attacks can rob them of their force.

It is perfectly true that for the last two or three years Wagnerian performances in London have been few and far between, but this has been owing to the fact that no German operatic company has visited us. To rejoin that no German operatic company has been to London because London does not want any more Wagnerian performances, implies, also, that it does not want Weber's operas and "Fidelio," and the other beautiful works that constitute the German companies' répertoires. This I do not fancy Mr. Rowbotham will be inclined to admit. The next German company that comes to London, and we shall not have to wait very long, will give us plenty of Wagner, depend upon it! They know well enough that, although they may in a few individual instances have lost money, it is the greatest attraction they can offer to the public.

A striking feature in Mr. Rowbotham's article is that he has not one solitary good word to say for Wagner. The quotation of Wagner's poetry in translations is simply an inexcusable attempt to possess himself of an unworthy weapon, and a ruse which it is reprehensible for so good a scholar to employ. Methods of warfare and misrepresentation like that with which the article abounds were thought to have died an unlamented death years ago, but no! the author of the last history of music seeks to revive them. From criticism like his to that chronicled by Herr Tappert in his "Mörterbuch der Unhöflichkeit" is but a step. "Viel Schimpf, viel Ehr'," says an old German proverb, and Wagner is a remarkable instance of its truth. No! Whatever fate is in store for the Wagnerian drama it cannot be influenced disadvantageously by such unworthy attacks; for they only serve to repel all judicial minds. The resolution of the matter will not be found in these or similar diatribes, but in polemics of a widely different character if controversy can keep the matter at all.

Let us remember the words of M. Gutmann: "Das muss allerdings ein grosser Mann sein, gegen den seit zwei Dezennien ein ganze Welt Kämpft;" and never to try to persuade ourselves that anything but the most thorough synthesis of facts will enable us to give a satisfactory explanation of so extraordinary a phenomenon as Richard Wagner.

I am, Sir,
Faithfully yours,
Charles Dowdeswell,
Joint Hon. Sec. London Wagner Society.

Brantwood, Clapham Common,
October 10, 1888.

THE CHARITY CONCERT.

From the French of Jules Sandeau.

(Concluded.)

An illness of Bergère compelled us to prolong our stay at Carpentras. For the few days that we stopped there nothing was talked of but the concert, the Comtesse de R——, and the mysterious stranger. Each lost himself in conjectures more absurd than his neighbours. As there was no other subject of conversation at the dinner-table of the "Three Mewing Cats," my friend Jacques was soon in a ferocious temper. Weary of hearing always about music, one fine morning he harnessed Bergère, who was scarcely convalescent, and we set out at a gentle trot, he swearing roundly that he would never set foot again in that evil place, and I bearing one of the most gracious memories of my youth. And I will ever defend you against all scoffers, yon town with the embattlemented ramparts! And you will always seem to me full of beauty and harmony, city beloved of Petrarch! I never write your name without reverence, Carpentras; and, as long as I live, you shall not lack a friendly tongue to answer your enemies.

Our journey finished as it had begun, the one dreaming, the other smoking. We visited Nimes, Arles, Montpellier, Marseilles. We had the misfortune to lose Bergère at Alais: the noble beast died in the stable. When he had finished his business and collected from different places several thousand francs which he had inherited from an old aunt, Jacques bought a little horse, which he named Bistouri, in memory of his first master, a terribly barbarous surgeon, and we returned to our village with this new companion. I came back as I had started, but disturbed and troubled, eagerly scanning every post-chaise that passed us on the road, and bearin in my heart confused voices and vague forms which had not be there at starting Bistouri turned us over three times, and we arri home without more accidents.

The following year my friends threw the reins on my nec let me loose in Paris. I haunted the opera and concert-roo
I heard no more the voice I sought, save, indeed, in my where I heard it always. The most admired accomplishm me smile; the most highly applauded songs found me dis indifferent; the idols of the boxes and stalls seemed to of the ovations they received. In spite of their pomp all the performances to which I went with the cro and disenchanted. I had then a young friend, who of music, passionately fond of sweet songs and vo gether to the lyric theatres, and we returned toge arm, he joyously and enthusiastic, I vexed an asked me why I was so, I used to answer with that became a by-word between us—"Ah, ha last year at a charity concert given at Car should interrupt me and laugh at your n where for the first time I heard that stayed on earth long enough only to ch

Discouraged, I had at last begun t memory, and for some months I did in his excursions. Winter arrived;
Paris. One day, my friend ent umphant as Christopher Columb
He too had, only the evenin had discovered the Théâtre-Italien. The boy told me of its wonders, and assured me that one might venture to go, "even after having been present at the Charity Concert at Carpentras." I shook my head incredulously. He insisted, but uselessly; I had no wish for new experiences; other cares engrossed me; and finally—must I say it?—I was jealous for the voice which sang in my heart, as jealous as a lover for the beauty of his mistress, and I felt that it would hurt me to meet her rival.

After that, scarcely a day went by on which my little dilettante friend did not return to the charge. After each night at the Bouffes, he used to come, long after midnight, and sit at the foot of my bed, and God only knows what raptures of enthusiasm he made me undergo. More than once was I tempted to treat him as Jacques had treated me at Carpentras. I must acknowledge that at last he had greatly piqued my curiosity, and awakened my musical emotions. He talked above all of two queens of song who shared the crown; I burned and trembled at the same time to hear and see them.

At last, one evening (I shall remember it all my life), I had read the title of "Othello" on the posters; in one of those thick fogs that sometimes envelop Paris like a shroud, I added myself to the crowd which was besieging the door of the Theatre-Italien. After an hour of waiting, in the icy mist which pierced me to the bones, the crowd wound on slowly, like the rings of a snake stretching itself out. I was one of the last to penetrate into the sanctuary. I should say, rather, I did not penetrate at all. I found the temple invaded, and it was only after some trouble that I got the privilege of a stool in a lobby. At the stroke of eight I felt a sort of shudder pass through all. The curtain rose, and so complete was the religious silence, that for some time I could hear the last chords of the orchestra echoing, rising slowly like a cloud, floating over the motionless crowd, and breaking in the roof like waves shattered against the rocks that enclose them. I could see nothing, but every sound reached me. I listened enchanted; I seemed to hear the gates of heaven open, and, ungrateful wretch that I was, I was forgetting Carpentras, when suddenly there was a movement in the crowd, and a thrice-repeated volley of applause greeted the appearance of Desdemona. I tried to see the young Venetian, but a living wall hid from me theatre and stage. The crowd again was silent. Desdemona sang. At the first notes of that clear voice I trembled from head to foot.

Could it be true? Was I deceiving myself? Was I not the sport of some illusion? and was this indeed the voice of my dreams? I tried to break through the wall which shut me out of the theatre; but tried in vain, and fell back upon my chair. I hesitated and doubted still; but when I heard the notes of the Willow Song, I could doubt no longer—it was she! When the curtain fell, I contrived, after a desperate struggle, to reach the orchestra. The curtain was soon drawn up again amid the loud applause of the assembly, who called for Desdemona; and Desdemona appeared. The very light shook with the cries of enthusiasm, which seemed unending; flowers rained upon the stage, the boxes flashed with jewels, white and red shawls were waved in the heavy-scented air. Modest and simple in the hour of triumph, I knew her at once; it was she, it was the wandering angel who once on her way had amused herself by singing to the poor of Carpentras. Her name had been called from the boxes and the stalls, but I had not been able to distinguish it.

"What is the name of the singer who has been playing Desdemona?" I asked of my neighbour.

He looked at me curiously, as if I had just arrived from the Congo.

"MARIE MALIBRAN," he said.

Alas! Nothing availed to soften the heart of Death the pitiless, neither so much genius nor so much grace, the love of the people, nor the power of her glory and beauty. It was because the Cruel One, as the old poet has said, had stopped his ears; not otherwise could he have dared to strike her.

PROFESSOR SIR GEORGE ALEXANDER MACFARREN.

HIS LIFE AND WORK.

A PAPER READ BEFORE THE COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS BY
HENRY C. BANISTER.

(Continued from page 787).

With his later years Macfarren, so to speak, renewed his youth by opening out to himself a new career as a composer, entering on the composition of oratorios, thus making quite a new departure. "St. John the Baptist," composed for the Gloucester Festival, was, however, not performed at it, but owing to circumstances not necessary to relate, although redounding to Macfarren's honour, was performed first at the Bristol Festival on October 23, 1875, and achieved a great success, being afterwards performed, and equally well received, in London. This was followed by "The Resurrection," for the Birmingham Festival in 1876; "Joseph," for the Leeds Festival in 1877; and subsequently "King David." I believe the general verdict has been most in favour of "St. John the Baptist," at all events until the production of "King David." Personally, from the imperfect acquaintance I have been able to make, I have been inclined to place "Joseph" higher still; but this is only an impression, not a formed opinion. By this series of oratorios I suppose Macfarren is best known as a composer to the present generation, and perhaps will continue to be so. In addition to all these works that I have enumerated there are several symphonies, one an early work in C sharp minor, another a comparatively recent production in E minor, composed for the Philharmonic Society; also a violin concerto, a pianoforte concerto, a flute concerto, and various overtures. His chamber compositions moreover must by no means be overlooked, consisting of quartets, a quintet in G minor, for the pianoforte and strings, including a double bass; a trio for the pianoforte and strings, originally performed by Madame Dulcken, and recently revived by Mr. Ernest Kiver at one of his chamber concerts; besides several small pianoforte pieces, three solo sonatas, one in A major, another in E flat, and a more recent one in G minor, composed for his eminent pupil, Miss Agnes Zimmermann. The first, named "Ma Cousine," was played by Mr. W. H. Holmes at one of my father's concerts in 1844. I think it was this one which was to have been performed by him at one of Macfarren and Davison's Concerts, but he failing for some reason, Mendelssohn was asked to play it. He, however, declined also; though, in a letter dated June 6, 1844, he says: "I need not tell you with how great a pleasure I would have played your Sonata to-morrow if I possibly could—for I hope you know this. And you also know that it is with true and sincere regret that I must say that I am not able to undertake the task which you propose to me." . . He then proceeds to explain that his many engagements prevented his making himself acquainted with the Sonata, at such short notice, so as to do it justice. At that concert, however, he played his own Trio in D minor.

Macfarren's smaller works are innumerable: songs, duets, trios, part-songs, church services, &c., &c. Some of the small vocal pieces have great spontaneity and charm, such as the once well-known and popular duets "Two merry gipsies," and "The fairies' tryst": the part-song for female voices, "Ye spotted snakes": the part-songs "The Troubadour," "Orpheus with his Lute," and many others.

And, be it remembered, for many years before his death, he was totally blind, and had to give forth his productions by the tedious process of dictation to an amanuensis, sufficient one would think, to evaporate all inspiration. And yet he was most minutely painstaking in the indication of all details with regard to manner of performance, organ-registering, and so forth: never scamping any work: rarely, I think, discovered in any slip or mental oversight. He did, indeed, attempt to master the very ingenious Braille system of embossed notation (such as we use at the Royal Normal College, Upper Norwood); but he told me that, if he learned it, he forgot it in a week—about the only thing that I ever knew of his forgetting, the only thing I ever heard him acknowledge to have failed in, except, indeed politics, which, he told me, he never could understand. Stay—there was one other thing that he acknowledged, in my hearing, to have failed in, and that, moreover, a musical task; the analysis, with a pupil, of Gounod's "Redemption," which, he said, he gave up after a line or two.

But I have by no means exhausted my record of the work accomplished by this marvellous worker, whose prodigious capacity for hard work seemed never to flag. I have rapidly sketched, with scarcely a hint of criticism, his doings as a composer; and the bare enumeration that I have given may well indicate his fertility. There remains to speak of his literary work, closely associated, moreover, with his lecturing work. He wrote many articles and series of articles in the Musical World and the Musical Times, and these, not the ephemeral papers on current topics, such as an habitual press-writer can throw off with facile pen; but thoughtful, critical, analytical little treatises, on such subjects as Bach's Church Cantatas, and the like, the outcome of careful thought and discriminating judgment.

Macfarren never did anything carelessly. Of a like quality were the many analyses that he produced for the programmes of the Sacred Harmonic Society and Philharmonic Society, and some other concerts: the prefaces to such works as Bach's Passions-Musik, Handel's Messiah, and the like. He also contributed a series of highly interesting biographies of musicians to the "Imperial Dictionary of Universal biography," about twenty-seven years ago; and, at the time of the first Handel Festival at the Crystal Palace, it being thought expedient to prepare, for sale on the opening day, a succinct biography of Handel, Macfarren was commissioned to prepare one, which he did, at considerable expenditure of time and research. By some mischance, the MS. was lost in transit to the printers, and, in order that the brochure might be ready in time for its purpose, he re-dictated it entirely from memory. And when, subsequently, the original manuscript was recovered, it was found that the two versions only varied in some half-dozen slight instances. I relate this incident as it was, at the time, related to me by one closely connected with him. Including so many dates, as the pamphlet did, this was a marvellous feat of memory. But not by any means the only such feat to be recounted of him. In the year 1880, he read a paper on the lyrical drama, before the Musical Association, of considerable length, and full of facts, names, and dates, seldom faltering for a moment. More recently, his delivery was somewhat marred by increasing hesitancy; but even then, was marked by much occasional fluency and power. In 1875, he succeeded his friend Sterndale Bennett as Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, and as Professor of Music in the University of Cambridge; that succession being hailed with acclamation, satisfaction, and expectation, by all musical England. I remember an intelligent man saying to me, at the time, "I am afraid it is too late;" meaning, I suppose, that the recognition of his great attainments had come too tardily to draw forth much work from one so advanced in years, in whom ambition, if not energy, might be expected to have died out. But the speaker knew not the man. It is tolerably notorious how completely he made his mark in both offices--ambition to do solid work never died out in him; his energy and courage never quailed before work.

His enormous personal influence at the Royal Academy of Music is notorious. And, in the Cambridge University, we are not likely to witness any relapse into nominal, easily-passed examinations for degrees. The courses of lectures which he delivered in his professorial capacity at Cambridge, he repeated, year by year, at the Royal Academy—viz., a course upon Beethoven's 9th Symphony, two courses upon the Symphonies of Mozart, one upon "Das Wohltemperirte Klavier" of Bach, and another course upon the second volume of 24 Preludes and Fugues, which he refused to couple with the others as "the 48," because the two sets were not composed at the same period, were not issued as one work by Bach, and, as Professor Macfarren considered, represented different phases or developments of the composer's genius. There were also two courses on Beethoven's Sonatas; a third course being on the calendar for this very year. Alas! we are doomed to disappointment! There was also a course upon the History of the Overture, which he delivered, not, I believe, at the Academy, but at the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind: an Institution in which, both as a musician and as a blind man, he was much interested; believing in the possibility—nay, the entire practicability of highly educating those suffering—(though he repudiated that word) from the same deprivation as himself; while repudiating also the popular fallacy that, to such, there is the compensation of the quickening of the other senses by the loss of one. He was good enough to express much satisfaction at the appointment of your humble servant to the Professorship of Harmony and Composition in that College; and specially commended a specimen of improvised counterpoint by one of the pupils, at a recent meeting at Grosvenor House.

And, at the commencement of each Academical year, he delivered an Inaugural Address to the students and professors, always brimful of kindly sympathy, wise counsel, and shrewd remarks upon current musical topics. One of these consisted of an outline sketch of the history of music, evidently the result of the special thought which he was then bestowing upon his article "Music" in the Encyclopædia Britannica; afterwards republished in volume form, as "Musical History briefly narrated and technically discussed;" about the most readable and instructive book on the subject in existence. It were much to be desired that the miscellaneous papers and addresses to which I have alluded, scattered among periodicals, and similar publications, could be collected, and, with some judicious editing, issued in convenient form, for the benefit of musical students.

His critical opinions, as expressed in some of these papers, in his analytical programmes, and in other ways, are, of course, open to discussion. He, in my hearing, almost reproached himself for having connived at and co-operated in the production of Analytical Programmes: I hardly know why. I may mention that he would insist upon the word being spelt "Program," similarly to monogram, telegram, &c.; I suppose to prevent people, as some ignorant people do, pronouncing it Program-me. It has often been thought that he was dogmatic and even obstinate. But, in reality, he was singularly open to conviction, and ready to change his views and his dicta, if increased acquaintance with a subject, or a composer's works, warranted such a change. An old writer has said: No wise man will be ashamed to own himself in the wrong; it is simply to acknowledge that he is wiser to-day than he was yesterday! And Macfarren was marked by much of that wise readiness; though he did not change on slight grounds. He endeavoured, I believe, to keep himself free from prejudice. I have spoken of his abandonment of all attempt to satisfactorily analyse Gounod's "Redemption." And I well remember when I was by his side during the performance of that strangely popular bit of hideousness, the same composer's "O that we two were Maying," how he turned to me with the exclamation "what dirty music!" On the other hand, the day after, a performance of Gounod's "Mock Doctor," he spontaneously said to a little company of professors, myself among the number, "Oh, what beautiful music that was, last night!" So that it was no inveterate prejudice against the composer that he cherished. And he seems often to have seen reason to revise his judgments. When a young man, he, like many young men now-a-days, thought somewhat slightingly of Mozart; saying to his and my master, Cipriani Potter, "don't you think he is often rather puerile?" But, soon afterwards, hearing one of Mozart's Symphonies, and other music by some composers, Beethoven, I believe, among the number, whom he had fancied greater, he came enthusiastically to the same genial friend, saying, "Oh! sir, I think Mozart the finest of all!" and, in his later years, he was never tired of dilating upon the incomparableness of Mozart; often urging that Beethoven owed so much to Mozart as the foundation on which he built. Would that all the young men who talk depreciatingly of Mozart might similarly, as they mature their judgment, come to a better mind! Again, many years ago, I was credibly assured by a most intelligent musician, who was very intimate with Macfarren, Henry Gattie the violinist, that he highly estimated Clementi, considering his Sonata in B minor one of the finest in existence. But, not many years since, he, in conversation with myself, said: "There is one composer that I cannot tolerate; that is Clementi; the queer modulations, and awkward counterpoint," and so on. "Exception might perhaps be made in favour of the B minor Sonata; but even that"—and then he proceeded with some animadversions. He could express his admiration very tersely; as when, during the performance by a student of the Gigue from Bach's French Suite in G, he turned to me and said: "It's so jaunty."

(To be continued.)

SIMS REEVES. *

The self-assertion which characterises autobiography in general, is, in the case of a great public favourite, not only excused but expected. Many, therefore, will be disappointed to hear that egoism is by no means the distinguishing trait of Mr. Reeves' book. Our famous tenor has indeed gone rather to the other extreme; for in his anxiety to avoid overweighting his pages with personal details he has introduced matter which, though perhaps interesting in itself, may expose him to the charge of "bookmaking." Had Mr. Reeves not been a singer he might have made money as a feuilletoniste. This is clear from the chapters headed "A Dark Record," "An Astral Double," "The Bishop's Daughter," "A Political Vivien," "Mount Sorrow," "Willard O'Neill," "The Ring," "The Forgery," "The Shipwreck," which, with several others, detail events of strong human interest, Mr. Reeves' connection with which is not quite clear.

---

* Sims Reeves—his life and recollections, by himself. Simpkin, Marshall & Co., and the London Music Publishing Company (Limited).

Sandwiched between these tales are chapters dealing with the chief public incidents of our great English tenor's career. The son of a musician, young Reeves was organist at North Cray Church when fourteen years of age. It is interesting to know that he also learnt the violin, violoncello, oboe, and bassoon. In 1839, the future tenor, then eighteen, made his debut at the Newcastle-on-Tyne Theatre as the Gipsy Boy in "Guy Mannering," and then commenced to sing first as a baritone, but subsequently as one of the second tenors in Macready's company at Drury Lane. After studying with Signori Bordogni and Mazzucato he appeared at La Scala as Edgardo in "Lucia."

In 1848, Mr. Reeves sang in "Judas Maccabæus," at Exeter Hall under the direction of Mr. John Hullah, this being his first essay in Oratorio. As every one knows, his career since that time has been one long triumph, broken only by his frequent inability to sing at all —a loss to himself and the public, for which a delicate throat and an uncongenial climate are responsible. On this subject Mr. Reeves writes as follows: "Think how every tenor who wishes at all times to do his best must regulate his life, must protect his valuable throat against all possible and impossible draughts. He eats in the most sparing manner, when London sets him down as a glutton; drinks nothing but claret and water when by universal consent he is a flaming drunkard. You get your feet wet, are hoarse, and are well the next day. The more delicate, more susceptible tenor gets his feet wet, is hoarse, and is not well the next day; and so long as he is not able to sing, not only loses his money, but is usually regarded as an impostor because he frankly and conscientiously declines to torture the ears of a public which he has been in the habit of delighting." Mr. Reeves is very severe on musical quacks, especially on those who ruin the voices of the poor dupes entrusted to their care; makes some sensible remarks on the pitch question; and quotes some interesting press notices, not easily accessible, of the important productions in which during the last forty years he has taken part. The book is tastefully got up, and embellished with an excellent portrait of the author.

Knighthood of the Legion of Honour, 1878. Knight Commander of Villa Virega, 1883. Gold Medals at the principal International Exhibitions.

JOHN BRINSMEAD & SONS'

PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOFORTES ARE FOR SALE, FOR HIRE, and on the THREE YEARS' SYSTEM.

The perfection of Touch, Tone, and Durability.

JOHN BRINSMEAD AND SONS, Pianoforte Manufacturers, 18, 20, 22, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W. Lists free.

Notice of Postonement of Sale—Re Albert Palace.

MR. EDWIN EVANS begs to announce that the SALE of the CONTENTS of ALBERT PALACE and the ORGAN is POSTPONED until further notice.—Auctioneer's offices, No. 118, Lavender Hill, S.W.

TO BE SOLD.—A HARMONIUM by POWELL, with two manuals and complete set of full-sized organ pedals, eighteen stops, including couplers of pedals to great, swell to great, and pedals to swell. Can be blown either as an organ by hand or in the usual way. The case is American walnut, with stool to match. The instrument was built for organ practice. It would require to be put into order after moving. What offers?—Address A. B., Grange House, Upper Norwood.

TO THE LONDON MUSIC TRADE.

ANY Firm having a Claim or Accounts against the late Mr. MARTIN MULLER, late Conductor of the Liederkranz, are requested to forward particulars of the same to Mr. THEODORE MULLER, 7, High Street, East Grinstead.

WALTER BACHE SCHOLARSHIP.

It is proposed to close the Subscription List of the above in October. Intending Subscribers are requested to send their names at once to the Hon. Secretary, In order that they may be included in the Hon. Treasurer's Statement of Accounts, which will be issued as soon as possible after that date. Those who have already kindly promised donations, but have not yet paid them, will oblige by forwarding them either to the Hon. Treasurer, Mr. Alfred Littleton, 1, Berners Street, W.; or to Mr. C. A Barry, Hon. Secretary, Gloucester Lodge, Laurie Park, Sydenham.

THE RIGHT HON. LORD KNUTSFORD, G.C.M.G. Engravings from the original Portrait of Lord Knutsford, by J. F. Acret, are now being issued. Steel Line Engraving, by Harold Bourne. Artist's proof, £1 1s., Enfield House Studio, Windmill Hill, Hampstead.

Musical World Portraits.

OCTOBER 20 - - -	SIR CHARLES AND LADY HALLÉ.
OCTOBER 27 - -	HERR WALDEMAR MEYER.

Publishers' Announcements.

SIMS REEVES: HIS LIFE. By Himself.

Ready Oct. 8, at all Libraries and Bookstalls,

SIMS REEVES: HIS LIFE. By Himself. 1 Vol., demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

London: Simpkin, Marshall, and Co., and London Music Publishi Company (Limited), 54, Great Marlborough Street, W

Positively Ready Oct. 8,

SIMS REEVES: HIS LIFE. By Himself. 1 Vol., demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

London Music Publishing Company (Limited), 54, Great Marlborough Street, W

"A fascinating little volume."—Athenæum.

NEW VOLUME OF BOHN'S STANDARD LIBRARY,

SCHUMANN'S EARLY LETTERS.

Translated by MAY HERBERT,

With a Preface by SIR GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L.

Small Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, York Street, Covent Garden.

TO COMPOSERS,—RIDGEWAY and CO., Music Publishers, 10, Argyll Street, W. undertake the REVISING. PRINTING. and PUBLISHING of Musical Works upon exceptionally low terms. The finest work in the trade. Estimates upon receipt of MSS. IMPORTANT.—Composers' Works included in Catalogue and introduced without extra charge.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE,

By T. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 27, Harley Street, W.

THE VOICE.

A Complete Explanation of the Throat and its Functions in Breathing and in the Production of Voice, will be found in

"ELOCUTION, VOICE, & GESTURE."

By RUPERT GARRY.

Remedies for Clearing and Strengthening the Voice, and for the Cure of Hoarseness, Sore Throat, and other derangements of the Breathing Tubes.

"The section on the Voice is well considered and trustworthy, based as it is on the writings of authorities on the question of the Hygiene of the Vocal Organs."—STAGE.

"The Book contains many valuable hints in regard to Voice and Gesture."—VOICE (New York).

POST FREE, 1s. 2d.

London: Bemrose, 23, Old Bailey, E.C., and of the Author, at his residence, 49, Torrington Square, W.C.

IN SIX GRADES,

Price Two Shillings each.

Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY. Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:

A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,

By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWANN SONNENCHEIN and CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE; And all Book and Music Sellers.

The Organ World.

CONGREGATIONAL SERVICES.

(Continued from page 158.)

Many hymns would have to be discarded as uncongregational: some, because they are not hymns at all, but rather poems, and fitter to be read at home than sung by a multitude in church; others, because in them the sense is not sufficiently clear. Such hard words as guerdon, panoply, gratulation, antepast, Trisagion, transcendent, potentate, constellations, would have to be changed for simpler ones. For the canticles we should use chants, carefully avoiding those with high reciting-notes. Services, though admirable for cathedral purposes, were never intended for congregational singing. Attwood in F is a magnificent piece of choral music, but nothing could be less congregational. There are, however, easy settings which, the admirers of these compositions claim, have at least the merit of removing the difficulty about the division of the Te Deum. But speaking generally, it would be safest to use chants for the canticles. In short, all music that requires trained singers to render it properly would have to be laid aside. For the hymns we should have our grand, old tunes and the flowing, melodious tunes of a more recent period, and the compositions of living writers of excellence to choose from. But if we wish to have good, or even tolerable, congregational singing, we must not choose tunes that exceed the range of ordinary, uncultivated voices, for it is chiefly with such that we have to deal. If we call the bass voice an octave below the contralto, and the tenor an octave below the treble, and then take the highest note of the contralto as the upper limit, and the lowest note of the soprano as the lower limit, we get the congregational compass. This rather rough and ready calculation gives a compass of an octave or a ninth, extending from E flat or D below to E flat or perhaps E natural above. With tunes that keep within this compass there would be no difficulty; but are those which exceed it to be discarded? We need not trouble ourselves about the low notes, for they are seldom written, and when sung are not very distressing. But when tunes go too high for the congregation, the case is one of serious difficulty especially when the time is slow, and in some tunes more than in others; for people either sing the high notes very loudly—often with a shrill, piercing scream—or, when they find the tune getting too high for them, drop their voices an octave (like a rank of pipes that breaks at a certain note) or perhaps they omit the high notes altogether. Altering the tunes is out of the question, and transposing them into lower keys, though it would help the congregation, could not always be done without inconveniencing the choir; and then there is the question of character of key. Perhaps the best plan is to transpose them, and let the choir sing the melody with the congregation if the parts run too low. Tunes that go both too high and too low are more difficult to treat. The tune known as the Easter Hymn ought to be transposed a tone lower, as is often done, if only to get rid of the high F sharp, which is a very dreadful note unless it be drowned with a loud organ accompaniment. But in the first two verses the organist cannot play a loud organ in the strain in which the F sharp occurs; it is only in the last verse that he can play this strain loudly—and here, indeed, at the words, "Now above the sky He's King," he may even use the full organ without being accused of want of taste. The tune might be played a tone lower without inconveniencing the choir (though the basses would have a low note or two); but several low Cs would now appear in the melody, and though the altos and basses would be strong on these notes, the rest of the congregation would find them very low.

However, after weighing the arguments for and against, it would seem desirable to transpose this tune. There ought to be a weekly practice for the congregation, which as many as possible should attend. The organist would not deem it sufficient merely to take the people through the tunes for Sunday, but he would give them some valuable instruction as well. In churches where the Psalms are chanted, pointed Psalters should be placed in every seat, and the organist should show the people how to use them. In order that they might sing in tune and not drag, the people should be taught to listen to the organ. Unisonous singing should be encouraged, and improvised harmonies and that modern species of organum known as "singing seconds" should be vigorously denounced. The weekly practices would do good by interesting the congregation and in improving their musical capabilities. The anthem would be sung by the choir alone, who would now be heard to advantage. The choir might further show their proficiency by giving special "services of song" or sacred performances on a grander scale; so that the time and pains bestowed on them by the organist would not be thrown away. It is generally felt that singing the General Confession and the Lord's Prayer is indefensible. Though the practice has been introduced at a few places, it must have been at the suggestion of over-enthusiastic musicians. A clergyman once said, "Give musicians too much of their own way, and they will ruin the services.' And though certainly not true of organists generally, his words will apply to those enthusiasts who are carried away by their love of the art till they seem to be in danger of forgetting the legitimate object of worship altogether. It is not meant by this to speak slightingly of enthusiasm: which, when controlled by sound judgment, is so far from being a bad quality in an artist, that it is absolutely necessary if anything really great is to be achieved. It may be safely said that not one of those monuments of human skill and genius known as the Wonders of the Ancient World would have been begun and finished without enthusiasm. It is beautiful to read of the holy enthusiasm of David and Solomon when they were engaged, the one in collecting the material for the Home of God, the other in building that glorious temple. The grand and perfectly beautiful buildings at Athens must have been the work of enthusiasts. The sculptures that adorned the pediment of the Temple of Minerva (and are now known as the Elgin Marbles) stood at the height of some fifty or sixty feet above the ground. Yet, although they were so far removed from close inspection, they were so exquisitely perfect, that a sculptor of modern times has said of that famous figure which has better escaped destruction than the rest, that it were worth a man's while to come from Italy and see it. One could readily have understood that an artist would have lavished all his skill on works that were intended to occupy a place where they would be nearly viewed. But when we find statuary so incomparably beautiful in design, so exquisite in detail, occupying a situation where much of its perfection must necessarily have been lost, we must for ever admire the enthusiasm of the artist, who, working for the Divinity, thought, with the pious and wise Kings of Israel, that he could never work too well. Monotoning the Creed to the changing harmonies of the organ is said, by those who like it, to have a "fine effect." The help of the organ is certainly needed to keep the congregation in tune. Indeed, as regards the use of the organ, if such parts of the service as the Kyries, the Amens, the Versicles, and the responses in the Litany were sung by the congregation, and it were desired that the singing should not drag or get flat, a rather loud organ accompaniment would, in almost every church, be necessary; though it is dreadful to hear some instruments of these times. Many think that it is better to read these parts of the service, and certainly the prayer-book does not authorise the singing of any of them except the Litany, and even there it is not compulsory.

The fact that a number of educated people and musical enthusiasts like choral services does not justify us in using in all churches a kind of service which the humbler classes cannot understand. In i. Corinthians, xiv, St. Paul is speaking of public worship. Prayer and praise and preaching, he tells us, should be in such a language as the congregation understands; else, how shall they be able to follow the service? (v. 16). And then the Apostle gives the two grand rules: "Let all things be done decently and in order."

The Anti-Reformation services were complicated and, though possibly felt to be grand and imposing by those who understood them, they could not have been congregational in the full sense of the term; but our present church service, when conducted on prayer-book lines, is so simple that it may be followed intelligently by all classes, "high and low; rich and poor; one with another." R. B. D.

STORY OF THE OLD ORGAN IN THE CATHEDRAL "BEATÆ MARIÆ VIRGINIS," IN WOLFENBÜTTEL.

WRITTEN FROM EXISTING DOCUMENTS BY SELMAR MULLER, AND TRANSLATED BY F. E. T.

IX.

It was evident that there must either be a new organ or else the old one must be rebuilt and considerably enlarged, in order to give the Cathedral an instrument worthy of its size and importance. The organ had such grave defects that it was only possible to use it for divine worship by playing upon it tenderly as it were, and with an intimate knowledge of all its weaknesses. Certainly some stops in the swell were good; these were the Quintaton, 16 feet and the soft 8 and 4-feet registers, and in the Great, the 8-feet Gamba, which had the tone of a Salicional, the Gedact 16-feet and Flute 8-feet.

These and some other stops were to be retained in the hope of the new wind-supply proving more favourable to their use. My report was sent in 1868, but the cost proved a serious obstacle, and it was not until several years later that the next step was taken and application made to various organ builders. These were Euler of Gottsburen, Furtwängler of Elze, Buchholz of Berlin, and Schulze of Paulinzelle. The two first at once sent to me, the third did not reply, and the last answered later. Euler and Furtwängler agreed to the conditions, the others retired. The estimates of the first two were sent into me on February 1, 1873; that of Furtwängler being chosen. The work was completed on September 23, 1875.

The old case was retained to save expense, and I very gladly undertook the necessary painting of it for the same reason. At last the time came when the organ was ready to emerge from Furtwängler's factory and be put up in the Cathedral.

X.

The old organ in the course of its two centuries and a-half of service had experienced many changes since it was erected to be one of the chief ornaments of the new cathedral. The troublous times of the Thirty Years' War had swept over Germany, dealing destruction to the Fine Arts and all artistic impulses, and later on political influence had been brought to bear upon the church, and established it on a different footing. Still the organ survived these changes, and now it was about to share the fate of the many generations, dead and gone, who had lifted up their voices to its accompaniment on Sundays and Festivals, and then in their turn had been removed to give place to other worshippers. The organ was played for the last time on Sunday, June 10, 1877, and the following day, June 11, which happened to be a Festival. By my wish, these services were divided between myself and those who had been accustomed to assist me by playing occasionally. Luther's beautiful "Es wolte Gott uns gnädig sein," with its strikingly fine melody, was the last hymn played on the old organ. It not being customary at these services to play a going-out Voluntary, I took leave of the various favourite stops in the Prelude played before Divine worship—took leave of them, that is, in their old form, for a few really fine stops were incorporated in the new organ; so that after bidding them farewell with regret, we heard them again greatly improved, and their sweet sounds awoke memories of the old organ while listening to the new one.

In conclusion I append a complete list of all the organists who have held office as the Cathedral, the first six of them having been mentioned earlier in this account:—

1. Christopher Sell, 1662.
2. Melchios Schild, 1623—1626.
3. Ludolph Schild, 1626—1630.
4. Delphin Strunck, 1630—1632.
   Ludolph Schild (for the second time), 1632—1637.
5. Sylvester Hanicke, 1637—1678.
6. Johann Benedictus Passt, 1720—1756; died on Decemper 1, 1758, and was in office for thirty-six years.
7. Johann Dietrich Christian Graff, born 1732; died 1771, aged 39 years.
8. Johann Georg Römer, born 1742; died September 21, 1803, aged 61.
9. Johann Georg Abraham Schwarz, born 1778; died 1825, aged 47.
10. Christian Heinrich Strube, born January 2, 1803; died Movember 25, 1850, aged 47.

Schwarz wrote a volume of organ pieces consisting of little preludes; and Strube composed a book of chorale and an organ school, containing a good many preludes, intended for the use of the College of this town,

11. The writer, Selmar Müller, has been organist since 1851

THE OLD ORGAN AT NEW ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

Mr. J. T. Bumpus, in his admirable articles on the leading musicians of the Cathedral in the Musical Standard, observes:—The organ was completed in time for the opening ceremony. Bernhardt Schmidt, a German, commonly called Father Smith, was the builder, and the cost £2,000—a large sum of money in those days, but the result proved that it was well expended.

Sir Christopher Wren greatly wished to place the organ over the northern choir stalls, in a similar position to that of the old cathedral, in order that there might be an uninterrupted view from west to east, and also that the dome might be used for congregational purposes. In this design, however, as in many others, he was overruled by the Building Commissioners, who wished to follow the traditions of all the other cathedrals, and to have an enclosed choir, with a western organ screen and return stalls. On this screen Wren was compelled to place the instrument.

The contract for the organ was dated and signed Dec. 19, 1694, and it was to consist of "Great and Chayne (choir) organs and Echoes"; it was to be completed Lady Day, 1696, and to receive the approval of several eminent musicians, "particularly Dr. John Blowe."

Schmidt's contract was for the inside of the organ only, the case being provided for and designed by Wren. It appears that after the contract was signed, Schmidt executed his design considerably, and at his own expense. He had previously furnished Sir Christopher with the dimensions of the case he would require for his 12 ft. organ, and he now wished to have them increased. Wren, however, gave a most decided negative, declaring that his building was already spoiled by "the confounded box of whistles"

Schmidt had his revenge on Wren by letting the larger open diapason pipes in the two side towers protrude nearly a foot through the top of the case in a most ungainly manner. For this circumstance, however, we are indebted to Wren for his altars, surrounded by stately angels, who are represented as if standing in awe at "the glorious majesty of the Lord."

A more harmonious and beautiful organ-case has probably never been designed than that of St. Paul's, so admirably does it match the noble range of stalls, with their carvings of musical instruments, cherubs, fruit, flowers, and foliage in oak and lime-tree wood, by the hand of that consummate master, Grinling Gibbons.

The organ retained its position over the screen, where it both looked handsome and sounded grand, until the year 1860, when it was taken down during a re-arrangement of the choir, in order to accommodate greatly increased congregations, and placed above the stalls, under the second arch, on the north side—the position undoubtedly intended for it by Wren in the first instance. In 1871 the organ was again removed, almost entirely rebuilt, and greatly enlarged by Willis, and divided into two portions on either side of the entrance to the choir, the case being somewhat remodelled to suit its new position. At the same time the stalls of the great dignitaries which were formerly under the screen, and which. since 1860 had been stowed away as useless, were brought to light again, rearranged, and made to face like those of the Prebendaries and Minor Canons, North and South.

Great improvements were contemplated in the choir at this period (1871), such as mural decorations and a permanent altar-piece; but before this portion of the building had been closed for six months, preparations began to be made for the National Thanksgiving Day for the restoration to health of the Prince of Wales (February 27, 1872) and the choir had to be hastily got ready for the ceremony ere many things of importance could be taken in hand.

Ever since 1872 various ameliorations have been slowly made in the choir, including new seats of carved oak to match Gibbons' work, for the Vicar's Choral, and handsomely wrought iron desk fronts for the boys; a new pavement of white marble; a septum of the same material, to support a low iron western screen and gates, formed out of the original altar rails; new steps to the pulpit, and lastly the extensive, elaborate and costly reredos.

The ingenious way in which the wood-work about the organ has been adjusted, and the re-arrangement of the return stalls generally carried out, is worthy of the highest praise. A portion of the original organ screen with the well-known inscription to Sir Christopher Wren, formerly facing the dome, has been set up at the end of the north transept, where it forms a species of inner porch, The other portion, which formerly faced the altar, is now in a corresponding position in the south transept. The beautifully veined column of blue and white marble of Wren's organ gallery, together with Gibbons' delicate and life-like carvings in wood, deserve the most careful examination.

THE COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

The well-known Church paper the Banner has the following :—

"This institution occupies a position quite unique in the history of the art of music. It was founded by the late R. D. Limpus with the aid of a small group of organ-players in 1864, with the well-known organist just named as hon. secretary and treasurer. In 1877 the College was duly incorporated; and its members, including most of our cathedral and other leading organists, number at present some 600, and this strong professional force is still rapidly increasing. The College has the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London as patrons, and its vice-presidents and council consist of a highly influential body of leading musicians, including the university professors of the art, the heads of leading great educational institutions with which the College works in harmony through its examinations, and principal church musicians and organists. The College examinations have exercised a large influence for good in the progress of our church and organ music during the past twenty years. The value attached to the college diplomas is seen in the fact that the attendance of professional candidates has risen from about ten, to upon the last occusion about 185. 'No organist is now thought properly equipped for his professional career,' says a popular journal, 'whatever his other degrees and qualifications may be, unless he possesses the Fellowship of the College of Organists.' The method of conducting the college examinations is remarkable. The candidates play and write their examples without seeing their examiners. Only the names of successful candidates are made known. The work of examination is also conducted so expeditiously that the successful candidates receive their diplomas publicly, and may, in the case of fellows, take their 'hoods' on the day following their examination. The successful candidates first take the associateship before proceeding to fellowship. The board of examiners consists of twelve eminent professional men. The candidates are fully examined in every department of the duties of a church organist, and in all advanced branches of the science of music. Lectures are delivered to the members; the institution possesses a valuable library; prizes for church and organ compositions aré given; and a register of qualified organists is kept, so that clergymen and other church authorities may readily secure the services of good and thoroughly practical organists. An effort is being made upon the leading action of the esteemed hon treasurer, Mr. M. E. Wesley, a son of the first Samuel Wesley, to establish a fund for granting pensions and rendering other assistance to aged or sick organists and their relatives; a charity it is proposed not to confine even to the large circle of the college members. Truly a deserving cause. The present hon. secretary is Mr. E. H. Turpin, who took office with Mr. Wesley about 1875. The College, at present located in Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, will shortly be removed to larger premises in the same quarter of London. The hood of the fellows of the College of Organists, of light blue and brown silk, is now a familiar academical distinction in our churches; and the college has unquestionably taken a marked part in the improvement of our church music, and in the advancement of the art of organ playing."

SPECIFICATIONS.

WATERLOO ROAD.—The following is the scheme about to be completed in St. John's Church, as drawn up by the organist, Mr. H. Dart, A.C.O. Messrs. Hele & Co., who are the builders of the instrument, will undertake the enlargement:

GREAT ORGAN.

Double Open Diapason	32	Harmonic Flute	4
Large Open Diapason	8	Twelfth	4
Small Open Diapason	8	Fifteenth	2
Hohl Flute	8	Mixture .. ranks	3
Principal	4	Trumpet	8

PEDAL ORGAN.

Double Open Diapason	32	Violoncello	8
Major Bass	16	Bass Flute	8
Open Diapason	16	Trombone	16
Bourdon	16

SWELL ORGAN.

Double Diapason	16	Flute	4
Open Diapason	8	Mixture (ranks)	3
Stopped Diapason	8	Contra Fagotto	16
Gamba	8	Horn	8
Voix Célestes	8	Oboe	8
Principal	4	Clarion	4

CHOIR ORGAN.

Gamba	8	Concert Flute	8
Claribel	8	Piccolo	2
Dulciana	8	Corno-di-Bassetto	8

SOLO ORGAN.

Harmonic Flute	8	Clarionet	8
Harmonic Flute	4	Tuba	8
Orchestral Oboe	4	(heavy wind)

COUPLERS.

Swell to Great Unison.
Swell to Great Octave.
Swell to Great Sub.
Swell to Choir.
Solo to Great.
Choir Suboctave.
Great to Pedals.
Swell to Pedals.
Choir to Pedals.
Solo to Pedals.
Tremulant to Swell.

Four combination pedals to great, three to swell, two to pedal.
Solo organ enclosed in swell box. A few stops are to be omitted.

CATFORD.—The new organ which Mr. Eustace Ingram has erected at St. Lawrence's Church was opened, on July 18, by Mr. Atkinson, Mus. Bac. The instrument contains the following stops:—

GREAT ORGAN.

Double Diapason	16	Twelfth	2½
Open Diapason	8	Fifteenth	2
Stopped Diapason	8	Sesquialtera ranks	3
Gamba	8	Trumpet	8
Flûte Harmonique	4	Clarion	4
Principal	4

PEDAL ORGAN.

Open Diapason	16	Bourdon	16
Violone	16	Violoncello	8

SWELL ORGAN.

Bourdon	16	Mixture ranks	4
Open Diapason	8	Contra Possume	16
Lieblich Gedact	8	Cornopean	8
Salicional	8	Oboe	8
Voix Celestes	8	Vox Humana (in separate box)	8
Geigen Principal	4	Clarion	4

COMPOSITION PEDALS.

3 to Great. | 3 to Swell.

CHOIR ORGAN.

Open Diapason	8	Flauto Traverso	8
Suabe Flute	8	Weld Flöte	8
Dulciana	8	Clarionet	8

COUPLERS.

Swell to Great.
Swell to Pedals.
Great to Pedals.
Choir to Pedals.
Swell Superoctave.
Tremulant to Swell.
Pedal to act on Great to Pedals.

RECITAL NEWS.

BOW AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE.—The opening Recital of the season was given by Mr. W. S. Hoyle, on September 29. Vocalist: Mr. F. Barrington Foote. Clarionet: Miss Frances Thomas. Accompanist: Mr. Fountain Meen. The organ solos were: Pastorale Sonata, Rheinberger; Toccata in A flat, Hesse; Alla Marcia, Petrali; Slow Movement from Scotch Symphony, Mendelssohn; Cantilène and March Solennelle, Mailly.

LIVERPOOL.—At the Recital by Mr. W. T. Best, at St. George's Hall, on September 29, the following pieces were played: Offertoire, pour l'Orgue (Messe Solennelle), Rossini; Air with variations (Les Diamants de la Couronne), Auber; Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Bach; Adagio, from the Sestett for two horns and strings, Beethoven; Overture, "Maria di Rohan" Donizetti.

MONTROSE, N.B.—An Organ Recital was given in the Parish Church, on September 24, by Mr. Walter Mitchell, F.C.O. Programme:—Overture, "Alcina," Handel; Offertoire in A flat, Batiste; Anthem, "I shall see Him, but not now," Spark; Organ Sonata, No. 2, Mendelssohn; La Carita, Rossini; Vocal Solo, "Angels ever Bright and Fair," Handel; Adagio from Organ Sonata, Townshend-Driffield; Capriccio in F, Wely.

NOTES.

The Living Church (Chicago) has a parody on the Laureate's "Charge of the Light Brigade," which "the village choir" is thus victimised:—

Half a bar, half a bar,
Half a bar onward!
Into an awful ditch
Choir and precentor hitch
Into a mess of pitch
They led the "Old Hundred."

Trebles to right of them
Tenors to left of them,
Basses in front of them
Bellowed and thundered.
Oh, that precentor's look,
When the sopranos took
Their own time and hook
From the "Old Hundred."

. . . . .

Oh! the wild howls they wrought!
Right to the end they fought!
Something they sang, but not—
Not the "Old Hundred."

In the Spirit of Missions appears a very interesting picture of a Chinese vested choir at St. John's College, Shanghai. Even before this choir, Mr. Locke had already trained one at Hankow. The first native boy choir in China was organised at the Nativity, in Wuchang. There were about thirty boys, besides a Chinese organist. Gregorian tones were used, and the Psalter was chanted at each service responsively, with good effect. The value of chanting in China is not fully appreciated unless it is known that the ordinary method of reading there is never with the same voice used in speaking, but that all printed or written matter is recited, intoned, or chanted in a peculiar manner, altogether unique. The writer is inclined to believe that Hebrew poetry was recited in some similar manner, and that the Hebrew accents, so perplexing to most students, had reference to this matter of vocalisation.

The Churchman (U. S.) thus notices an ornate service:—

A "high celebration," at which the writer "assisted" painfully illustrated the timeliness and cogency of certain strictures upon aggressive music which overwhelms and practically extinguishes the great anthems of divine service. The Gloria in Excelsis was intoned by the "celebrant" immediately after the opening of tho Lord's Prayer of Office, and then handed over to the dexterous manipulations of the Choir. The text after desperate struggles, finally succumbed under the strife of tongues. to re-appear only semi-occasionally in brief snatches and syllabic hints, the prefatory passages alone distinctly reaching the surface. Never was the divine canticle more effectually extinguished under the joint co-operation of an ambitious composer a boisterous organist and an inarticulate choir. At the creed there were yet more painful improprieties, if not musical impieties. It was couched in the most ornate style of the Italian operatic composers, overladen with every species of meretricious feats in vocalisation, runs, high-vaulting intervals, warblings, and other extravaganzas of virtuosity; and especially during the Incarnatus est, the soprano soloist monopolised the all-subduing text with redoubted attempts at meretricious flippancies of vocal embellishments.

Mr. H. S. Lewis, Mus. Bac-Oxon., lately observed: Mendelssohn, as an organ composer, may be regarded as the founder and head of the modern German school. His six sonatas, when composed, marked quite an epoch in the composition of organ music, and the first is a typical and excellent specimen. The organ works of Merkel and Rheinberger are regarded as the greatest written by German composers within recent years. Both have proved themselves highly prolific writers, and the latter is still making use of his gifted powers.

Mr. C. E. Miller will give an Organ Recital at the Church of St. Augustine and Faith, Old Change, on each Thursday in October. commencing at 1.15 p.m.

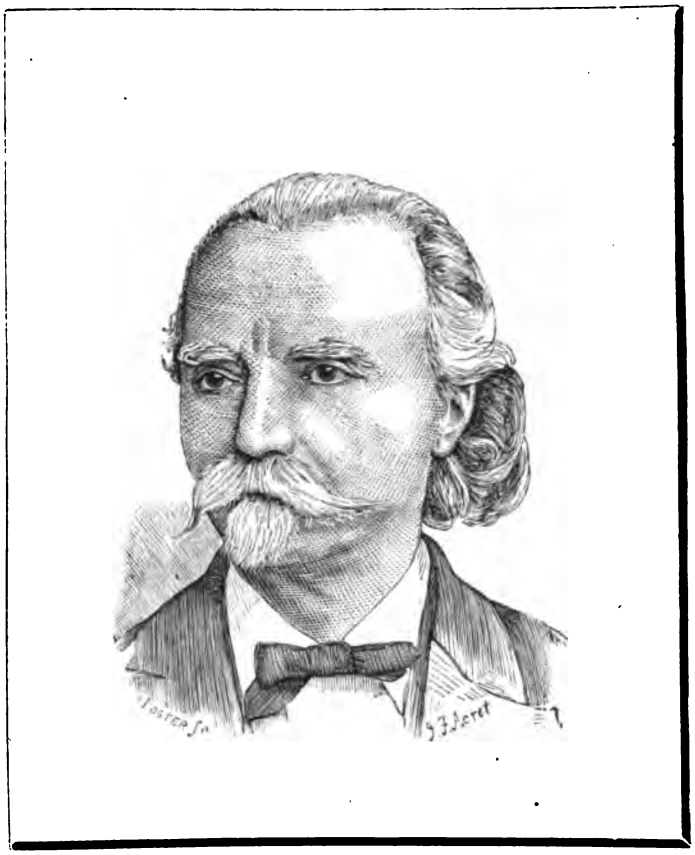
Anent congregational singing, Mrs. Bates, in her book "A year in the great Republic," says, in speaking of the satisfactory music to be heard in Montreal Cathedral, Canada: "A clergyman gave notice that he desired volunteers for a 'congregational choir,' that is for members who would join the first hour's practice of the regular choir, in order to strengthen and encourage congregational singing."

In connection with a question concerning the refusal of the officiating clergyman at a well-known city church to preach because the organist declined to dispense with the services of a certain chorister, it is stated that, at a vestry meeting, a letter was read from the Bishop of London, stating that the curate-in-charge was wrong in refusing to officiate, but that his claim was valid to say who should or should not sing in the choir. Parishioners resolved to request the Vicar to ask for the curate's resignation, and to appeal to the Bishop to investigate the dispute which had led to the dismissal of the congregation without the holding of service.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' CALENDAR.

Tuesday, October 16: The Library will be open from 7 to 9.
Tuesday, October 23: The Library will be open from 7 to 8. The adjourned annual General Meeting will be held the same evening, at 8.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon Secretary
95, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury.



MR. AUGUST MANNS.

(From a Photograph by Negretti & Zambra, Crystal Palace.

MR. AUGUST MANNS was born at Stolzenburg, near Stettin, in North Germany, on March 12, 1825. He received his early musical instruction at the hands, first, of the Village-musician of a neighbouring village, and later, of Urban, the Town-musician of Ebling, in the band of which town he played. After a few years' practice in regimental bands, he entered Gung'l's orchestra in Berlin, and was at length appointed conductor and solo-violinist at Kroll's Garden. In 1851, Mr. Manns became bandmaster to a famous infantry regiment at Königsberg, and, three years later, accepted the post of sub-conductor at the Crystal Palace, under Herr Schallehn. In 1855, after short engagements at Leamington and Edinburgh, he became conductor of the summer concerts at Amsterdam, but at the end of the same year, was appointed to the position of conductor of the Crystal Palace band. Immediately the wide artistic sympathies, the desire for progress and perfection which had distinguished Mr. Manns through his previous career, began to bear fruit. As he had striven to make all the work in which he had been engaged in every way worthy of the cause of art, so now he at once endeavoured to improve the musical work done at the Crystal Palace. The Saturday Concerts were instituted, at which programmes of great and varied interest were performed, and these concerts have now taken a permanently important place in the London musical season. The value of Mr. Manns' work it would be impossible adequately to estimate, for the benefit exercised on public taste by such untiring zeal is too subtle to be set down in words. In 1885, Mr. Manns succeeded the late Sir Michael Costa as the conductor of the Handel Festivals, a position in which he has amply proved that he is not less admirable as a choral than as an orchestral conductor.

THE OPERAS ON "BENVENUTO CELLINI."

BY ANDRÉ DE TERNANT.

Everyone acquainted with the "Vita di Benvenuto Cellini, scritta da lui medesimo." knows that the great artist's father wished to make him a musician, but he hated music, and apprenticed himself to a goldsmith. Although Benvenuto Cellini has left no mark in musical history, his adventurous and romantic life has formed the theme of several operatic works and inspired three French composers—Berlioz and MM. Diaz and Saint-Saëns. Before we discuss their respective operas, it will be best to enumerate for the sake of completeness the merely ephemeral productions. The first opera, founded upon an episode of Benvenuto Cellini's life, was composed by Franz Lachner, and was represented at Munich in 1837. Seven years afterwards, the late Sir Michael Costa's fellow student at the Naples Conservatoire, and life-long friend, Lauro Rossi, composed and produced two operas during the same year at Turin. The first was entitled "Benvenuto Cellini," and the other "Cellini A Parigi." The part of Ascanio in the last mentioned opera was composed expressly for the once celebrated French singer, Mdlle. de la Grange, who created some sensation in it at the time. The last Italian opera on "Benvenuto Cellini" was produced at the Politeama Theatre of Genoa, on May 20, 1887, and it is the work of a young composer named Bozzano. This opera met with a stormy reception, and a correspondent of the Paris "Gazette Musicale," wrote: "Le nouvel opéra. . . . a fait un naufrage complet. . . . En deux représentations, l'ennui en avait eu raison."

Berlioz's opera met with a not less stormy reception on the occasion of its first performance at the Paris Grand Opera in September, 1838, and the composer himself wrote: "They awarded the overture an exaggerated success and hissed all the rest with admirable unanimity and energy." The cause of this disgraceful failure belongs more to the annals of political than that of musical history. Berlioz, like Wagner during his sojourn in Paris, had the misfortune to be made the scapegoat of unprincipled politicians. But at the same time Berlioz, it must be admitted, was not very fortunate in the choice of his librettists, Alfred de Wailly and Auguste Barbier, although both enjoyed literary reputations based upon works of great merit. Their non-success was no doubt owing to their want of experience in stage matters. Alfred de Wailly's novel "Angelica Kauffman" is one of the most charming things ever written, while the part Auguste Barbier played as a poet during the revival of romanticism in France is now matter of history. Berlioz became acquainted with Barbier during his residence at Rome, while fulfilling his obligations as a winner of the Grand Prix de Rome, and the following extract is from the poet's reminiscences of the great French composer, related in his "Souvenirs Personnels": –

"The face of an eagle, with long hair. Generally silent and thoughtful, or else of an excessive gaiety, which bordered on absurdity. In some degree a Parisian ragamuffin, combined with the ridiculous and the sublime. He was born at Gôte-Saint-André, in the vicinity of Switzerland.

"I made his acquaintance at the Villa Medicis in 1832, during his sojourn at Rome as a pensioner of L'Académie de France. He already thought of translating into music Shakespeare's 'Romeo and Juliet,' and he proposed to me that I should write the libretto. Having other thoughts in my head, it was impossible for me to apply myself to the task at the time. Shakespeare was then his favourite poet, and he read his works incessantly. To this worship he subsequently added another idol, Virgil, and all his life was passed in the adoration of those two great geniuses.

"He possessed a marvellous artistic organisation, and everything which approached the sublime and beautiful moved him. I offer an anecdote which concerns me personally :—

"We both attended the funeral of an intimate friend of ours. During all the time of the service and at the cemetery the composer remained silent and sad. When we left the cemetery, he said to me, 'I am going home; come with me. We will read together some pages of Shakespeare.' 'Willingly,' said I. We ascended to his room, and, once installed, he read the scene of Hamlet at the tomb of Ophelia. His emotion was intense, and tears flowed copiously from his eyes. What the real loss did not affect at the time the æsthetic emotion produced. This does not mean that the artist was without sensibility and affection, but it depicts the power of imagination in his nervous organisation."

With regard to the music of Berlioz's opera, it was so fully commented upon in various musical journals and newspapers a few years ago, when Mr. Carl Rosa ventured to announce it as one of the novelties of the London season, that it would be useless on this occasion to say anything further about it. The following short analysis of the plot, extracted from a contemporary, will, however, enable the reader to compare, and judge the marked difference between, Berlioz's and M. Saint-Saëns' forthcoming opera.

"The scene is laid in Rome, under the reign of Pope Clement VII., and the action takes place during the Carnival season. The sculptor, Benvenuto Cellini, being engaged upon a bronze statue of Perseus for His Holiness, comes into contact with Balducci, the Papal Treasurer, with whose daughter Teresa he falls in love, and finds his passion returned. His suit, however, is not favoured by Balducci. This is the situation at the rise of the curtain. The action begins with a stolen interview of the lovers, in which Benvenuto persuades Teresa to elope with him; and it is arranged that when both are participating in the Carnival revels on the morrow, they shall recognise each other's disguise and make off. Unfortunately, the plot is overheard by a rival, Fieramosca, who at once resolves to adopt Benvenuto's disguise, be first in the field, and appropriate the lady himself. Balducci, at this point, returns home. Benvenuto escapes unseen; but Fieramosca is not so lucky, and only just saves himself from the summary vengeance of the enraged father's household and neighbours. Here ends the first act. The second act opens on a carnival scene in the Plaza di Colonna. Cellini and some of his pupils are drinking at a wine shop and find the reckonings too heavy for them, when Ascanio, a favourite student, brings some money paid in advance for the statue by the Pope. The amount does not satisfy Benvenuto, and, to be revenged upon his Holiness's niggardly treasurer, the sculptor proposes that one of the young men present shall simulate Balducci in a pantomime about to be played on the stage of one of the street theatres. Presently the treasurer appears, accompanied by his daughter, and sees himself held up to the laughter of the crowd as King Midas, with very long ears. Irritated beyond endurance, Balducci attacks the performers, and at this moment of the tumult, Benvenuto and Fieramosca, dressed precisely alike as monks, try to carry off Teresa each for himself. At once divining the trick on seeing his 'double,' Benvenuto draws his sword; but the rival runs away leaving a friend, Pompeo, to bear the brunt. Pompeo is quickly despatched, and then Benvenuto takes to flight closely pursued by the mob, while Ascanio conducts Teresa to his master's foundry. Upon this exciting scene the curtain falls for the second time. The third act—now considerably changed from what it was at first—opens in the foundry, whither Ascanio brings Teresa. The lady is in despair, when Benvenuto enters, and relates the manner of his escape from the mob. All this time Balducci and Fieramosca are on his track. They appear and reproach him with his misdeeds. Soon, however, a greater man arrives on the scene. He is Cardinal Salviati, the Papal Minister, who hears with astonishment and indignation of the sculptor's offence. Benvenuto must answer to the law, and another artist must cast the statue. Against this decree the artist protests, snatches a hammer, and is about to break the mould, when the Cardinal interferes and gives Benvenuto an hour in which to complete his task on pain of death. The artist accepts; but then the workmen come protesting that they have no more material to throw into the furnace. Intensely moved, Benvenuto orders them to sacrifice castings already completed by throwing them into the flames. This done, the liquid ore is released, and runs into the mould. Soon Benvenuto breaks the mould; the statue is seen in ravishing beauty, and the Cardinal, the artist, and all join in celebrating his genius. Then, upon a scene of general rejoicing, the curtain finally descends."

The librettists have drawn, partly from their own imaginations, and also from the memoirs of Benvenuto Cellini. The characters of Teresa and Balducci never existed in real life. The statue of Perseus was also made expressly for Cosimo de Medici, the Grand Duke of Tuscany, and not, according to librettists, for the Pope. However, notwithstanding these and other anachronisms, the libretto, if not exactly a masterpiece, can compare favourably with those of many other famous and better-known operas.

(To be continued.)

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Musical World."

Sir,—At this moment, when we are on the threshold of another musical season, the minds of those responsible for the conduct of our concert-giving organisations must be seriously exercised. What shall be performed? How secure the attendance of the public? All-absorbing questions, and more easily put than answered! Yet nowhere more than in this country, where if concerts cannot be made a financial success they must cease, is a satisfactory answer needed. And it is at once obvious that concert-goers and concert-givers are equally interested in the solution, neither being able to exist without the other. For the sake, then, of both parties let us for a moment consider the matter, with special reference to one of the most valued series of concerts we possess.

What, I wonder, would musical London say, if one morning it woke up to find that there were to be no more Monday and Saturday Popular Concerts!

Now, let it be clearly understood that there is no intention whatever of suggesting that these concerts are in any immediate danger of collapse. Happily, no such melancholy event need be anticipated. But, at almost any time during the past two winters it must have struck the most casual observer that the attendance, on either Monday evenings or Saturday afternoons, was not what it used to be. On the former especially the falling off has been most noticeable. To what shall this be attributed?

The Popular Concerts have been established now for thirty years. In the life of musical institutions (i.e., those which are dependent immediately upon the patronage of the general public) this is something more than the age of maturity, though in the absence of any natural limit to their existence we can hardly term it old age. Nevertheless, as with man, their tendency as they grow older is to lose virility and to fall into grooves. Everyone knows how, a few years ago, the Philharmonic Society, forgetting all but its antiquity and royal patronage, narrowly escaped a downfall. Fortunately, just in time, it was roused out of its drowsiness; and that which was threatened with extinction is now as full of vitality as ever. Here, in a lethargy arising from long continued working in one direction lies the danger to the Popular Concerts. The management, resting upon its oars, is almost in danger of forgetting that it cannot do this without risk of being carried down stream. Signs of some thing of the kind are visible in almost every department, conspicuously in the composition of the programmes. Scanning the announcements as they appear week after week during the season nothing, perhaps, so fixes itself on the mind as their lack of variety. Not only are the same quartets, trios, &c., found in the same places year after year, but some of them re-appear time after time during the same series of concerts. This could be easily illustrated by the mention of two or three works which are so repeated; but a fear lest, by introducing a comparison between one composition and another, the real issue should be obscured, forbids this. Should, however, the general accuracy of the statement be doubted, reference to the catalogue of works performed at the Popular Concerts will quickly reveal that the number of performances of some works is out of all proportion to those of others. That certain compositions should prove more to the taste of the general public than others is, of course, inevitable; but that repetitions are called for to the extent and in the somewhat narrow direction which at present obtains is very doubtful. Colour is lent to this view by the statement that the predilections of leading artists have influence on the choice of works to be performed. Pianists and violinists are credited with borrowing a hint from the prima donna, and imposing upon the management conditions which result in a very serious reduction of the interest their performances should excite. Nowhere is the want of change more apparent than in the repertory of the soloists, a fact so patent that its continued existence is unaccountable, except on the foregoing hypothesis.

Before quitting the subject of soloists, it will be convenient to enquire how it is that the talent of these is so frequently frittered away on trifles? The tendency of a pianist to be content with a performance of two or three bagatelles instead of a single work of larger calibre is increasing. A practice so fatal to the managerial interest should be checked at once. St. James's Hall is never fuller than on the occasion of a great pianist's performance of a great work. Another fruitful source of variety suggests itself—and I mention this with more hope of real reform being effected:—the admission of a larger number of compositions in which wind-instruments have a part. At present but a few works of this class are given; and, of these, the majority but very infrequently. During the past two seasons crowds have flocked to hear Schubert's "Octet;" yet, strange to say, until lately, it has only been heard at irregular intervals—sometimes as wide apart as two years. That an extension of the repertoire in this branch of chamber-music would bring to light works having the musical merit and popular attractiveness of Schubert's masterpiece is, of course, unlikely; but it may safely be predicted that the public would appreciate a departure from the ordinary routine so full of novelty.

The pianoforte duet—either for four hands on one piano or for two pianos—is another almost absolutely neglected province. Mozart, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Schumann, and more modern composers have written many such works.

There is one other point—the vocal music. Why is this restricted to solos? It was not always so: and, when it was otherwise, full concert rooms, mark you, were the rule rather than the exception.

Abolish monotony, I believe to be the answer to our question, whether propounded on behalf of the Monday Popular or other concerts. That it can be done easily, and that it is necessary, in the one case I have endeavoured to show: that it was done in another with much success proves the excellence of the plan.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Ninian Rumsey.

London, N.W., October 10, 1888.

A HAIR-DRESSER'S DIFFICULTIES.

From Birmingham Saturday Night.

It has been left to Mr. J. Watkins, the eminent Union Street hair-dresser, to discover a new virtue—a virtue, I believe as yet unknown to its patentees, in that already well-known and highly valued liniment, St. Jacob's Oil. A few days ago, the tonsorial one was hobbling about in an agony of mind and body, brought on by premonitory twinges in his foot, which experience warned him foreshadowed a touch of gout. Prompted more by curiosity than by any great faith in the efficacy of the treatment, he applied a dressing of St. Jacob's Oil to the suffering member, and the next morning, to the surprise of the household and his own delight, all traces of the complaint had vanished. This reads very much like a puff for a patent medicine, but it is nothing of the sort. I know nothing of the St Jacob's Oil people; we have never been favoured with an advertisement from them, and probably never shall be, but the above fact is simply narrated from motives of common humanity.

Mrs. G. Angold, 7, Maude-road, London, was afflicted with chronic rheumatism for four years. She found no relief from medicines, and was induced to use St. Jacob's Oil. One application reduced the swelling of the ankles and knees, and two more applications removed the pain.

Mr. J. Wilkinson, 88, Bentham Road, South Hackney, London, suffered from rheumatism in his feet and legs for twenty years. One bottle of St. Jacobs' Oil drove away all pain, and brought about an effectual cure.

Mr. Henry Ricketts, Trym Cottages, Westbury, Gloucestershire, was a great sufferer from rheumatism for over two years. His attacks grew so violent that he went to Bath Hospital to have the benefit of the mineral waters. In five weeks he left even worse, and his case was pronounced incurable. Then he used St. Jacob's Oil. One application entirely relieved him of pain; his health is now fully restored, and the disease has never returned.

The Christian Globe saye: "A man employed at Central Fish Market, London, was for three years helpless with rheumatism, and after having been sent to three different hospitals was declared incurable. After three days' use of St. Jacob's Oil, he could use his arm without pain. Continuing the use of it, all pain, swelling, and stiffness disappeared. He is now cured, and at work."

St. Jacob's Oil acts like magic. Its curative powers are simply marvellous. It conquers pain quickly and surely. It goes right to the spot. It cures when everything else has failed. A single trial will convince the most incredulous. It has cured thousands of cases of rheumatism and neuralgia which have resisted treatment for the greater part of a lifetime.

THE RUSSIAN OPERA COMPANY.

The Russian Opera Company, whose successful appearances in Manchester, Birmingham, and other large provincial centres have more than once been recorded in the MUSICAL WORLD, has at length reached London. Whatsoever is purely national in art is interesting, and in the present instance it had been expected that unusual interest would attach to the performances announced, for Slavonic music possesses features of a peculiarly individual kind; Russian opera, moreover, is so young a thing that western amateurs could scarcely fail to welcome its closer acquaintance, especially when offered with the completeness which was promised. It cannot be said, however, that the promises held out were adhered to. The Russian artists had failed to procure a theatre, and were compelled to accept the Albert Hall, where the first performance took place on Monday last. They are apparently not adepts in the difficult art of managing a concert enterprise The programme was badly arranged, it contained works which were anything but Russian, and was adhered to only in part. Nevertheless, the artists are of very considerable excellence, the chorus is good, and the orchestra fairly efficient. All the performers, however, seemed to be under an impression that the volume of sound produced must be in proportion to the size of the hall. M. Vladimir Lubimoff, for instance, has a magnificent voice, but he bawled Adolphe Adam's "Noel" as though it were a revolutionary song of the most bloodthirsty type. The most admirable feature of the programme was the delivery, by M. Michael Vinogradoff, of the baritone scena from Glinka's opera of "Ruslan and Ludmila," which was given at one of Mr. Henschel's Symphony Concerts last year. M. Vinogradoff has a grand voice, albeit marred by excessive vibrato, and he sang the number with the utmost expressive power. Madame Olga Pouskowa, who was the only lady vocalist of the evening, sang a valse air by Capri with much skill. Her voice is singularly rich and sympathetic in quality, and her style highly emotional and artistic. The chorus, as we have said, was excellent, though the selections given by them from Glinka's "Vie pour le Tsar" naturally suffered from the circumstances under which they were perforce given, and were by no means so striking as when the opera was given a few years since at Covent Garden. The orchestral items included Glinka's "Jota Aragonesa" and the same composer's "Dance Fantasia," which were given admirably. But what is to be said of the performance by forty-eight young ladies on twenty-four pianofortes? That the result was a tremendous noise need not be said; but we all knew that twenty-four pianofortes could produce this. It seemed scarcely worth while to demonstrate it in such a practical manner; and we can discover no other reason for the performance.

"THE YEOMEN OF THE GUARD."

That Mr. Gilbert and Sir Arthur Sullivan have, in their new opera, broken entirely fresh ground, can hardly be said with absolute truth. The composers of "Don César de Bazan" and "Maritana" have explored the same regions before them. It would, however, be ungracious to quarrel with either librettist or composer on that account. It is more to the purpose to recognise the unusual earnestness of purpose which underlies the new work. Mr. Gilbert has accustomed us for so long to expect from him only ingeniously absurd plots depending chiefly upon sophisms not less funny than elaborate, that we have almost forgotten that he is a poet of considerable power. Nor has it been always easy to feel that Sir Arthur Sullivan, certainly one of the most popular of living English composers, was doing work quite worthy of himself in writing operas which, however tempting and amusing, were but ephemeral after all. It has long been a reproach to us that we have never risen, in opera, above the level of Wallace and Balfe; and there were not wanting those who desired to see that reproach taken away. Whether the composer of the "Golden Legend" has enough of originality and power to introduce a new epoch in national opera, is not perhaps altogether certain; but at any rate "The Yeomen of the Guard," if it does not take any very decided step forward, is at least not retrogressive.

It would be of little use to repeat in detail the plot of a work which, as we have said, is not without reminiscences of an opera familiar to all English amateurs. Strictly as the Savoy secrets are kept, it has been generally known for some little time that the scene of the play was laid in, or rather outside, the Tower, in the time of Henry VIII. The hero is a certain Colonel Fairfax, who is under sentence of death for witchcraft. He is rescued from prison by the stratagems of Sergeant Meryll and his daughter Phœbe. Outside his cell, however, he is confronted by a new difficulty, brought about by the machinations of a villainous relative, and which can only be defeated by his instant marriage. A strolling singer, Elsie, is persuaded—for a small consideration—to act as temporary bride, and the marriage takes place, both the parties being blindfolded. After the ceremony, therefore, they do not recognise each other, and immediately fall in love: but each is married already, and it is not until the Colonel's pardon arrives, and he is able to declare his identity, that the course of love runs smoothly to its end.

It will be understood that in setting this story to music, Sir Arthur Sullivan had no need to abandon his old methods to any large degree. The same graceful melodies, and clever imitations of the old English madrigal and part-song, are still used. Among the best numbers should be mentioned the first song allotted to Phœbe, the charming unaccompanied quartette, "Strange adventure," and the trio for soprano, tenor and bass, "Alas, I waver to and fro," in all of which the composer's talents appear plainly. Sir Arthur, indeed, could scarcely have found a theme upon which he could descant, musically, with more spontaneity than this, which is in all its characteristics essentially English. The composer's predilection for English forms could here be legitimately indulged, and it is not surprising that he has produced a work so full of melodic grace as "The Yeomen of the Guard" undobtedly is. Of the performance itself we have little space to speak. Miss Geraldine Ulmar plays and sings charmingly as Elsie Mr. Grossmith in the part of Jack Point, the Jester, and Elsie's discarded lover, was admirable in every way, showing a depth and subtlety unusual even in himself; while Mr. Courtice Pounds, a young singer who filled the rôle of Fairfax, must be regarded as a decided acquisition. His voice and acting are alike excellent. Miss Brandram and Miss Jessie Bond were, as might be guessed by habitués of the Savoy, capital in their respective parts of Dame Carruthers and Phœbe. Sir Arthur conducted in person on the first night, and the reception of the new venture seemed to promise a plentiful share of popular approbation.

MADAME DE LLANA'S CONCERT.

To Madame De Llana belongs the honour of inaugurating the recital season. Simultaneously with the operatic performance at the Albert Hall on Monday, this clever lady gave a concert of chamber music at Princes' Hall. It is a thankless task to open a musical season, which must needs be well advanced before amateurs settle down into the routine of concert-going. To this, rather than to lack of interest in the programme presented, must be attributed the somewhat scanty attendance on Monday night. Madame De Llana herself is a pianist of ability, her technique being good, and her interpretation by no means inadequately expressive. In Schubert's Variations in B flat her powers seemed to find their fullest scope, although her best passages were to some degree blurred by a nervousness quite needless. Madame De Llana's other contributions included Chopin's Etude in C major and Schumann's "Traumeswirren," and she also joined Mr. Otto Bernhardt in a performance of the "Kreutzer" Sonata. Mr. Iver McKay, the vocalist, was in splendid voice, and gave the air, "Ah si ben mio," with great artistic power and finish. Mr. H. A. Brousil contributed violoncello solos, playing agreeably enough Davidoff's "Springbrunnen" and Chopin's Nocturne in E flat. But have we not already enough transcripts of the Polish master's work? Surely the Nocturne might now be left in peace.

PROVINCIAL.

BIRMINGHAM, October 8.

Great disappointment was felt in local circles, when the announcement was made that Sir Arthur Sullivan, the president of the Birmingham Midland Institute, who was to have delivered his presidential address at the Town Hall this evening, had been compelled to postpone his visit till Friday the 19th, on account of indisposition, caused by the great strain on his nerves consequent on the production of his new opera. The illustrious musician will be received by the Clef Club at their premises, and will honour the members by his presence at a Smoking Concert. The sudden postponement of this visit is much to be regretted, as the Mayor will hold an important reception at the Council House on Friday the 19th, to which the most influential citizens, many of whom are also members of the Midland Institute, have been invited. Our concert season is beginning in earnest. Two important concerts are on the list for next week. Messrs. Harrison will give the first of their subscription series on Monday next, when the following artists will appear: Madame Alwina Valleria, Mdlle. Antoinette Trebelli, Mdlle. Marie de Lido, Madame Antoinette Sterling, Mr. Henry Guy, and Mr. Barrington Foote. Solo pianoforte, Mons. Vladimir de Pachmann; solo violin, Miss Nettie Carpenter, and Miss Geraldine Morgan; solo violoncello, Mons. de Munck. Conductor, Herr Alois Volkmer. On Thursday next, Oct. 18, the Birmingham Festival Choral Society open their 29th concert series with Gounod's "Redemption," to be given with full band, organ and chorus of 450 performers. The following artists have been engaged for the principal parts: Madame Dotti, Miss Morley, Mr. Henry Piercy, Mr. Brereton, and Mr. Grice. Organ, Mr. Perkins; conductor, Mr. Stockley. The excellent military band concerts organised by Mr. Gilmer, which proved such an attraction last year, were resumed on Saturday last, and have lost nothing in artistic finish and perfect ensemble.

GLASGOW, Tuesday, October 9.

What may be termed the musical season in Glasgow opened last night with the performance of Mozart's "Don Giovanni," by the members of Mr. Augustus Harris's company. The conductor, Signor Arditi, was received with great enthusiasm, and before the overture the orchestra played "God Save the Queen." Being the first night of such an immense undertaking it would hardly be fair to severely criticise the performance, as at times the principals showed signs of not being acquainted with their parts. Signor D'Andrade was capital in the title rôle, and Mdlle. Ella Russell as Zerlina gave every satisfaction, and for the rendering of "La ci darem" in conjunction with Signor D'Andrade, was recalled twice. It was also necessary to repeat the "Andiam" passage. Signor Ravelli's impersonation of Don Ottavia was a feature of the performance, and for his interpretation of the airs "Dalla sua pace" and "Il mio tesoro" received well deserved encores. Signor Ciampi as Leporello, and Mdlle. Rolla as Donna Anna, did justice to their respective parts. Mdlle. Ponti as Donna Elvira did not seem at ease in the part. The prompter's voice at times was just the least bit too much heard. "Faust" is billed for to-night, with Mdlle. Macintyre as Margherita and Signor Ravelli as "Faust." Owing to severe indisposition Madame Trebelli was unable to fulfil her engagement, but in lieu thereof Mr. Harris has secured Madame Scalchi's services. Sir Charles Hallé and Madame Neruda (Lady Hallé) will give their annual chamber concert in the Queen's Rooms to-morrow evening, Wednesday, 10th inst. The programme is an attractive one, and should certainly fill the house.

To Musicians and Others.

For BUYING, EXCHANGING, or SELLING Books on all subjects, Art Objects, Musical Instruments, Home Pets, Domestic Appliances, or any article whatever of personal property, THE BAZAAR, EXCHANGE and MART is unequalled. It circulates largely throughout the kingdom, and private Ladies and Gentlemen have no difficulty in negotiating sales or exchanges without publicity and to the best advantage. Get a copy and judge for yourself. The Globe says:- "Like all grand conceptions, the process is remarkable for its simplicity." Price 2d., at all Newsagents, or copy sent for two stamps from the Office, 170, Strand, London, W.C.

PIANOS, PIANOS
Harmoniums, and American Organs,
ON THE THREE YEARS' SYSTEM
Pianos .. ... from 10s. 6d. per month.
Harmoniums ... " 5s. 0d. "
American Organs " 7s. 0d. "
Any Instrument sent home on receipt of first Instalment.
OUR UPRIGHT IRON GRAND, Trichord, Double Check Repeater Action, Celeste Pedal, 15s. per month.
This is a thoroughly sound and elegant Instrument, warranted in every respect.
Other Classes equally cheap.
Write for Catalogue to
SHENSTONE, SHENSTONE & CO.,
Steam Works: GRANGE ROAD, LEYTON, E.
Show Rooms: 70, Hackney Rd.; 37, St. Peter's St., Islington; & 29, Kennington Pk. Rd.

ADVANCES
ARRANGED on LIFE POLICIES, REVERSIONS, ANNUITIES, SETTLED INCOMES, and every kind of negotiable SECURITY.
BILLS DISCOUNTED.
W. AUSTIN & CO., BANK CHAMBERS, 44, HAMMERSMITH ROAD, KENSINGTON, W.

THE TRINIDAD
Cocoa and Chocolate Company,
Offices and Show Rooms: 35, Walbrook, London, E.C.
Works: Queen's Road, Battersea London, S.W.
Manufacturers of all kinds of COCOA and CHOCOLATE for the Wholesale and Retail Trades.
PRICE LISTS ON APPLICATION.

SPECIAL TINNED TUBES.
FOR
TUBULAR PNEUMATIC ORGANS.

MELLOWES & C°., LEAD PIPE WORKS, SHEFFIELD.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice.

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

Without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s, 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings
FOR
VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,
ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,

Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

Vins de Champagne

ARTHUR ROEDERER, Reims.
MAISON FONDEE 1876.

ESTABLISHED THREE QUARTERS OF A CENTURY.

A. S. MALLETT, ALLEN & CO.,
CONTRACTORS TO
HER MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE,
Type Music Printers,
LITHOGRAPHERS, &c.

PORTRAITS.
(Speciality.)
POSTERS.

WINDOW BILLS.
BOOKS.
CATALOGUES

STATIONERY.
SHOW CARDS
PLANS, &c., &c.

68 & 70, WARDOUR ST., LONDON, W.
TELEGRAPHIC ADDRESS—"ASMAL, LONDON."

CASSON'S
PATENT
Organ-Building System.

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c., See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart.
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The Late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A.
Mr. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—
CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN COMPANY, LIMITED,
DENBIGH.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Stndio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO.

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had but little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me, or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

To Mr. Ainsworth. BURNHAM-HORNER, F.R. Hist. S.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and Organ student who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music or organ arrangement, with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is, as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours, I. B. THORNTON,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly, HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.
To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilitate the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number), each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS,
BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

Ascherberg Piano Depot,

211, REGENT STREET, W.

Printed by A. S. Mallett, Allen & Co., 68—70, Wardour Street, W., and Published by William Pearce, at 138a, Strand, W.C.

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1836.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 67.—No. 42. SATURDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1888. PRICE {3d. Unstamped. 4d. Post Free.}

THE
KARN AMERICAN ORGANS

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,
WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs, equal to, if not surpassing all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

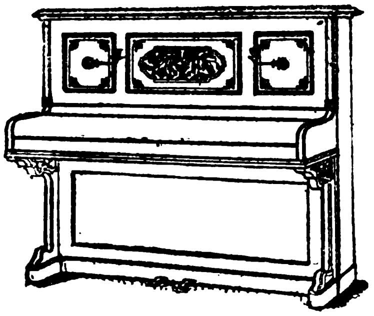
New Illustrated Catalogue and Price Lists Free of the
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:
THE SCHREIBER PIANO COMPANY,
3, NEWMAN MANSIONS, NEWMAN ST., LONDON, W.

W. G. THOMAS'S PIANOS!!

ARE the BEST and cheapest in the market. Professors and others will find an advantage by sending for the Free Illustrated lists. Splendid Iron-framed PIANOS, full-compass trichord, in Walnut Wood Cases, at popular prices. Packed FREE. Contracts taken for large quantities. Old Pianos bought for Cash, or taken in exchange.

W. G. THOMAS, Pianoforte Manufacturer,
Gospel Oak Grove, Malden Road, Kentish Town, London, N.W

PIANOS, PIANOS
Harmoniums, and American Organs,
ON THE THREE YEARS' SYSTEM



Pianos ..	...	from 10s. 6d.	per month.
Harmoniums ...	„	5s. 0d.	„
American Organs	„	7s. 0d.	„

Any Instrument sent home on receipt of first Instalment.

OUR UPRIGHT IRON GRAND, Trichord, Double Check Repeater Action, Celeste Pedal, 15s. per month.

This is a thoroughly sound and elegant Instrument, warranted in every respect.

Other Classes equally cheap.

Write for Catalogue to
SHENSTONE, SHENSTONE & CO.,
Steam Works: GRANGE ROAD, LEYTON, E.
Show Rooms: 70, Hackney Rd.; 37, St. Peter's St., Islington; & 29, Kennington Pk. Rd.

Special Notices.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SATURDAY CONCERT.—This Day, Oct. 20, at 3 o'clock.—Vocalist, Madame Valleria; Violinist, M. Johannes Wolff.—The Programme will include Overture to "Preciosa" (Weber); Symphony No. 2, in E flat (Goldmark); Concerto for Violin and Orchestra (Godard); "Tannhauser's, Pilgrimage" (Wagner); and Incidental Music to "The Merchant of Venice" (Sullivan).

CRYSTAL PALACE.—THIRD SATURDAY CONCERT.—October 27, at 3.—Vocalists, Miss Anna Williams, Miss Marie Curran, Mr. Edward Lloyd. The Crystal Palace Choir. Conductor, Mr. August Manns.—The Programme will include Concert-Overture, "In Autumn" (Grieg); "At the Cloister Gate" (Grieg); "Benedictus," for Violins (A. C. Mackenzie), first time; "Walther's Prize Song," Meistersinger (Wagner); "Offertoire," for Organ (J. F. Barnett), first time, to be played by the composer; "The Hymn of Praise" (Mendelssohn).—Seats, 6d. to 2s. 6d. Admission to Palace, 2s. 6d. before 5, 1s. after.

DRURY LANE.—AUGUSTUS HARRIS,
Lessee and Manager.
EVERY EVENING, at 7.30, concluding at 11.15.
A New Grand Spectacular Drama entitled,
THE ARMADA, a Romance of 1588.
By HENRY HAMILTON and AUGUSTUS HARRIS.
Box-office open daily from ten till six.

THE ARMADA at DRURY LANE.—Winifred Emery, Edith Bruce, Kate James, Ada Neilson, and Maud Milton; Leonard Boyne, Luigi Lablache, Edward Gardiner, Victor, Stevens, A. Beaumont, Henry Loraine, S. Dawson, Mervin Dallas, Stanislaus Calhaem, B. Robbins, F. Dobel, Basil West, W. Uridge, F. Harrison, U. Winter, Fitz-Davis, W. S. Parkes, H. Denvil, F. Thomas, F. Collins, and Harry Nichols.

THE ARMADA.—The unanimous praise bestowed upon this historical drama and grand spectacle by the leading Press of the country is nightly endorsed by the crowded audience which fill Drury Lane Theatre at each performance.

THE ARMADA.—It is impossible in an advertisement to give an idea of the volumes that have been written enthusiastically commending this play to the attention of the lovers of the artistic, thc beautful, and the true.

THE ARMADA.—In consequence of the great success of "The Armada," and, in response to numerous requests, another MATINEE will be gien on SATURDAY, October 20, at 1.30.

THE JODRELL (late Novelty) THEATRE, Great Queen Street, Long Acre, (Sole Lessee Mrs. Churchill Jodrell; Manager, Col. H. J. Sargent). RE-OPENS on MONDAY NEXT, OCTOBER 22, with, for the first time in London, by the RUSSIAN NATIONAL OPERA COMPANY, Rubinstein's Opera, THE DEMON; which will bc succeeded (in the course of their engagement at the Jodrell Theatre) by the following Operas:—"Rigoletto," "La Traviata," "Mazeppa," and "Life for the Czar." Box Office open from ten till five. Doors open at 7.30; overture at eight. No fees whatever. Cloak-room and programmes free.

HERR L. EMIL BACH has returned to London. Letters respecting engagements for Concerts in London and the Provinces to be addressed to his Secretary, 12, Kent Terrace, Regent's Park.

HERR L. EMIL BACH has a limited number of vacancies for pupils in the higher development of Pianoforte Playing.—For terms apply to his Secretary, 12, Kent Terrace, Regent's Park.

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, or £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the Manager of The Musical World, 138a, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, Hamilton Terrace,
St. John's Wood, N. W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.,
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, Finsbury Park Villas,
Green Lanes, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI,
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor).
12, Westbourne Park Terrace, W.

Mr. F. St. JOHN LACY,
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist (Baritone),
Fitzroy Mansion, Charlotte Street,
Fitzroy Square, W.

Mr. H. MARTIN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor).
Address—7, Wimpole Street,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mr. LOUIS N. PARKER, A.R.A.M.
(Composer, Conductor, Lecturer),
Sherborne, Dorset.

Mr. G. W. L. MARSHALL-HALL
Gives Lessons in Composition and Dramatic Singing,
151, Rucklidge Avenue,
Willesden Junction, N.W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts)
Bosworth House, Husband's Bosworth,
Rugby.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o Nolan & Jackson.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorio),
41, Welbeck Street,
Cavendish Square, W

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, Portsdown Road, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concerts and Oratorio),
29, Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio)
2, Sedgmoor Villas,
Private Lessons given. Camberwell, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
(Ballad, Oratorio, etc.)
31, Monmouth Road,
Bayswater, London, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, Norfolk Square, Hyde Park, W.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts),
56, Duchess Road,
Edgbaston, Birmingham.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 36, Albion Place, Hyde Park W.; or to Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul,
26, Old Bond Street, W.,
Or, 270, Elgin Avenue, Maida Vale, W.

Mr. IVER McKAY
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concerts),
1, Milner Square, London, N.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Old Trafford, Manchester.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio),
28, Devonshire Street, Islington, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
Gothic Lodge,
Lordship Lane, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, St. Stephen's Afenue,
Shepherd's Bush, W.

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
40, Stanley Gardens, Belsize Park, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Villa D'Este, Lake Como, Italy.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, Upper Mount Street, Dublin.

Mr. RAPHAEL GORDON
(Operas, Concerts, and At Homes).
c/o Signor Odoardo Barri,
60, Margaret Street, W.,
Or, 97, Talbot Road, Bayswater, W.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street.

Mr. FREDERICK KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, Canfield Gardens, S. Hampstead.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
Egremont, Croxted Road,
West Dulwich, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert),
63, Stafford Place,
Buckingham Gate, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, etc.),
30, Lancaster Road, Notting Hill, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorios, and Operas),
70, Portsdown Road, Maida Vale, W.

Harp.

Mr. W. T. BARKER
(Concerts, At Homes, Receptions),
49, Ebury Street, Belgravia, S.W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22a, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified." 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
"Yelbana," 99, Anerley Road,
Pupils visited and received. Anerley, S.E

Miss FREDA MARSDEN,
Solo Violinist (Concerts, At Homes, etc.),
Address. c/o Mr. Charles Woolhous
81, Regent Street,
London, W.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul (sole agent),
26, Old Bond Street, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella (Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties: 121, Adelaide Road. N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST,

Telegraphic Address: "Healey's Agency," London

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Madame WILSON-OSMAN (A.R.A.M.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert), (Soprano)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss FLORENCE EMERSON (Soprano)
(Concerts, Oratorio, At Homes, Etc)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey.
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W, B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss FALCONAR (Contralto),
(Oratorio Concerts Etc.)
24, Oppidans Rd, Primrose Hill, N.W
or Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor),
28, Belsize Road, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. HENRY PHILLIPS (Tenor),
Sole agent, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio)
Business Manager, W, B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone),
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W, B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Herr WALDEMAR MEYER (Solo Vlnst)
Concerts, At Homes, Etc.)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street,
Regent Street, W.

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC. Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter 1830. Under the immediate patronage of
The Queen and the Royal Family.
Principal—Dr. A. C. MACKENZIE.
The NEXT FORTNIGHTLY CONCERT THIS DAY, OCTOBER 20.
Metropolitan and Local Exams., 1889, Syllabus on application.
Tenterden Street, Hanover Square. JOHN GILL, Secretary.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC Kensington Gore, London. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.
President—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director—SIR GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL.D.
NEXT COLLEGE CONCERT will be in October.
Regulations and all information may be obtained of the Registrar, Mr. GEORGE WATSON, at the College. CHARLES MORLEY, Hon. Sec.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and EXAMINATION, etc., and the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music. Instituted 1872.
President, THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.

LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN INSTRUMENTAL AND VOCAL MUSIC.

Arrangements are being made for holding Examinations in Vocal and Instrumental Music at the following, amongst other, centres :—Nov. 5-10—Portsmouth, Herne Bay, St. Ives, Southampton, Dover ; Nov. 12-17—Bristol, Taunton, Exeter, Chippenham, Ilminster, Cheltenham, Brecon ; Nov. 19-24—Southport, Preston, Bolton, Salisbury, Bath, Hastings, Brighton, London, S.E.; Nov. 26—Dec. 1—Birmingham, Leicester, Northampton, Wolverhampton, Shrewsbury, Colchester, Yarmouth, King's Lynn, Reading ; Dec. 3-8—Liverpool, Carnarvon, Manchester, Chesterfield, Weymouth, Plymouth, Maidstone ; Dec. 10-15—London, Croydon, Surbiton, Rochester, Aldershot, Guildford ; Dec. 17-22—Leeds, Newcastle, Stockton, Carlisle, Newark, Bedford, Hull, York, Keighley, Halifax, Swindon, Stroud. These dates are subjeet to alteration.

Applications for particulars and regulations shou'd be made to the Secretary, Trinity College, London, or to the local Secretary of the centre. A complete list ofthe latter can be had from the College. By order of the Academical Board.
Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C. PATRON—THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.

Established to advance the cause of Church Music and the truest interests of its Professors.

Members of the Church of England and Ireland and the Episcopal Church of Scotland are eligible for Election.

Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates), 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members), 15s, per annum ; Life Subscription, 5 guineas.

Prospectus and further particulars may be abtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

MUSIC SCHOOL.—CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL for Girls (Limited), 6, Upper Baker Street, Regent's Park. —Head Music Mistress, Miss Macirone, late Professor of Royal Academy of Music. Fee, three guineas per term. Children from 8 to 13 allowed to begin and continue for two guineas per term. Pupils not in the School may pay an entrance fee of one guinea. The fees payable in advance. Pupils wishing to join Violin Class under Mdlle. Gabrielle Vaillant, to send in their names to Miss Macirone. F. J. HOLLAND, Chairman.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

PARENTS seeking ENGLISH or FOREIGN SCHOOLS, TUTORS, or GOVERNESSES for their children, are invited to write fully to
J. F. MOON, M.C.P.,
85, NEWMAN STREET, LONDON, W.,
Who will forward prospectuses and every requisite information, free of charge.

Particulars required are : age and sex of pupil, locality preferred (if any), and about what terms will be paid. Housekeepers, Nursery Governesses, and Companions are also recommended. Hours 11 till 3. Saturdays closed

To Orchestral and Choral Societies.

ALFRED MAPLESON,
47½, LEICESTER SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
(Opposite the Alhambra).
Music Librarian and Copyist to H.M. The Queen, also the Philharmonic Society, Richter, Sarasate Concerts, &c. LENDS ON HIRE Orchestral and Vocal Music of every kind—OPERA, CONCERTS and FESTIVALS supplied.
SOLE AGENTS IN LONDON FOR
RICHARD WEICHOLD'S TESTED (DRESDEN) VIOLIN STRINGS.
Which surpass all others, See Testimonials from Joachim, Carrodus, Sarasate, &c.
MUSIC COPYING A SPECIALITY.

SPECIAL TINNED TUBES.
FOR
TUBULAR PNEUMATIC ORGANS.
MELLOWES & CO., LEAD PIPE WORKS, SHEFFIELD

SODEN MINERAL PASTILLES.
TRADE MARK
FOR THROAT IRRITATION COUGHS & COLDS.
"9, HARLEY STREET,
"I regard them as extremely valuable in obstinate Catarrhal affections of the Throat."
MORELL MACKENZIE, M D
FOR BRONCHITIS ASTHMA & CATARRHAL AFFECTIONS.
SPECIALLY RECOMMENDED BY Sir Morell Mackenzie
WHOSE TESTIMONIAL IS WITH EACH BOX

WALTER BACHE SCHOLARSHIP.

It is proposed to close the Subscription List of the above in October. Intending Subscribers are requested to send their names at once to the Hon. Secretary, In order that they may be included in the Hon. Treasurer's Statement of Accounts, which will be issued as soon as possible after that date. Those who have already kindly promised donations, but have not yet paid them, will oblige by forwarding them either to the Hon. Treasurer, Mr. Alfred Littleton, 1, Berners Street, W.; or to Mr. C. A Barry, Hon. Secretary, Gloucester Lodge, Laurie Park, Sydenham.

DUCHESS MARIE BOUQUET.

ADELINA PATTI'S FAVOURITE PERFUME.

DRAYCOTT LODGE, KING'S ROAD, FULHAM, S.W.
June, 13th, 1888.

Gentlemen—I beg to thank you for the sample bottle of "Duchesse Marie." I shall feel much obliged if you will send me a case of a dozen bottles, as I like it very much.
Yours faithfully, ADELINA PATTI.

2/6, 3/6 and 10/- per Bottle,
SHARP BROS., 12, Southampton Row, London, W.C.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.
HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT
These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE, and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be of the greatest efficacy in every form of disease. Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.
Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT,
78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.
N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 3, or by letter.

THE RIGHT HON. LORD KNUTSFORD, G.C.M.G. Engravings from the original Portrait of Lord Knutsford, by J. F. Acret, are now being issued. Steel Line Engraving, by Harold Bourne. Artist's proof, £1 1s., Enfield House Studio, Windmill Hill, Hampstead.

TO THE LONDON MUSIC TRADE.

ANY Firm having a Claim or Accounts against the late Mr. MARTIN MULLER, late Conductor of the Liederkranz, are requested to forward particulars of the same to Mr. THEODORE MULLER, 7, High Street, East Grinstead.

Musical World Portraits.

OCTOBER 27 -	HERR WALDEMAR MEYER.
NOVEMBER 3 - - - - -	MADAME LILIAN NORDICA.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1888.

⁂ MSS. and Letters intended for publication must be addressed to "The Editor." Rejected MSS. cannot be returned unless accompanied by stamped directed envelope.

⁂ Advertisements and business communications generally should be addressed to the Manager (Mr. WILLIAM PEARCE), whose receipt—with the sole exception of the Proprietor's—for amounts due since August 1, 1888, will alone be recognised. Advertising, Publishing, and General Offices : 138*a*, Strand, London.

Facts and Comments.

It would be interesting to know whether the following advertisements emanate from competent and qualified teachers, or from ambitious students or scholars :—

"Pianoforte taught ; terms 6d. an hour ; adults, children ; private lessons."

"Music, French, singing taught, acquired abroad, 4d. lesson, morning or afternoon engagement, songs accompanied."

The above are taken from a paper circulating in one of the most artistic suburbs of London.

It is to be feared that some evil-disposed person has been "larking" with our estimable contemporary, the Leipsic "Signale." It recently quoted from an English paper "Fire and Water" (sic), an article descriptive of a new patent theatre-stall. At the side of the seat, according to the veracious journal, there is an electric knob; when this is touched the seat sinks through the floor on to an endless leather belt, which carries it and its occupant into the open air! This is truly a charming invention, of which enterprising managers will do well to take note. At present, the weary spectator who desires to breathe fresh air during the entr'acte is compelled to squeeze past frowning matrons, whose gowns too often bear traces of his transit. This will be done away with, and we shall instead behold the entire audience sinking gracefully through the floor, to be wafted triumphantly into the street. But—may we be forgiven for the blasphemous thought—can it be that the good editor of the "Signale" has been the subject of a nightmare, induced by a heavy supper after the last act of "Faust?"

In the course of a highly appreciative and interesting letter to the Morning Post on the subject of Russian music, Mr. W. R. S. Ralston pleads earnestly for the Russian Opera Company now in London, and bewails the meagre support which has hitherto been accorded them. But the genial Vice-President of the Folk-Lore Society forgets that while it was not in Mr. Alexandroff's power to command success, he did not even act so as to deserve it. The shilling book of words (worth by the way, about twopence) included works which were not sung, and the names of singers who didn't appear, besides works which were not Russian, but which were given though no one wanted to hear them. Then those 24 pianos—but stop! let us hear Mr. Ralston: "I have seen in my life many strange things, but nothing so strange as 48 lady pianists, playing with 96 hands on 24 Brinsmead pianofortes, I have ever seen or heard before." This will readily be granted, but when the writer goes on to say "But I am pleased to add that the result was delightful," musical readers at least may be excused for utilising the opinion as a standard by which to test the value of Mr. Ralston's musical criticism generally. De gustibus, &c., of course, and wide sympathies are much to be commended, but it is difficult to understand how appreciation for the freedom and emotional power which characterises Sclavonic music generally can co-exist with a toleration for the soulless clatter and mechanical precision of the pianistic feat referred to.

The effective and admirably scored "Scene de Ballet," given successfully on Saturday last at the Promenade Concerts, brought to the front an English composer, Mr. Edwin Evans, whose works call for wider recognition. The work consists of the following characteristic movements: "Lever de Rideau," "Pas Seul," "Ländler," "Ecossaise," and "Finale." The different tit-bits for leading instruments, the bright orchestration, rhythmic power and varied interest of this genuine piece of programme music, should secure for it a wide appreciation.

A statue of Shakespeare erected on a Paris boulevard! If this be not a sign of the coming "Parliament of Man, the Federation of the world" we should like to know the reason why! True, the statue has been paid for by an Englishman, Mr. William Knighton, but what of that? The site is on French soil, and the gift has been formally accepted by the Municipal Council of Paris. On this occasion the French capital has justified her claim to be considered the leader of European thought. Men of the calibre of Shakespeare are of no nationality. If they belong to anything less universal than mankind it is only as representatives of a whole race that they can be claimed by any division of earth's inhabitants. The Gaulois has interviewed several literary celebrities on the subject. M. Meilhac remarked, "Where in London is to be found a statue of Molière?" and M. Aurelien Scholl struck home when he said "From the commencement of the century the mention of an Englishman made a Frenchman clench his fists. Who knows now but that in 1988 one of the Paris squares will possess a statue of Richard Wagner!"

The City of the Violet Crown has found her Samson Fox, in the person of M. Singros, a rich Athenian who has not once nor twice, distinguished himself by his liberality as a patron or art. He has just announced his intention of building a theatre in Athens, at a cost of a million and a half francs. The theatre, which will bear the name of the queen of Greece, will be opened in a few weeks, on the occasion of the King's jubilee, and the inauguration of the National Exhibition, and it will be used both for musical and dramatic performances, directed by MM. Lassalle and Charlet, who will take their companies from Paris. Of such munificence as this it need only be said that it is worthy of a son of the "Mother of Arts."

Our American cousins indulge not seldom in talk of exceeding altitude concerning the high standard of musical taste and performance which prevails amongst themselves. The latest story from Boston is undeniably "tall," but it is at least worth quoting. It appears that on the morning of Saturday, Sept. 15, the ticket-office of the hall in which the Boston Symphony Concerts are given was besieged by a small crowd of men, who took up their places at 9 a.m. for the sale of rehearsal tickets, which began on the morning of the following Tuesday. From Saturday till Tuesday, then, these enthusiasts waited, sleeping as best they could, and having refreshments brought to them by admiring, if less heroic friends. And this, be it remembered, was only for tickets of admission to the final rehearsal, the tickets for the first concert itself being sold by auction. The story is perhaps not sufficiently authenticated to be used as a text for dogmatic moralisings; but it is at least permissible to enquire if there is any likelihood that such a story will be told about Mr. Henschel's Symphony Concerts at St. James' Hall. The wildest romancer would hardly have dared to invent it concerning the last series; and it remains to be seen if the stolid apathy which then prevailed has given place, in any appreciable degree, to the sympathy which should be accorded to so courageous an enterprise.

The programme of the Vienna Court Theatre for the coming season will contain Saint Saens' "Henry VIII.," Berlioz's "Les Troyens," and a new opera, "Elfriede die Königsbrant," by R. Fuchs.

During the next season of German opera in New York, "Tannhaüser" will be given with the "Venusberg" ballet music, composed for Paris. The title rôle will be taken by Niemann. New York will thus, in the matter of the Venusberg scene, forestall Bayreuth—not entirely to the credit of the latter.

It appears to be finally decided that M. Jean de Reszke will create the leading rôle in "Ascanio," the forthcoming opera by M. Saint Saëns, some anticipatory account of which appears in another column. The part of the Duchesse d'Étampes will be taken by Mme. Adiny.

Madame Pauline Lucca announces her intention of retiring from the stage. She will, it is understood, appear during the approaching season at the Vienna Opera, and will afterwards make a tour in America, where she will give a series of fifty concerts, for each of which she will receive £1500. When these engagements have been fulfilled, Madame Lucca proposes to found a school of music at Viennese. This is good news for the rising generation of Vienna, who could hardly have a better exemplar, but it will scarcely be thought so by those who have been accustomed to regard Madame Lucca as one of the most distinguished operatic artists of the day.

Mr. Ludwig, the well-known baritone, is arranging a concert tour in Ireland, to be followed by a series of concerts in the United States.

The Bohemian Musical Society will give their first concert of this season on November 1, at the Crystal Palace. Miss Effie Clements, Miss Eleanor Rees, Mr. J. Dalgety Henderson, and other popular artists will take part.

Mr. William Nicholl's first chamber concert will take place at Prince's Hall, on the evening of November 1. A novel feature will be the "Euterpe" quartet of male voices, consisting of Messrs. Nicholl, Arthur Thompson, Arthur Oswald, and B. H. Grove. Miss Louise Phillips, Madame Isabel Fassett, and Miss Lucy Riley are the other contributors to a programme of unusual interest, and Mr. Nicholl will introduce, for the first time in London, Grieg's cycle of songs, "Reminiscences of Mountain and Ford."

THE COPYRIGHT (MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS) ACT, 1888.

It cannot be too widely known that a useful little Act was passed last Session to protect the public from vexatious proceedings for the recovery of penalties for the unauthorised performance of musical compositions, by which it is enacted that the penalty or damages to be awarded upon any action or proceedings in respect of any unauthorised representation or performance of any musical composition shall be in the absolute discretion of the court or judge before whom the proceedings shall be tried, and the costs of such proceedings are also in the discretion of the judge; and it is also provided that unless the occupier of any place at which an unauthorised performance be given shall wilfully permit such a representation he shall not be liable to any penalty. The Act does not, however, apply to the performance of any opera or stage play in any theatre or other place of public entertainment duly licensed.

THE OPERAS ON "BENVENUTO CELLINI."

By André de Ternant.

(Concluded.)

We now come to the history of M. Diaz's "Benvenuto Cellini"—an opera which has never been performed on the stage. In these days of inaction on the part of operatic managers, it is by no means surprising that a work which, according to the judgment of many eminent French musicians and critics who saw the manuscript, evinced talent of a very high order, should be consigned to oblivion. But, considering that in the prospectuses of various speculations the work has been announced for production several times, it seems strange that merit is suffered to pine in obscurity, perhaps in favour of less-talented contemporaries. As it is impossible under the circumstances to give a detailed account of the opera, a few words concerning the composer's career may interest the reader. M. Diaz was born at Paris on the 27th of February, 1837, and is the eldest son of that famous painter who was one of the most fervent disciples of the revival of the romanticism in France. On October 6th, 1852, he entered the Paris Conservatoire, his masters for harmony and composition being Reber and Halévy, and, after leaving that institution, he devoted himself entirely to composition. We first hear of him as a composer in 1865, when he brought out a comic opera called "Le Roi Candule," which had some success at the time, but has since fallen into oblivion. In 1869 three prizes were offered by the French Minister of Fine Arts for the three best operas sent in for judgment, and the production of the successful works was guaranteed at the Grand Opéra and the Opéra Comique and the Théâtre Lyrique respectively. M. Diaz won the first prize for his opera, "Coupe du Roi de Thule"; but the work, when subsequently performed at the Grand Opéra, had little success. With the exception of a few songs and pianoforte pieces of minor importance, the works mentioned are, at the present time, all that is known of the composer of the shelved "Benvenuto Cellini."

The libretto of M. Saint-Saens's forthcoming opera is founded by M. Louis Gallet on a drama of M. Paul Meurice, which was first performed at the Porte-Saint-Martin Theatre on April, 1852. The play itself was dramatised from the same author's novel, "Ascanio" (which originally appeared anonymously in the pages of a Parisian newspaper), expressly for the once celebrated actor, Mélingue, who was also a painter and sculptor of some talent. Having already appeared as a painter in a play called "Salvator Rosa," Mélingue thought he might utilise his other hobby to advantage, and it was solely owing to his suggestion that the play was called into existence. But, apart from this circumstance, it achieved a deserved success on its own merits. A few days before the production of M. Meurice's drama at the Porte-Saint-Martin Theatre, Jules Janin received a letter from Liszt, announcing the successful production of Berlioz's opera at Weimar. Berlioz himself remarked that the "excellent Liszt was everything adorable in the way of goodness, abnegation, zeal and devotion," and the following letter from the noble hearted artist fully confirms these words:—

"'Honneur aux maitres ciseleurs! Gloire aux belles choses et place pour elles!'[*] 'Benvenuto Cellini,' representé hier 20 mars, restera debout et de toute sa hauteur ici. C'est sans puff qu'on peut informer du succés de cet ouvrage Londres et Paris. Je remercie bien sincerément l'auteur du noble plaisir que m'a causè l'étude attentive de sa partition. C'est là à la fois de la ciselure splendide et de la statuaire originale et vivante. Tout ce qu'il y a d'intelligent et de musical à Weimar suit les représentations de Benvenuto avec sympathie et admiration."

M. Meurice's drama is divided into five acts, and eight scenes, seven of which will be retained in the opera: Le Roi chez l'Ouvrier, L'Attaque du Nesle, La Statue d'Hébé, Les Lis de Diamants, Fontainbleau (ballet), La Châsse des Ursulines, Le Jupiter. The scene of the casting of the statue of Hercules has been omitted, on account of its great similarity with that of the founding of Perseus in Berlioz's opera, by the desire of Saint-Saëns, who wishes the vast difference between the two works to be as plainly marked as possible. Pending the publication of the score and the libretto, the following analysis of the drama will convey some idea of the character of the plot and its incidents.

Sir Walter Scott remarked in the introduction of his novel "Peveril of the Peak," "In a story, where the greater part is avowedly fiction, the author is at liberty to introduce such variations from actual fact as his plot requires, or which are calculated to enhance it;" and the French dramatist has certainly not "overestimated a romancer's privileges and immunities," as regards the trustworthiness of the great Italian artist's memoirs. The action takes place during Benvenuto Cellini's first sojourn in Paris, and the apprentice Ascanio, who accompanied him thither and remained there when his master returned to Italy, is an even more interesting personage in the play than the great artist himself. Ascanio has the misfortune to suffer from the amorous persecutions of the Duchess d'Etampes, who, though the favourite mistress of King Francis the First, continually pays her addresses to the young artist, and, at last, failing in her designs, sends a letter arranging a secret interview with him. The young apprentice himself is so madly in love with the daughter of the grand prevôt, d'Estourville, the young and charming Colombe, that he does not pay the least attention to the wily charms of the duchess, and fondly imagines that the mysterious billet-doux comes from his Colombe. Benvenuto Cellini, who is a man of experience, is already acquainted with the duchess's manner of intrigue, and knowing full well that her caprices often bring misfortune, he determined to accompany his pupil to the place of meeting. He recognises the duchess under her mask, entreats Ascanio to stand aside a moment, discloses himself, and unveils the mission of the king's unfaithful mistress. The duchess, who is furious on being discovered, declares mortal war against Benvenuto, and retires in despair on seeing Ascanio fall on his knees before the beautiful Colombe. Ascanio, on meeting his beloved, does not trouble himself in any way about the masked lady from whom he has received the billet-doux, and who quarrels with his master. Benvenuto himself, it must be mentioned, has during all this time a mistress named Scazzone, who is also the sister of his arch-enemy, the Duchess d'Etampes. He loved his mistress after his own manner, that is to say, rather coolly, and much less than his art. Scazzone, however, for the want of better, and knowing that it is all the great artist could bestow, was contented. The next important incident takes place in the neighbourhood of the Tour de Nesle. It must be stated in passing that King Francis had recently honoured Benvenuto with a visit in his studio, which he found too small for the great artist's purposes, and he granted him the Petit Nesle as a place of residence. But when Benvenuto subsequently attempted to enter his new home, d'Estourville, who then occupied it, slammed the door in his face, and sent some archers to drive him from the place. However, Benvenuto did not suffer this to interfere with his plans of aggrandisement, for what he could not obtain by fair means, he effected by means of violence; and he immediately summoned his workmen and pupils together, and with them besieged the Petit Nesle. After this summons to assault and vengeance, the Petit Nesle was rapidly annihilated, and the bustle and shouts of Vive François 1er! le petit Nesle est pris, of this scene created some sensation during the run of the drama in Paris. To return to the intrigue of the play: the duchess complains of Benvenuto to the king. The good-natured monarch, however, always anxious for the renewal of good friendship among the members of his court, commands Benvenuto to go and offer the duchess a beautiful jewel as a token of reconciliation. With apparent distress he goes and demands an interview, which she dares not refuse, but while waiting in the antechamber, he hears the duchess's attendants laughing at him. His fury then knows no bounds, and after breaking open the door, he crushes the precious jewel under his feet. On hearing the noise the duchess arrives on the scene, and mutual insults take place between them, which subsequently end in an encounter with the king himself and the disgrace of Benvenuto. Happily for him, the emperor Charles the Fifth passes through en route for Flanders, and being a great patron of the arts, invites Benvenuto to his court. The great artist is willing to accept the gracious invitation, but King Francis, who now regrets having admonished Benvenuto, and having cause for suspicion against the emperor, prevails upon the sculptor to remain in France. Benvenuto is much impressed with the noble generosity of of the king, and promises to cast his great statue of Hercules. Peace and good-will being established, he immediately sets to work, and during three days and three nights neither sleeps nor eats. All at once the fire goes out, and the metal runs short. A traitor named Pagolo, who has been bribed by the duchess, has concealed the fagots and disturbed the mould. Brulez les meubles, cries Benvenuto; and the workmen run and fetch all Benvenuto's valuable furniture and works of art and fling them into the furnace and the mould. The fire was relighted, the mould is full, and the statue of Hercules is completed. However, Benvenuto's troubles unfortunately do not end with this triumph. It was during his abode at the Petit Nesle that he saw for the first time Colombe walking in the solitary shades of her father's garden. He was instantly struck with her face and her gentle and modest carriage. Unhappy in his passion, and unable to banish it from him, he immediately sought to gratify it, and took her for his model of Hebe. Shortly after its completion Ascanio enters, and recognises Colombe. Scazzone on seeing the statue is also seized with jealousy, and, not only in her own interest, but also that of her sister the duchess, meditates the removal of Colombe. Amidst the confusion, Ascanio carries off Colombe from the care of her father, who wishes to marry her to another man, and conducts her to the studio. An explanation takes place between Benvenuto and Ascanio. Mes enfants, the great artist says with suppressed emotion, Je vous bénis, et je me dévoue à votre bonheur. The question now is how to conceal Colombe. At length, however, they hit upon the ingenious idea of concealing her in a massive sculptured shrine, which is immediately conveyed to the convent of the Ursuline nuns. The duchess learns the secret from her sister Scazzone, and she arranges matters in such a way that the authorities at the convent allow the shrine to remain unopened for the space of three days. Her jealous apprehensions being relieved by this unexpected circumstance, she resolves to take Benvenuto under her own immediate patronage, and induces her friend d'Estourville to consent to the marriage of his daughter with Ascanio. The father is willing enough, but only on the condition that his daughter, who has been missing during three days, shall be restored to him. Everything being arranged, the marriage contract is signed, and Colombe enters, conducted by Ascanio. The duchess, at the sight of Colombe, utters a wail of lamentation, and shrieks, Qui donc est dans la châsse? Benvenuto comes to the foreground, opens the shrine, and drags out the corpse of Scazzone. The Duchess then discovers that, instead of her rival, she has murdered her own sister. The subsequent scene is full of pathos.

---

[*] These words are from a chorus in the second act of Berlioz's opera.

Benvenuto —"Scazzone, ma chère bien aimée, oh! reviens à ma voix, ranime-toi à mon amour.—Non, rien! impuissant!—Allons donc, sculpteur, crèateur, toi qui prétends donner l'éternité à tes œuvres, rends donc seulement le souffle de quelques années à cette beauté toute faite de dieu! Scazzone! entends-moi, reponds-moi! Viens! nous partons! Florence! l'Italie! (Posant doucement la tête glacée et se dressant sur ses genoux, pâle et morne) Non, Je m'en retournera seul, saignant et sombre. C'est le sort."

Le Roi.—"Comment! Benvenuto, et tes travaux! tes grands œuvres!"

Benvenuto.—"Sire, je ne sculpterai plus qu'un ouvrage en France: le tombeau de cette enfant."

It will be seen from the above description that the material on which the dramatic action is based is admirably laid out for musical treatment, nor is there any doubt that the new opera of M. Saint-Säens, whose versatile genius has enabled him to take high rank among the composers of the modern French school, will tend to augment the deservedly high reputation he already enjoys. Meanwhile, Qui vivra verra.

PROFESSOR SIR GEORGE ALEXANDER MACFARREN.

His Life and Work.

A Paper Read before the College of Organists by
Henry C. Banister.

(Continued from page 799).

I believe there is evidence that he was, at one time by no means enthusiastic, as he afterwards was, about Sebastian Bach; but advanced as he became more acquainted with his works: as, indeed, who will not advance whose opinion is worth anything? In like manner, I believe that Macfarren expressed himself approvingly, at one time, concerning the Tonic-Sol-Fa system of teaching; but, as is pretty well-known, was somewhat strong in his opposition to it in later years, notwithstanding his great and deserved esteem for its energetic promulgators, the Messrs. Curwen, father and son. I refer to all these matters of opinion, not to insinuate that Macfarren was fickle or unsettled in his judgments; but to indicate that there was that healthy element in his mind, a readiness to re-consider, and, if need be, on sufficient grounds to his thinking, to reverse or amend those judgments. In fact, almost to the last his seemed to be a growing mind, ever ready for new impressions; and he was, all along, as he insisted on it every true artist should be, a student all along. I well remember a little incident illustrating this. It fell to my lot to express thanks to him, on behalf of Academicians, at the close of one of his courses of analytical lectures; and, in doing so, I spoke of his kindness in permitting us to become fellow-students with himself of the noble works which he had been discussing. He quite started, and his face lighted up with pleasure at this way of putting it; and, afterwards thanked me specially for what he was good enough to term the felicitous way of stating the matter. He liked just to be thought of as one with us all, only perhaps a little further on, through favouring circumstances, and knowing a little more about some things: always ready, humbly, to learn from anyone.

And yet, how much he knew! what vast stores of information were packed in that receptive, retentive, and reflective brain! I think I never knew anyone who might more appropriately be termed a walking encyclopædia. And this was so wonderful when one remembers the sad hindrance to the acquisition of knowledge which would have seemed to lie in his way, as so insurmountable, had not his constant readiness, and certain competence, to impart information, from his wonderful acquisitions, caused one well-nigh to forget that he was not all eyes, as well as all ears, and all brains.

In the preface to my recently published Lectures on Musical Analysis, I mention the fact that, after the preparation, and even putting into the printer's hands, some of those Lectures, I was gratified, on hearing Professor Macfarren lecture on some of the same works, to find my own views confirmed by so eminent an authority. He wrote to me, thanking me for the book, and said: "I am glad you allude to me as a fellow-worker on the same subject, and I am sure that the more we give our best energies to its exposition, the more will it gain the respect it deserves, since each of us helps to confirm what may be stated by his friends." Such a letter exhibits the entire absence of jealousy from the mind of the single-purposed Professor; and it is just one of many which I doubt not could be discovered, manifesting the same trait in his character. When, several years ago, I had the honour of reading a paper before the Association upon "some of the underlying principles of structure in musical composition," he was unable to be present; but, on the paper appearing in print, he wrote to me:—"It pleases me very greatly, and I wish it may have many readers for the sake of the good effect it is capable of producing. I concur fully in your views, and these are so happily expressed as to make them interesting even to readers who have small knowledge of the subject. Let me then thank you for casting a bright light on an important matter. Yours with friendly regards, G. A. M." So unsolicited and spontaneous a testimony, not in acknowledgment of any complimentary present, was peculiarly gratifying and valuable, and shows not only the kindliness of the man, but how deeply interested he was in any effort to promote elevated views of the Art. And again, on the other hand, when he himself read a paper before this same Association upon the life and work of Cipriani Potter, I was greatly disappointed at being prevented by illness from being present; especially as being among the now comparatively few and fast diminishing number of Potter's pupils, it would have been expected that I should add some reminiscences of the dear old man, in the conversation after the reading of the paper. I wrote to Professor Macfarren to that effect; and received this reply:—

"My dear Banister,—It would indeed have been a pleasure to have had the interesting additions you might have made to the too little I could say of our dear friend Potter, and I regret as much the loss of these as the illness that prevented your presence at the meeting. I deplore that the master is at present less represented in his own works than in those of his pupils; and that persons who knew not himself have now small chance of knowing his merit, and on this account it behoves us who retain vivid recollections of his working and its work to do all we may to impress our memory on the consciousness of others."

I must be forgiven if these extracts from the Professor's correspondence seem to be too personal in their reference clustering round myself. I presume that one reason that I have been so singularly honoured as to have the present task assigned to me is that it is known that I am able to furnish personal reminiscences such as these; and even these I would not cull or quote but for the light that they help to shed upon his mind, and friendly character.

In my enumeration of the learned Professor's literary labours, I have omitted all reference to those which may be considered by far the most important of them—namely, his theoretical works. I have purposely deferred all mention of these, partly because it is not their literary character which claims attention; and, still further, because the consideration of them comes under a much more comprehensive head, and one of the most momentous in his career and work: that of his position as a theorist, and a theoretical educator. His books of a purely theoretical and educational character are: (1) Rudiments of Harmony; (2) Six Lectures on Harmony, delivered before the Royal Institution; (3) Eighty Musical Sentences, illustrating the use of Chromatic Chords; (4) Counterpoint—a Course of Study: to which may be added his annotations and Appendix to the new edition of Alfred Day's Treatise on Harmony. Mention must also be made of a short Treatise on "the Construction of a Sonata."

He told me that he once began a book on the Elements of Music; but that when my little Text book, treating of those, and of advanced matters, appeared, he abandoned his design, as no longer needful to prosecute. He assured me of the sincerity of this compliment. The "Rudiments" were designed as a text and exercise book for students, on the basis of course, of the Day theory. In the "Lectures" delivered, as the dedication shows, at the instance of Mr. G. A. Osborne, that theory is elucidated and defended with copious justificatory illustrations from works of various acknowledged composers, with the view of showing that, though often unconsciously, they have, so to speak, written in accordance with the Day theory, which is, therefore, not in reality a heterodox novelty, but the only theory which adequately explains and justifies much in music which is accepted unchallenged—nay, fully recognised. The "Eighty Sentences," written at the instance of the late Rev. John Curwen, are elaborately minute illustrations of that portion of the Day theory referred to in their title: an integral part of the whole theory, in fact. Still further expositions, with some modifications, of that theory, resulting from years of experience and independent thought, are presented in the editorial matter in the re-published book by Dr. Day.

(To be continued.)

Correspondence.

STUDENTS AS TEACHERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL WORLD."

SIR,—If your correspondent "Scholar" would kindly re-peruse my letter, he would find no justification for somewhat rudely affirming that I "know nothing about" the regulations of the R.C.M. I know more about that most excellent institution than "Scholar" supposes; and if none of the students actually do give lessons "without the consent of the Director," I am very glad to hear it—very glad indeed. I shall also be still more glad when I am sure it is the case.

I am also glad that the fees demanded by the student-teachers are "much bigger than those charged by thoroughly competent musicians"; but your correspondent omits to say why the public should accede to the demand.

Your correspondent further says, "As regards the 'inexperienced and often conceited young persons,' everyone must have a beginning (sic) and it is to be hoped that they—the pupil teachers—will be able to implant in their pupils a greater love for true music, and teach them how to perform it with greater success than has been the almost universal case up to the present outside the R.C.M., and no doubt the other two institutions." He is quite right in saying that "everyone must have a beginning," even the inexperienced and often conceited young persons, since thelatter undoubtedly exist (tho', not popular!) But the remaining portion of the sentence does not seem to be so complimentary to our other great schools of music as was probably intended by the writer of it. However, the whole paragraph is so involved that it may mean anything—even that the word "scholar" is sometimes mistakenly used for that of student.

I can make out nothing in your young correspondent's letter which refutes the statement to which I called attention, rather than originated, viz., that many students of the principal academies are in the habit of giving private lessons at small or large fees, and that in public announcements, programmes, &c., they often add to their names the letters R.C.M., R.A.M., G.S.M., when merely pupils, and not scholars, of those institutions.

Hoping you will pardon this large demand upon your valuable space, I remain, yours faithfully,

L.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL WORLD."

SIR,—In reply to the courteous letter of "Provincial" concerning students as performers, I would say that the initials R.C.M., R.A.M., &c., have long been a vexed question. On the part of the Royal College, I may speak with certainty that R.C.M. is no authentic title. A student may receive perhaps a year's instruction, leave the College, and then pose before the public with R.C.M. after his name. Of course, as "Provincial" will readily admit, the College cannot prevent this, neither can it be responsible for the efficiency of that student who has only received one year's tuition.

With regard to performing while yet a pupil of the College, the permission of the director has to be obtained before the student is allowed to appear in public, and, as in the case of teaching, permission is only granted to those who are competent. Thanking you for inserting my former letter, and apologising for further intruding on your valuable space. I am, yours faithfully,

"SCHOLAR."

Reviews.

MUSIC.

"Unto thy heart," serenade for voice, with violin obbligato, words by Victor Hugo, with an English translation by E. O. Coe, music by F. Allitsen, is unconventional, melodious, and well written. 'Harlequin et Columbine morceau characteristique, pour piano solo," by Sydney Smith, lies well under the fingers, whose agility it would certainly encourage. Both these, are published by E. Ascherberg & Co.

Mr. Woolhouse sends a "Shelley Album," containing nine of the poet's songs, set to music by J. Cliffe Forrester. These compositions are all of a refined and superior character, some of the numbers being very charming. The accompaniments, written with musicianly skill, will require fluent and delicate playing.

"A diss a diss of green grass" is a refreshing spontaneous little ditty by Alexander S. Beaumont. "Cradle songs" are plentiful, but one by Learmont Drysdale is an unusually good specimen. "Suspense," a song by Sydney Shaw, is not strikingly original, but the words are well set and the harmonies are rich and appropriate.

We have also received from Weekes & Co. three numbers of a set of six songs by Henry Festing Jones. Of these we prefer "The autumn is old," a quaint setting of Hood's tenderly sad lines,

"Marguerite at the shrine," by Henry Knight, is a refined and expressive song, the dedication of which has been accepted by Miss Ellen Terry. It is published by the Viaduct Publishing Company.

B. Hollis & Co. sends two good songs by the late W. Fullerton, "That summer's day" and "The love of long ago," which deserve to become popular.

A setting by Phœbe Otway of Heine's "Du bist Wie ein Blume," with an English translation by Constance Bache, recommends itself by simplicity and charm and some delicate harmonic transition.

We have also received the following from Charles Woolhouse. Songs:—"No," by Fred Alleyn; "The broken promise," a nautical ditty, by G. Saint-George. Pianoforte: "Liebeslied" sketch, by Learmont Drysdale. From Enoch and Sons: "Kate of the Dee," by Albert E. Daniel. From B. Hollis and Co. Songs: "A bygone summer" and "When shadows lengthen," by Charles Paston Cooper; "Marguerite," graceful dance for piano, by A. Warner Hollis. From E. Ascherberg and Co.: "Marjorie," song, by F. Allisten. From Metzler and Co.: "The vanguard march," by H. M. Higgs. From the Viaduct Publishing Co.: "Three jolly sailors," song, by Percy Jackman. From Weekes and Co., "From night to morn," "Renée," and "Faithful," all by Henry J. Edwards, Mus. Doc, Oxon. From Joseph Williams. Songs: "A lover's lay," by Henry T. Tiltman; "In memory fair," by S. Portman; "Olden time," by Henry Farmer; Gavotte, by H. T. Tiltman; Air de ballet, by the same composer, both for pianoforte solo.. From Stanley Lucas, Weber and Co.: Dromiroff Polka and Valse, "Still in the night," by B. Brigata. From H. Klein and Co.: Songs, "Spellbound," "Rent free," and "Sweet Philomel," by Henry Klein; "God bless her," by Edwin M. Flavell; "The Sultan's daughter," by Edward Seymour; "Heart's-ease," by Violet Fairfield.

Knighthood of the Legion of Honour, 1878. Knight Commander of Villa Viraga, 1883. Gold Medals at the Principal International Exhibitions.

JOHN BRINSMEAD & SONS'

PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS RETURNED FROM HIRE, may be purchased at GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

JOHN BRINSMEAD AND SONS, Pianoforte Manufacturers, 18, 20, 22, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W. Lists free.

Publishers' Announcements.

NEW LEGITIMATE TEACHING METHOD.

GILHAM'S KEYBOARD INSTRUCTOR.

Patented througheut the World. Price 2/6. Post Free 2/9.

HOW TO PLAY THE

PIANO, ORGAN, OR HARMONIUM,

In the shortest time and easiest and simplest manner.

WALTER SCOTT, 24, WARWICK LANE, LONDON.
AND FELLING, NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, ENGLAND.

Publishers Announcements—continued.

SIMS REEVES: HIS LIFE. By Himself.

Ready Oct. 8, at all Libraries and Bookstalls,

SIMS REEVES: HIS LIFE. By Himself. 1 Vol., demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

London: Simpkin, Marshall, and Co., and London Music Publishi Company (Limited), 54, Great Marlborough Street, W.

Positively Ready Oct. 8,

SIMS REEVES: HIS LIFE. By Himself. 1 Vol., demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

London Music Publishing Company (Limited), 54, Great Marlborough Street, W.

VIOLIN TUTOR.

PRACTICAL VIOLIN SCHOOL, for Home Students. A Practical Book of Instructions and Exercises in Violin Playing, for the use of Amateurs, Self-learners, Teachers and others. By J. M. FLEMING. 1 vol., demy 4to, cloth gilt, price 7s. 6d.; also in monthly parts, 7d.

"Can be heartily recommended to students who wish to lay a solid foundation for good and artistic playing."—Musical Standard.

London: L. UPCOTT GILL, 170, Strand, W.C.

TO COMPOSERS,—RIDGEWAY and CO., Music Publishers, 10, Argyll Street, W. undertake the REVISING. PRINTING. and PUBLISHING of Musical Works upon exceptionally low terms. The finest work in the trade. Estimates upon receipt of MSS. IMPORTANT.—Composers' Works included in Catalogue and introduced without extra charge.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE,

By T. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 27, Harley Street, W.

THE VOICE.

A Complete Explanation of the Throat and its Functions in Breathing and in the Production of Voice, will be found in

"ELOCUTION, VOICE, & GESTURE."

By RUPERT GARRY.

Remedies for Clearing and Strengthening the Voice, and for the Cure of Hoarseness, Sore Throat, and other derangements of the Breathing Tubes.

"The section on the Voice is well considered and trustworthy, based as it is on the writings of authorities on the question of the Hygiene of the Vocal Organs."—STAGE.

"The Book contains many valuable hints in regard to Voice and Gesture."—VOICE (New York).

POST FREE, 1s. 2d.

London: Bemrose, 23, Old Bailey, E.C., and of the Author, at his residence, 49, Torrington Square, W.C.

IN SIX GRADES,

Price Two Shillings each.

Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc, and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:

A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,

By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWANN SONNENCHEIN and CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE;
And all Book and Music Sellers.

The Organ World.

CHURCH MUSIC.

THERE is something to be learnt from the wisdom of eminent and thoughtful writers; and as we have lately read much on the subject from modern writers, it will not be out of place to quote the words of Richard Hooker, written by that eminent theologian some three hundred years ago:—

"Touching musical harmony, whether by instrument or by voice, it being but of high and low in sounds a due proportionable disposition, such, notwithstanding, is the force thereof, and so pleasing effects it has in that part of man which is most divine, that some have been thereby induced to think that the soul itself by nature is, or hath in it harmony; a thing which delighted all ages, and beseemeth all states; a thing as seasonable in grief as in joy; as decent, being added unto actions of greatest weight and solemnity as being used when men most sequester themselves from action. The reason thereof is an admirable facility which music hath to express or represent to the mind, more inwardly than any other sensible means, the very standing, rising, and falling, the very steps and inflections every way, the turns and varieties of all passions whereunto the mind is subject; yea, so to imitate them, that, whether it resemble unto us the same state wherein our minds already are, or a clean contrary, we are not more contentedly by the one confirmed, than changed and led away by the other. In harmony the very image even of virtue and vice is perceived, the mind delighted with their resemblances, and brought by having them often iterated into a love of the things themselves. For which cause there is nothing so pestilent and contagious as some kinds of harmony; than some nothing more and potent unto good. And that there is such a difference of one kind from another, we need no proof but our own experience, inasmuch as we are at the hearing of some more inclined unto sorrow and heaviness, of some more mollified and softened in mind; one kind apter to stay and settle us, another to move and stir our affections; there is that draweth to a marvellous grave and sober mediocrity; there is also that carrieth, as it were, into ecstacies, filling the mind with a heavenly joy, and for a time in a manner severing it from the body; so that, although we lay altogether aside the consideration of ditty or matter, the very harmony of sounds being framed in due sort, and carried from the ear to the spiritual faculties of our souls, is, by a native puissance and efficacy, greatly available to bring to a perfect temper whatsoever is there troubled, apt as well to quicken the spirits as to allay that which is too eager; sovereign against melancholy and despair; forcibly to draw forth tears of devotion, if the mind be such as can yield them; able both to move and to moderate all affections. The prophet David having, therefore, singular knowledge, not in poetry alone, but in music also, judged them both to be things most necessary for the house of God, left behind him to that purpose a number of divinely-indited poems, and was further the author of adding unto poetry melody in public prayer; melody, both vocal and instrumental, for the raising of men's hearts, and the sweetening of their affections towards God. In which considerations the church of Christ doth likewise at this present day retain it as an ornament to God's service, and a help to our devotion. They which, under pretence of the law ceremonial abrogated, require the abrogation of instrumental music, approving, nevertheless, the use of vocal melody to remain, must show some reason wherefore the one should be thought a legal ceremony and not the other. In church music, curiosity or ostentation of art, wanton, or light, or unsuitable harmony, such as only pleaseth the ear, and does not naturally serve to the very kind and degree of those impressions of the matter that goeth with it leaveth, or is apt to leave, in men's minds, doth rather blemish and disgrace that we do, than add either beauty or furtherance unto it. On the other side, the faults prevented, the force and efficacy of the thing itself. when it drowneth not utterly, but fitly suiteth with matter altogether sounding to the praise of God, is in truth most admirable, and doth much edify, if not the understanding, because it teacheth not, yet surely the affection, because therein it worketh much. They must have hearts very dry and tough, from whom the melody of the psalms doth not sometimes draw that wherein a mind religiously affected delighteth."

The sound sense enshrined in these quaint words is still worthy of attention, even though the art and musical education have greatly advanced since the days of "Judicious Hooker," as he was wont to be called.

ANCIENT ORGANS.

By J. F. ROWBOTHAM.

(Continued from page 159.)

"The vases which held the water were made of the most precious alabaster or marble. The cylinders where the pistons worked were wrought in gold and silver, and studded with glittering gems. The water itself was scented and perfumed with rare odours, and the fragrance of sweet smells was added to the melodious euphony which passed through the pipes. The slaves who elevated and depressed the pistons were dressed in elegant and appropriate attire, and the organist himself in robes of ceremony which rivalled in their gay magnificence the costumes of the princes who attended the performance of the music.

"For the purpose of being transported from house to house, as we carry harps and violoncellos, the organs were sometimes made portable. And then the vase was constructed of lighter materials, of light plaster, for instance, or even of gilded tin, and gangs of slaves were employed in carrying the delicate and fragile mechanism through the streets.

"At Constantinople, the seat of the Eastern Roman Empire, the instrument was held in no less honour than in the West. The great water-organ was a constant figure in the pageants of the circus, and in all state ceremonies in the Golden Hippodrome, when to the pealing of the organ the Emperor rose from his throne to bless the assembled people.

"For some centuries to come, after the reign of Honorius, we hear nothing whatever about the organ. We obtain tidings of it, about four hundred years later on, it appears as an unknown thing, a strange mysterious marvel for men to wonder at; and has to be re-introduced into benighted Europe from abroad, from the home of civilisation where the light of art still lingered on, undimmed by barbarian darkness—Constantinople.

"It was in the reign of Charlemagne, when stories began to spread about the court of a mysterious musical instrument from the East, made of brazen cylinders, and bull's hide bellows, and pipes which could roar as loud as thunder and yet could babble as soft as a lyre or tinkling bell. This plainly is an organ; and what is more it is an organ with stops. Workmen were successful in their observations, and constructed an organ on precisely similar principles, which was placed in the Cathedral of Aix-la-Chapelle, and was, according to an old and reliable tradition, the first organ ever made in France.

"Comparing this organ with the water-organ of Nero and his successors, we shall find two great and striking improvements have been introduced during the life of the instrument at Constantinople, and in the interim of its exile from Europe for four hundred years among the Byzantine Greeks of the Eastern Empire. First, stops have been invented; and, secondly, bellows have been added to the water mechanism. From the existence of stops we must argue that one or other of the following changes have come about in the construction of the instument:—In our account of Nero's organ, if we were right in assuming that the keys acted by means of cross-slides—that is to say, by the same mechanism which we employ for our stops to-day—then we must argue that the mechanism of pull-downs, pallets, and grooves, or an equivalent for these, had meantime been invented for the keys, and the slides appropriated for stops, as we use them at present. Or if, on the other hand, we prefer to credit Nero's organ with a similar key-action to our own, then we must admit that the slides had been the new invention. In any case, we must grant that stops had been added to the organ. And this is the first great difference between the organ of Charlemagne and the organ of ancient Rome.

"The second is the addition of 'bellows made of bull's hide' to the mechanism, and, at first sight, this statement would seem to imply that the days of the wind-organ had already begun, and that Charlemagne's organ was simply an instrument of that nature. But a further inspection will at once silence this conjecture. For among the other things which the workmen were told specially to observe were 'two brazen cylinders,' that formed an essential part in the structure of the organ. Now what purpose could two brazen cylinders answer in a wind-organ? None at all. But in a water-organ they forced the air by means of pipes through the water into the air-condenser, from which it was conveyed into the wind-chest. The new invention was the substitution of bellows for the pistons and levers, which pumped the wind up the vases. In the primitive water-organ the wind was pumped up the vases by means of pistons, which fitted into them, and were worked by levers underneath. But in this later and improved form bellows were used in place of the pistons and levers, and blew the wind into the cylinders.

"Whence, then, came the knowledge of bellows, and their application to organ-blowing? This application, which seems so natural a one, was curiously late in being thought of. Three hundred years had passed away since the time of Nero, and the water-organ with its steady service of levers and pistons, was in the full tide of its popularity, when we hear of an experiment made by a stray inventor to blow an organ by means of bellows. The idea was thought so odd that it excited general ridicule. One solitary engraving of the curiosity has come down to us; and then it passed into the limbo of other oddities, and can scarcely be said to have suffered neglect—because it never commanded attention.

(To be continued.)

SINGLE OR DOUBLE CHANTS.

A member of a Church choir writes to Church Bells:—

"Having been all my life an ardent lover of Church music, I have read with great interest the admirable articles on this subject that are now appearing in Church Bells from the pen of Mr. Griffith. Would you, however, kindly allow me space to comment on one recommendation in one article, which I think will hardly find favour with the majority of church-goers. Mr. Griffith says, 'Use only the best single chants.' May I be allowed to ask two questions in reference to this? 1. If double chants are so unsuited to public worship, as some assert them to be, how is it that our great Church musicians of the past, such as Boyce, Battishill, &c., and those of the present, such as Smart, Elvey, Turle, Goss, and a host of others, wrote so many of them? Surely they mnst be considered good judges of what is suitable and unsuitable! 2. Would it not be rather hard to have to discard for ever the favourite old chants that are so inseparably bound up with the Church life of many of us—I mean those well-known ones by Mornington, Dupuis, Stanley, &c.? As a boy, I attended a church in the north of London, of which Mr. Mackeson's Guide said, 'The congregation is the choir,' and I always heard these chants sung with great fervour and heartiness by the congregation. And, speaking from personal experience, I would say that while I have heard complaints about Gregorians and single chants—i.e., used to the exclusion of others—I have never heard one against the double chant, except from those who would allow us no Anglicans whatever in our services. Not that I would by any means exclude single chants from our services; that would be foolish indeed, considering how many lovely ones there are. What I would suggest is this. Use a single chant for the Venite and Nunc Dimittis always, and occasionally for the Benedictus; also for all Psalms whose number of verses is under ten, but for the rest use double chants, always being careful to observe a proper break where there is an odd number of verses."

OLD HERTFORD ORGANISTS.

Mr. W. H. Cummings writes to the Monthly Journal:—

"For nearly forty years I have been intimately associated with the musicians, amateur and professional, of the town of Hertford. Charles Bridgman, who died in 1873, having been organist of All Saints, Hertford, for eighty-one years, was a dear friend of mine. During a visit to the church I noted the following interesting inscription in memory of his predecessors:—

"'Nigh unto this place lyeth the body of Mrs. Mary Battell, sometime organist at this church gratis. Obiit., Jan. 20, 1698-9.

Her life and death good hopes they gave,
That life eternal she shall have.'

"'In memory of Mr. Thomas Green, who was organist of this parish 47 years, and died the 8th of August, 1791. Aged 72 years.'

"Mary Battell's gratuitous performance evidently made an impression on one at least of her co-temporaries, for another tombstone records:—

"'Nigh unto this place lyeth the body of Mrs. Elizabeth Cramer, who gave £200 for a perpetual encouragement for the organist of this church. Obiit., Feb. 13, 1698 9.

Her soul the Lamb of God that follows,
Outsings her anthems in All-hallows.'"

ORGAN PEDALS.

In a letter to the Monthly Journal, Dr. Charles Vincent makes the following simple and ingenious proposals:—

"All organists have doubtless experienced the difficulty of executing smoothly on the pedals the three notes F sharp, G sharp, and A sharp (or their enharmonic equivalents), when following one another in ascending or descending passages.

By a simple contrivance I find this difficulty can be entirely overcome and a convenient addition made to the pedal board.

To the two G sharp pedals fix a small piece of wood, not quite so large as the ordinary raised portion of a sharp or flat key, at the end of the two pedals beneath the stool. The pedals will then have raised portions at each end.

By using this device the passage above mentioned can be executed with alternate feet, and skips to the A flat or G sharp can be made with ease and certainty.

I venture to suggest the above for the consideration of your many organist readers, and trust it may be found of some use."

REVIEWS.

Organist's Quarterly Journal. Edited by Dr. Spark (Novello & Co.) The October part opens with a tuneful and artistically carried out "Andante con Moto" in G by Mr. Reginald Steggall, A.C.O. Next comes a noisy Festival March arranged for Organ by G. B. Allen, Mus. Bac. in which a common-place vulgar song, claiming to be national, "Southern Sons," is given as a leading theme, Mr. Allen might have given us a better specimen of Australian art. Two pieces, a Postlude in B flat, by Percy Jackman and a Bourree in D, by Samuel Moss have character and interest, and a Larghetto in the minor and major mode of G by Claude Dupré, affords pleasant playing.

Morning, Evening, and Communion Service. E. T. Chipp (Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street.)—A complete setting by the late Dr. Chipp including "Te Deum," "Benedictus," "Jubilate," "Sanctus," "Kyrie," "Creed," "Magnificat," and "Nunc Dimittis," in the key of E major. Throughout the music is earnest, thoughtful and artistic; and is worthy of the composer's high reputation. The effects are striking but are withal softened by the true ecclesiastical spirit. The vocal writing is of the best, and the organ part is at once attractive, masterly and interesting. Such a work ought to find a wide acceptance.

Short Setting of the Office of Holy Communion, No. 11, by G. J. Bennett (Novello & Co.).—A setting of a series edited by Dr. G. C. Martin, including the additional "Benedictus," "Agnus Dei," and a final "Amen" after Benediction. The composer has written effective, serious, and yet simple music, expressive of the text, and, for the most part, solid in style. The key of the service is B flat.

"Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis." Harry Dancy (London Publishing Company.—A simple and agreeably tuneful unison service, with an effective but easy organ part.

"Blessed is he that considereth the Poor," Anthem. Gustav Ernest (J. J. Hopkinson, New Bond Street).—An easy, graceful piece of church music, "Let the Heavens rejoice," Anthem. Gustav Ernest.—An effective anthem in G, with an episodical quartet in E flat, and a return of the chorus. It is throughout effective, singable diatonic, beginning, and ending in a spirited manner—a work likely, in short, to find favour.

"Te Deum" and "Benedictus," in chant form. J. L. Gregory, F.C.O. (Novello and Co.).—A good and useful service of its kind, tuneful, well sustained, and varied effectively. "Harvest," Cantata. Jacob Bradford, Mus. Doc. (Novello and Co.).—A work of a somewhat ambitious type of six movements, including a final fugue. One of the most effective items is the duet in canon for soprano and tenor, "The God of Harvest praise," which is specially graceful and melodious. The work is scored for voices with orchestra and organ, and is specially intended for Harvest Festivals.

SPECIFICATIONS.

SPECIFICATION OF ORGAN OF CHRIST CHURCH, LANCASTER GATE.—The stops marked (*) are those lately added. This very fine instrument, built for Christ Church, Lancaster Gate, by Messrs. Walker & Sons, was reopened on October 18, 1888, by Mr. H. W. Richards, F.C.O. (the Organist). There was Full Service at 10.30 a.m.; Organ Recital at 4.30 p.m.; and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was sung at 8 p.m., by an augmented choir of 100 carefully selected voices. Some eminent organists will also give recitals; the first on October 19, at 4.30, by Dr. J. F. Bridge, (Organist, Westminster Abbey); October 20, at 4.30, by Mr. W. S. Hayto (Organist, All Saints, Margaret Street, W.); Sunday, October 21, at 4.30, by Mr. W. H. Richards, F.C.O.; and on Sunday, October 28, at 4.30, by Mr. E. H. Turpin.

GREAT ORGAN.

Compass CC to G in Alt.

		Pipes	Ft.			Pipe	F.
1	Double Diapason	56	16 tone.	6	Principal	56	4
2	Open Diapason (large)	56	8	7	Harmonic Flute	56	4
3	Open Diapason (mdm.).	56	8	8	Twelfth	56	2⅔
4	Open Diapason (small)	56	8	9	Fifteenth	56	2
5	Stopped Diapson Bass Wald Flute Treble	56	8 tone.	10	Mixture (3 ranks)	168
				*11	Trumpet	56	8

SWELL ORGAN.

Compass CC to G in Alt.

1	Double Diapason	56	16 tone	7	Principal	56	4
2	Open Diapason	56	8	8	Fifteenth	56	2
*3	Bell Gamba	56	8	9	Mixture, 4 ranks	224
4	Stopped Diapason	56	8 tone	10	Horn	56	8
5	Echo Gamba	56	8	11	Oboe	56	8
6	Voa Angelica to tenor C	44	8	*12	Contrafagotto	56	16

SOLO ORGAN.

*1	Harmonic Flute	56	8	*4	Vox humana	56	8
*2	Clarinet	56	8	*5	Dulciana Flute	56	8
*3	Orchestral Oboe	56	8	*6	Tremulant (Solo)	56	8

CHOIR ORGAN.

1	Viola	56	8	*4	Gemshorn	56	4
2	Dulciana	56	8	5	Flute	56	4
3	Lieblich Gedact	56	8 tone	6	Piccolo	56	2

PEDAL ORGAN.

1	Open Diapason (wood).	30	16	4	Sub Bourdon (32 feet tone)	30
2	Open Diapason (metal)	30	16	5	Trombone	30	16
3	Bourdon (large scale)	30	16 tone

8 Composition Pedals. Tremulant to swell.
Swell Pedal in centre and at side of rgan.
Pneumatic action to Great, Swell, and Pedal Organs.

COUPLERS.

Swell to Great.
Swell to Choir.
*Solo to Swell.
Great to Pedals.
*Solo to Pedals.

Swell to Pedals.
Choir to Pedals.
*Super oc. to Swell.
*Super oc. to Pedals. This stop draws in 12 additional notes on each pedal stop.

Pedals, Parallel and Concave Organs blown by hydraulic power.

RECITAL NEWS.

BOW AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE.—Mr. Henry R. Rose gave an admirable recital, on October 13, before an unusually large audience. The programme included Organ Sonata, No. 4, Mendelssohn, much enjoyed; Andante, Smart, and Fugue, Steggall, the last a scholarly work, much appreciated; Fantasia, Berens; Allegro Cantabile, 5th Symphony, Widor; and Overture, "Semiramide," Rossini, admirably rendered and loudly applauded. The vocalist was Madame Clara Samuell (Mrs. Rose), whose charming vocalisation greatly delighted the audience. Her two first songs, "Nymphs and Shepherds," Purcell, and "Hush, ye pretty warbling choirs," Handel, were enthusiastically redemanded, and the last was repeated.

CLEVELAND (U.S.).—Mr. F. Norman Adams gave a Recital in Trinity Church, on October 1. Allegro vivace, Sinfonia in C, Mozart; March in C, Spohr (from Notturno for wind instruments); Fugue, in B flat, Salomé; Offertoire, No. 6, in C minor, Lefebure-Wely. Improvisation.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH, TAUNTON.—The following selection of music was played by Mr. T. J. Dudeney, L.R.A.M., F.C.O., at the Dedication Festival, on September 23. Programme: Andante in D, E. Silas; "Heaven and the Earth display." from "Athalie," Mendelssohn; Cantilène Pastorale, A. Guilmant; Allegro in C, from Sonata, G. A. Macfarren; "With Verdure Clad," from "Creation," J. Haydn; Andante in F., S. S. Wesley; Postlude in D, Henry Smart.

LIVERPOOL.—By Mr. W. T. Best, at St. George's Hall, on the 4th and 6th inst. Pprogamme: Overture to a Harvest Cantata, Weber; Concert Fantasia on Rodes's Air, Best; Fantasia in the style of Handel (G major), Moscheles; Offertoire, from the "Vade Mecum de l'Organiste, Wély; Evening Song (Abendlied, Op. 85), Schumann; Marcia Fantastica (B minor), Rossini; Overture, "Ruy Blas," Mendelssohn; Third Impromptu (Op. 51, G flat major), Chopin; Prelude and Fugue (D major), Bach; Allegretto, from the "Pensées Musicales" (No. 4), Schubert; Andante (No. 1, G major), Smart; Marche Hongroise (E minor), Liszt.

HANLEY.—By Mr. A. L. Peace, Mus. Doc., at the opening of the Victoria Hall and Organ, Town Hall, on October 5. Programme: Overture to the "Occasional Oratorio," Handel; Air, with Variations, in G major, Haydn; March in C major, Mozart; Prelude and Fugue in D major, Bach; Offertorio in D major, Morandi; Selection from "Faust" (Kermesse Coro, "Su, da bere," Gounod; Romanza, "Quando a te lieta"; Cora del Soldi, "Oh, gloria cinta d'allor,") Gounod; Grand Dramatic Fantasia, "A Concert on a Lake, interrupted by a thunderstorm," Neukomm; Theme from "Sylvana," and Rondo in E flat major, Weber; Overture, "William Tell," Rossini.

YEOVIL.—The fourth annual festival of the Yeovil Choral Union was recently held, the special preacher being the Rev. W. Pear Williams, of Bristol. The choir, consisting of about two hundred singers, was well balanced, and the singing throughout was refined. The anthems were, "O Saviour of the world," by John Goss, and "Lift up your heads," from Handel's "Messiah." The following selection of music was played by the organist, Mr. T. J. Dudeney, L.R.A.M., F.C.O.: Andante in E flat, Ernest Slater; Allegro Pomposo, Henry Smart; Andante con Variazioni e Fuga, T. J. Dudeney; Adagio in E flat, J. S. Bach; Choral Song and Fugue, S. S. Wesley; Andante in G, G. A. Macfarren; Overture to "Saul," G. F. Handel.

WANDSWORTH, S. W.—Mr. H. W. Weston, F. C. O., gave a recital at the Parish Church on Oct. 14, to a large congregation, when the following formed the programme· This is the second of the series of popular recitals to be given during October. Sunday, October 14. Programme: Grand Offertoire in D Minor, E. Batiste; Minuet in G (from the Overture to "Sampson"); Introduction, Theme, and Variations in A, A. Hesse; Nocturne in G Minor (No. 11), Chopin; Festive March in D, H. Smart.

GODALMING CHURCH.—Organ and Violin Recital, given on October 18, by Mr. A. A. Macintosh, F. C. O., organist of All Saints', Huntingdon, and Mr. O. Haenni. Programme: Overture in C, Mendelssohn; Andante in C, Silas; Barcarolle, Spohr; (Violin —Mr. Haenni.) Adagio in B flat, Haydn; Elegy in B flat minor, Silas; Adagio in D, Mozart; (Violin—Mr. Haenni.) Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Back; Andante in F (No. 2, Smart; Fantasia in D minor, Merkel.

St. John the Evangelist, Waterloo Road.—Free Popular Organ Recitals each Tuesday in October, at 8.15 p.m. (before the further enlargement of the Organ), by Mr. Henry J. B. Dart, A.C.O. Programmes of remaining dates: (October 23) Schiller March, Meyerbeer; Allegro Cantabile, Widor; Sonata, No. 6, Mendelssohn; Andante, Smart; Chorus, "Sing unto God," Handel; Pastorale, Kullak; Offertoire in C, Wely. (October 30) March, from "Athalie," Mendelssohn; Andante and Allegro, Spohr; Novelletten, Schumann; Prelude and Fugue (St. Anne's), Bach; Invocation in B flat and Grand Chorus in E flat, Guilmant. Sir Arthur Sullivan's oratorio, "The Prodigal Son," will be sung in this church on Sunday Afternoon, the 21st., at 3 o'clock.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SUNDRY MUSICAL QUESTIONS.

Dear Sir,—Can any of your readers suggest an answer to the query: How long does a key remain established in the mind of a listener after the music has ceased? It is a question which has occurred to me several times on finding after a short lapse of time that I or someone else had adopted, seemingly unintentionally, the last key heard. With regard to Church music, I should like to add my voice to those who, though musicians, say that in Church devotional should take precedence of artistic considerations. Only those can fear this dictum who think that bad music is more devotional than good. Good music is artistic. It is devotional. It is employed in church. But it is employed in Church not because it is artistic, but because it is devotional. If listening to an elaborate setting of the Canticles is more devotional than taking part in chanting them, and is more artistic, by all means let us have services. Not because they are more artistic, but because they are more devotional. If on the other hand, as I believe will be the case in many congregations—joining in a chant (there is not the slightest necessity for it to be a bad one) has a more devotional result than listening to a refined choir, I claim that a thorough musician and artist is perfectly logical and consistent in advocating that in church chants be employed, though services are a higher form of art—as consistent as he would be in suppressing at a concert anything, however admirable, which did not promote art.

The plea on which elaborate music is usually advocated is that everything in Church should be of the best. This no reverent man will deny. But the best what?—the highest form of Art or the best devotion, in a congregation where these would clash? The best or their best? The best procurable, or the best the congregation can offer? If the former, people's and priest's part must be recited by elocutionists that the enunciation may be "the best." If an educated congregation feels that their best devotion is in listening to the perfected singing of the choir—or the perfected speaking of an elocutionist taking their part for them—well and good, but not otherwise, and I do not think such a condition obtains with an average congregation. With regard to Mr. Griffiths' suggestion as to the College of Organists issuing a list of voluntaries suitable for Church use, it will occur to many that such a list would have to be re-issued periodically as good music came out, or not be considered exclusive and thus lose almost its whole influence in suppressing the playing of bad unsuitable pieces. Such a list would be invaluable I think, if practicable, but would not a Rule by the application of which organists, not qualified to judge themselves, could test the suitability of all and any music be much more comprehensive? Even this would be difficult to obtain, for among compositions, written expressly for Church use and by able composers, one has to make a selection to avoid marches of a highly "operatic" character—if not jerky and polka-like trios. Perhaps I shall be considered a purist, sir, but I must confess that the trios in H. Smart's fine march in D, unless played much slower than is consistent with march time, come under the ban of being too dance-like in character to be thoroughly suitable for Church use. I do not wish to be understood as condemning marches in themselves. Marching is typically, at least, an attribute of the Church militant; dancing, so far as I am aware, is not, though a religious exercise in the time of David. The prevalence of massive chords in the First Species of Counterpoint—time-unison, one may call it—is as typical of the oneness of the Christian Army in things essential as a fugue is of its many voices, and the multitude in the Heavenly Choir. Altogether, this form of composition represents musically what hymns like "Onward Christian Soldiers," and "The Church's One Foundation" do verbally. I repudiate the idea of desiring to make services dull and gloomy. There is all the difference between religious joyousness and ball-room gaiety—between Handel's choruses and a rollicking polka.

Whatever march is played in Church should surely be dignified in character.

These remarks are not penned as laying down the law to brother-organists, but rather to induce any who have found a good Rule in this matter to state it for the benefit of less experienced or competent judges. The preceding is but portion of a more lengthy letter I had in my mind to write on the subject of Church Music, had not the admirable editorials and articles in your recent issues forestalled my remarks.—Yours faithfully,

Clement A Harris, A.C.O.

P.S.—In reference to the article on Congregational Singing in your last issue, surely the best method would be to (where necessary) transpose the tunes so as to lie within a congregational compass, and there re-harmonise them, so that the parts may be thoroughly suited to the voices by which they are to be sung in the choir. I have long thought that a chant and hymn-book on this principle would do more than anything else—except systematic instruction of the congregation in simple part-singing, which is the desirable thing—towards enabling and inducing the people to take their own part in the service.

NOTES.

It will be remembered that Mr. Henry Fordham had upon several occasions exhibited his new patent swell shutter. By means of which a most perfect crescendo and diminuendo can be obtained, without aditional trouble to the performer, the same being fully under control. By an ingenious arrangement the swell-box also admits of a free exit of air when the box is quite closed, retaining the sound, thereby freeing the pipes from any compression, the outlet being equal to the inlet. This is obtained by what Mr. Fordham calls a muffler box. The swell pedal, although provided with a device for retaining it, likewise the venetians, in any desired position, in its traverse, can be used just as though no device existed for the purpose aforesaid. Mr. Fordham's invention is well worthy of the attention of all interested in organ effects and on an construction-

Mr. J. Kendrick Pyne, F.C.O., organist at the Manchester Cathedral, lent a large and interesting collection of old manuscript and printed copies of noted music. Mr. Cornish, bookseller, Manchester, also lent a collection of a similar character to the recent Ecclesiastical Art Exhibition, Manchester.

At Chester early on the morning of Oct. 6th the death took place of Mr. Frederick Gunton, who was for over 25 years the organist of Chester Cathedral. Mr. Gunton recently returned from a trip to Switzerland, which was rather too much for his strength. On Friday week he was seized with an attack of paralysis, and succumed shortly afterwards. Mr. Gunton was in his 75th year. He retired in 1873.

It is stated that Messrs. F. and H. Francis, the architects of the Albert Palace, at Battersea, call attention to the fact that all the interior fittings of that structure, including the great organ, are to be sold by auction next week, under distraint for rent, by order of Her Majesty's Office of Works; though this action may be altered by private arrangement.

THE COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Tuesday, October 23: The Library will be open from 7 to 8. The adjourned Annual General Meeting will be held the same evening, at 8. This meeting will be held at the College.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Secretary.

95, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury.

TO OUR READERS:

In consequence of an unfortunate accident which has caused serious delay in the publication of the Paper, we are unable to carry out our intention of presenting our Readers with the Portraits of SIR CHARLES and LADY HALLÉ. We shall, however, be in a position to do so next week, and we will gladly exchange copies of this issue that have been purchased with the expectation of receiving the said Portraits.

EDITOR "MUSICAL WORLD."

Festivals.

BRISTOL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The Bristol Musical Festival, a triennial event whose influence is to be felt beyond the immediate centre of activity, commenced on Tuesday last, under meteorological circumstances of unwontedly auspicious kind. Although no new works were included in the programme, a judicious and representative selection had been made, which did justice to all claimants, and proved how catholic were the tastes of those responsible for the arrangements. With Sir Charles Hallé as conductor, and such artists as Mesdames Albani, Anna Williams, Patey, and Belle Cole; Messrs. Lloyd, Banks, Watkin Mills, Montague Worlock, and Santley, to answer for the solo music, fears as to the artistic success of the festival would obviously have been misplaced. That the festival was inaugurated on Tuesday by a performance of the "Elijah" might seem an additional proof, if such were thought necessary, of the permanent place taken in the heart of the British amateur by Mendelssohn's work. But what conclusion is to be drawn from the scanty attendance at that inaugural performance? Is the work in question losing ground in the popular estimation? Or is the Bristol public less interested in musical festivals than of yore? Or is the falling-off in attendance, as compared with previous years, the result of purely local and exceptional causes? It must be hoped that the third reason is the correct one, though to speak definitely would, at such a stage of the proceedings, be premature. Whatever might be the lack of interest exhibited by the public, it is satisfactory to know that it was not shared by any of the performers. It would be useless now, as always, to speak at length of the admirable way in which Madame Albani, Miss Anna Williams, Madame Patey, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley, interpret the "Elijah" music. It is more to the purpose to recognise the excellence of the chorus, which, although composed of volunteers, is yet remarkable for its perfect discipline. At times a lack of sonority was apparent, but in tone, evenness of balance, and definiteness of attack, it was all that could be desired, and gave evidence of the care bestowed on its training by Mr. Rootham.

The concert of Tuesday evening, although nominally "miscellaneous"—too often a word of horror—contained at least one feature of special interest. This was the performance of a selection from Gluck's "Iphigenie auf Tauris," the first act of which was given with a few cuts only. Whatever be the relative interest of Gluck's masterpiece, when judged by the standard applied to dramatic music in the present generation, it would not be easy to praise the choice of such a work too highly. It may be questioned which is the more important good to be accomplished by a Festival—the production of new works, and the encouragement of contemporary talent, or the revival of such compositions as that of Glück's, which, epoch-marking though they be, have yet been well-nigh forgotten, and for long unheard. It will not, therefore, be supposed that we lose sight of the vast progress and development of art which has taken place since the first performance of "Iphigenie" on May 18, 1779, or that we attempt to measure that work by the standard of such modern giants as this century has produced, when we praise, with emphasis, its production at Bristol. The educational value of such performances is immense. The principal part of the interpretation was sustained by Madame Albani, who gave perfect expression to the graceful phrases of "O toi qui prolongeas mes jours," and, indeed, sang throughout the selection with the utmost refinement. Adequate support was given also by Miss Mary Gane, Mr. Watkin Mills, and Mr. W. Thomas, and the band and chorus did all justice to the dances and choruses.

The remainder of the programme included songs by Madame Belle Cole, who gave, with marked effect, an air from "Figaro," and "O, Fatima," from Weber's "Abu Hassan;" by Mr. Watkin Mills, and Mr. Banks. The orchestral items conprised Beethoven's Overture in C, Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto, played admirably by Sir Charles Hallé, the overture to "Ruy Blas," and Liszt's "Les Préludes."

The morning of Wednesday was occupied in the performance of Cherubini's sixth "Mass in C," and Dr. Mackenzie's "Rose of Sharon." The public apathy, so noticeable on the first, was not less conspicuous on the second day of the Festival. The audience was far from crowded, and those who attended were plainly of opinion that the programme was of excessive length. To couple for one concert two works so important was in the highest degree unwise, for however enthusiastic an audience might be, it is after all only human; and physical weariness is inevitable under such circumstances. Such a course was unfair to Dr. Mackenzie, whose graceful work naturally suffered in consequence.

Of the performance of the Mass it may at once be said that it was in every way admirable; offering indeed, fewer opportunities for dramatic display than at least one other of Cherubini's works in the same kind, there is yet about it a dignity and earnestness which fit it admirably for a festival programme. Mesdames Albani, Belle Cole, Gane and Nelmes, and Messrs. Lloyd, Banks, Santley, and Worlock, did all possible justice to the solos; and, as has been already implied, Sir Charles Hallé had brought his band and chorus to a high degree of excellence.

So much has been written concerning Dr. Mackenzie's work since its production at Norwich in 1884, that it would serve no good purpose to dwell at length upon its merits on the present occasion. Every one knows that there are many passages of exceeding beauty in the work, which are perhaps recognised more clearly for the occasional mediocrity of certain other portions. The work received an altogether adequate interpretation on Wednesday. Madame Albani gave full and just expression to the poetic grace of the music allotted to the Sulamite, singing throughout with a refinement and purity of style that could hardly be equalled. Madame Belle Cole, on whom an unexpectedly heavy share of work has fallen, in consequence of the illness of Madame Trebelli, deserves praise for the courage with which she attacked the contralto music, and the shortness of the time possible for study under such circumstances may well be taken as an apology for the few shortcomings noticeable. Mr. Lloyd sang the tenor music with the utmost passion, and Mr. Santley was not less admirable in the solos allotted to him. The band and chorus, under Sir Charles Hallé's firm and judicious guidance, were excellent.

The evening concert was, perhaps, the most important event of the whole, as its programme included that masterpiece of orchestral colour, Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet." This work calls for more than passing notice, and, together with the remaining concerts of the week, will be dealt with in our next issue.

NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The inauguration of a new musical festival must always be a matter of interest to all who care to mark the progress and development of art. All such functions, it may safely be presumed, had a commencement; but in the majority of cases they have existed so long, or are so firmly rooted in the musical order, that we are but dimly conscious that they, too, were once infants, appealing to the tender mercies of the critical nurse. It is accordingly, with some curiosity that we have watched the preparations which have lately gone forward, and have culminated at length in the North Staffordshire Festival, which was held on Thursday of last week in the Victoria Hall at Hanley. The committee, with a wisdom that might profitably be imitated in other quarters, refrained from putting forth an elaborate and wide-embracing scheme. The Festival comprised two performances only, that in the morning being devoted to the performance of the "Elijah," that in the evening to the interpretation of a miscellaneous programme. The vocalists engaged were Madame Valleria, Mrs. Hutchinson, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Henschel. The chorus, which numbered 300 voices, was drawn almost, if not entirely, from local sources, and the band of 60, led by Mr. Carrodus, consisted principally of Birmingham artists. Dr. Swinnerton Heap conducted, and Mr. W. Sherratt presided at the organ.

A great disappointment was experienced at the outset, when it became known that Madame Valleria would be prevented by illness from taking part. It was, however, arranged that Mrs. Hutchinson should take the whole of the soprano music in the "Elijah," and Miss Anna Williams was fortunately able to accept the duty of singing at the evening concert. It is obvious that criticism of the fare presented by the committee would be entirely needless. The British public, whatever may be said of the various objects on which it sets its affections, is usually faithful to them, and there are not at present any signs that the "Elijah" is losing its hold upon the hearts of amateurs.

Nor is it necessary to say much of the performance, as far as the soloists are concerned—Miss Hilda Wilson's and Mr. Lloyd's singing in such numbers as "O rest in the Lord" and "If with all your hearts" is known to everyone; and that Mrs. Hutchinson sang her allotted solos with refinement and taste goes also without saying. Mr. Henschel's singing, however, is always such a triumph of art that a word of especial recognition is not misplaced here. Gifted with a voice not naturally sympathetic, his art is so consummate that a defect which, in a less perfect master, would be plainly unpleasant, becomes in him almost unnoticeable. The pathos with which he gave "It is enough" and the dramatic fire which he infused into the Carmel music, proclaimed him, with added emphasis, a great artist. The chorus was of surprising excellence, and its timbre, balance, and attack might put to shame more than one festival choir of far older standing. No allowance "on the score of youth" need be made for it; and the chorus-master, Mr. F. Mountford, may well be proud of the results of his training. Assistance in the concerted numbers was given by Miss Reeve, Miss Oakes, Miss Garner, Mr. Sheldon, Mr. S. Wilcox, and Mr. Cranmer.

The evening programme contained but one novelty—a concert-overture, by Mr. Algernon Ashton, which proved to be a scholarly and thoroughly musicianly piece of work, containing many passages of dignity and beauty, although suggestions of the composer's youth were not wanting. The remainder of the programme was of the usual miscellaneous sort, comprising such well-known items as the "William Tell" overture, the Hungarian March from "Faust," and Liszt's First Hungarian Rhapsody, all of which were interpreted admirably. Miss Anna Williams sang, with her usual earnestness and purity of style, the "Freischutz" air, "Piano, piano," and the solo in the finale of the first act of Mendelssohn's "Loreley," and Mr. Lloyd contributed Gounod's "Lend me your aid," Balfe's "When other lips," and the scena from Dr. Heap's "Maid of Astolat." The chorus turned to excellent advantage the opportunities given by Gade's charming cantata, "Spring's Message," and the "Loreley" music.

Little more need be said to show how propitiously inclined were the powers that attended the birth of the new Festival. When the sound results obtained have been duly considered, it does not seem too much to hope, and indeed, to prophesy, that the North Staffordshire Festival, so happily managed, will in time take a permanent and important place in our national music. If the energy, care, and prudence, which were evidently bestowed on the function of last week be continued, this result will certainly follow. Meanwhile, Dr. Heap and all others concerned, are to be congratulated on the distinct artistic success of the venture.

PROVINCIAL.

GLASGOW, October 16.

Mr. Augustus Harris' Royal Italian Opera Company brought their brief engagement at the Grand to a close on Saturday evening by a performance of Mozart's opera, "Il Flauto Magico." The cast being an exceptionally strong one drew together a crowded house, the largest in fact during their stay. Signor Ravelli as "Tamino" met with a cordial reception, and Signor Foli in the part of "Sarastro" received a double recall for his rendering of "Qui Sdegno," but declined to repeat it. Mdlle. Ella Russell, as "Astrifiammante" obtained a magnificent ovation for her singing of the Aria "Gli angui d'inferno." Mdlle. Macintyre (Pamina) in conjunction with Signor D'Andrade (Papageno) had a hearty encore for the duet "La Dove Prende." At the conclusion of the performance Mr. Harris appeared before the footlights with the principals and the conductor, Signor Arditi, and in response to loud cries of "Speech," in a few words thanked the Glasgow public for their support.

On Saturday afternoon Mr. Harris gave a Grand Operatic Concert in St. Andrew's Hall. The hall was very well filled (considering the counter attraction—the Exhibition). The following artists appeared and each had a cordial reception, viz.: Mdlles. Ella Russell, E. Ponti, Alameda, Madame Rolla, Mdlles. De Vernet, De Vigne, and Macintyre, Signori Runcio, Caprile, De Anna, Abramoff, and Ciampi. The programme included solos from the following operas: "Ernani," "L'Elèsire D'Amore," "I Puritani," "Marta," "La Favorita," "Mignon," etc. Signor Romili presided with much acceptance at the pianoforte.

PAISLEY, October 11.

A few of the artists of Mr. Harris's Royal Italian Opera Company, at present appearing at the Grand, Glasgow, gave a grand concert in the George A, Clark Town Hall, last night, before a very sparse audience, which was nevertheless highly appreciative. Madlle. Macintyre, Scotland's prima donna, received an immense ovation for her singing of "Ah! fors è lui," from Traviata," and in response to an encore, "Ye Banks and Braes!" Her other song was "L'altra notte," from "Mephistofele," and as an encore, "Oh! where, tell me where." Madlle. De Vernet met with favour with her soli, "Kathleen Mavourneen," "The Kerry Dance," and "Jack o' Hazeldean." The other artists who took part were Madlles. Pouté Alameda, De Vigne, Signori Caprile, Miranda, Abramoff, and Ciampi. Signor Romili, the accompanist, left nothing to be desired. Messrs. Paterson, Sons & Co. announce for November 29 a grand concert to be given by the Carl Rosa English Opera Company.

BIRMINGHAM, October 16.

"Le siège vient de commencer," and we are fairly hemmed in; not, however, by a cruel enemy, but by an army of bold impresari, who begin to shower their musical shells fast and deep right into our midst. Last night the battle raged in earnest, and our chief generals and pioneers, the Messrs. Harrison began the concert war with an excellent Musical Entertainment given at the Town Hall. There was a long list of artists, and a long programme, contained "Items of Interest" and "Items of Mediocrity," Royalty Ballads, snatches of classical trios, violin, violoncello and piano solo, executed by the most renowned artists of the day—in fact, there was une bonne bouche for everyone. But there was also a brilliant audience, cold at first, but gradually warming up to their work, until finally nearly every item in the second part of the programme, already too long, was encored. The vocalists and instrumentalists numbered eleven, viz.: Madame Valleria, Mademoiselle Antoinette Trebelli, Mdlle. de Lido, Madame Antoinette Sterling, Mr. Henry Guy, Mr. Barrington Foote, Miss Nettie Carpenter (violin), Miss Geraldine Morgan (violin), Mons. Ernest de Munck (violoncello), Mons. Vladimir de Pachmann (solo pianoforte), Herr Volkmar, (conductor). Honneur au Dames. Madame Valleria showed no signs of her recent indisposition, which prevented her from on Thursday last attending the Hanley Festival; on the contrary, she looked more charming than ever, and sang with her accustomed artistic refinement, although the first song "Until the day breaks," met with little response from the crowded hosue. Later on she touched her hearers by a charming rendering of "Kathleen Mavourneen." Mdlle. Trebelli, in her graceful light blue dress, captivated her audience by her appearance no less than by her brilliant rendering of "Bel raggio." Her superb schooling was evident in every phrase. Mdlle. Marie de Lido, who made her first appearance here at the Town Hall, created an excellent impression by her rich and pleasant voice. Madame Antoinette Sterling roused the house to the utmost enthusiasm by her naive and simple declamation of an old Scotch song. Mr. Henry Guy and Mr. Barrington Foote acquitted themselves in a most satisfactory manner. Miss Nettie Carpenter has gained much in power since last we heard her; she played Sarasate's difficult and intricate "Faust" Fantasie, with splendid bowing power and remarkable finish. A charming Mazurka by Zarzychi, which was followed by a Mazur of Wieniawski's as an encore, exhibited all the resources of her fanciful and finished style. Mons. de Munck gave some soli for the Violoncello in a highly artistic manner. Mons. de Pachmann's playing, so beautiful, pure and passionate, is always a treat to any musician; his selection, however, did not altogether suit the audience, and fell flat. He played Raff's beautiful Cavatina, Schumann's Traümes-Wirren, a Chopin Mazurka, and a "Reverie" by his gifted wife. The accompanist, Herr Volkmar, did his work in a musician-like manner. Gounod's "Redemption" will be given by the Festival Choral Society on Thursday next. Sir Arthur Sullivan has promised to come on Friday to deliver his address, as President of the Midland Institute, and he will afterwards attend a reception given by the Mayor (Alderman Pollack), at the Council House, and later on be present at a Smoking Concert, organised by the Clef Club. The Military Band Concerts, by Mr. Gilmer, attract crowded houses. These concerts are worthy of support, and bid fair to become the most popular Saturday night's concerts of the season. Mr. Gilmer's next concert takes place on November 3, when Madame Oscar Pollack will be the lady vocalist, Mr. Fredericks the tenor. A pas redoublé by Mr. Oscar Pollock will be played for the first time by Mr. Gilmer's superb Brass Orchestra. Saturday next the Birmingham Choral Society will give Handel's "Saul" with full Band, Organ and Chorus The prices range from 3d. to 6d., and appeal, therefore, to the artisan classes. The Carl Rosa Opera Company will give a week of opera here, commencing on Monday. Halevy's romantic and spectacular Opera "La Juive" will be produced for the first time in Birmingham.

LETTERS UPON THE POETRY AND MUSIC OF THE ITALIAN OPERA."*

LETTER VII. continued.

RECITATIVE.

——Fuggi Sebaste, ah dove
Fuggiro da me stesso? ah porto in seno
Il carnefice mio: dovunque vada
Il terror, lo spavento
Seguiran la mia traccia
La colpa mia, mi starà sempre in faccia.

Fly Sebaste—ah whither shall I fly from myself? Alas! I carry in my bosom my executioner; wherever I go horror follows my steps; my guilt must ever stare me in the face.

AIR.

Aspri remorsi atroci
Figli del fallo mio
Perche si tardi, oh Dio!
Mi lacerate il cor.

Cruel heart-rending remorse, offspring of my crime; Why, oh God, so late dost thou tear my bosom?

Perche funeste voci,
Ch'or mi sgridate appresso,
Perche vi ascolto adesso,
Ne v'ascoltar fin or?

Ye fatal voices, which now howl around me, if deaf to you hitherto, why do I listen to you now?

The last division of this class of airs is that which is adapted to the expression of passion, of whatever kind, when become frantic; and is properly termed aria infuriata.

RECITATIVE.

- —Non piu, Mandane,
Il mio furor mi avanza,
Non ispirarmi il tuo, fremo abbastanza.

——No more, Mandane, inspire me not with thine, my own fury is sufficient.

AIR.

Men bramosa di stragi funeste,
Va scorrendo l'Armene foreste
Fera tigre che i figli perdè.

With less thirst for blood and slaughter, the fierce tiger, robbed of its young, scours the Armenian forests.

Ardo d'ira, di rabbia deliro
Smanio, fremo, non odo, non miro
Che le furie che porte con me.

My wrath consumes me. I rage, I rage. I hear and see nothing but the furies, which I carry with myself.

Rendimi il figlio mio:
Ah! Mi si spezza il cor;
Non son piu madre, oh Dio;
Non ò piu figlio.

Give me back my son: Oh, my heart bursts; no longer am I a mother; Oh, God, my child is no more.

Fra mille furori
Che calma non anno,
Fra mille timori
Che intorno mi stanno,
Accender mi fento,
Mi sento gelar.

Surrounded by a thousand furies which know no calm, by a thousand terrors which incessantly pursue me; by turns I freeze, I burn.

I hope I have been able, by the foregoing example, to give your Lordship some idea of the nature, extent, and variety of this class of airs, as well as of the reason why so great a variety is comprehended under the same general denomination; a circumstance which, without due attention to its cause, would appear absurd and contradictory. Before I conclude, it is proper to take notice to your Lordship, that the words of an air may be so written, as to afford subject for two, or even three, of the classes hitherto mentioned, not in a mixed manner, but severally, of which my memory furnishes me with the following example:

Pria ch'io rieda al campo,
Pensa ch'io son Romano;
Che d'una spada il lampo,
No, non mi fa terror.

Before I return to the camp, remember I am a Roman; that I rejoice in danger of battle.

Sposa, Signor, che affanno!
Deh tergi i vaghi rai
Che fol nel dirti addio
Vacilla il mio valor.

Spouse,—Sir,—what misery!—for pity's sake dry up these tears; only in bidding thee adieu, my constancy is shaken.

Empio destin tirano
O cento smanie in seno,
O cento furie al cor.

Cruel, barbarous fate; a thousand torments rend my bosom; I have a thousand furies in my heart.

This air, your Lordship sees, is divided into three different parts; the first of which, expressing dignity of sentiment, belongs to the portamento; the second, expressing tenderness, to the cantabile; and the third, expressing rage, to the last division of the aria parlante.

(To be continued.)

---

* "By the late Mr. John Brown, painter. Edinburgh, 1789."

Concerts.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The first Saturday Concert of the approaching season took place on Saturday last, when the programme was as follows:—

Overture, "The Magic Flute,"	Mozart.
Symphony: No. 1, in C (op. 21)	Beethoven.
Air des Bijoux, "Faust,"	Gounod.
Mdlle. ELVIVA GAMBOGI.
Concerto for Pianoforte and Orchestra (No. 1 in E flat) ...	Liszt.
Mr. FRITZ HARTVIGSON.
Ballad Overture, "The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow,"...	Hamish McCunn.
(First time at these concerts.)
Songs. (a) "The Lotos Flower," ...	G. J. Bennett.
Songs. (b) Serenade...	Schumann.
Mdlle. ELVIVA GAMBOGI.
Solo for Pianoforte, "Giga con Variazione."	Raff.
Mr. FRITZ HARTVIGSON.
Rhapsodie, "España,"	Chabrier
(First time in England.)

CONDUCTOR: Mr. AUGUST MANNS.

It will be easily apparent that there was in this scheme a certain amount of chronological consistency which, at least in the case of the first and second items, could not fail to be interesting and instructive. The juxtaposition of two such works as Mozart's Overture and Beethoven's First Symphony served to prove with clearness how gradual, and yet how inevitable, is the growth of art. The lesson needs enforcing, for it is a sure corrective either of ultra-radical or of ultra-conservative notions—each alike the bane of art and artists. The Zauberflote overture is perhaps the work which best enables modern ears to realise with adequate clearness the greatness of Mozart the musician. For the depth, the tenderness, the emotional power of Mozart, the man, the poet, we must seek elsewhere; but here we have the most magnificent example he has left of that technical mastery (which is his chief purely musical characteristic quâ musical) by which he effected a union between apparently opposed and irreconcileable elements, and produced those marvellous combinations of contrapuntal science with lightsome ease and grace which are now identified with his name.

And as Beethoven, in his first symphony, does but give hints of his later style, we are enabled to trace clearly the influence of his great predecessor, as well as the distinctive difference between the two. One might say that in Beethoven's work there is more mystery; in the first movement most particularly there seems to be a continual struggle between the Mozartian grace, and the power of later days. Of the two novelties presented, Mr. MacCunn's picturesque overture was decidedly the most interesting. It shows even more than his accustomed fertility in orchestral colour combinations. The music is throughout melodious and characteristic, and served to deepen in those acquainted with his previous work the conviction of the young composer's power. It is scarcely too much to call him the English Berlioz, though he has, we believe, more artistic sanity than that great, but often greatly erring, genius. With Mr. MacCunn, effect never degenerates into sensationalism, but is always well kept under artistic control.

The Rhapsodie by Chabrier proved to be a very pretty and, in some passages, striking work, but, on the whole, its qualities are of a somewhat noisy and ad captandum kind. It served, however, to provide the orchestra with a further opportunity for the display of that well-nigh perfect finish and intelligence of phrasing which were conspicuous throughout the whole performance

Mr. Fritz Hartvigson gave a magnificent reading of Liszt's concerto, the technical difficulties in which he mastered with consummate ease; but his great talents might have been more worthily employed than was possible in Raff's showy piece, which formed his second contribution. Mdlle. Gambogi was heard to greater advantage in the songs by Schumann and G. J. Bennett than in her first solo. She failed almost entirely to suggest the childish glee with which Marguerite contemplates her jewels, the expression of which has been so happily caught by Gounod Mr. Manns, it is almost superfluous to say, conducted with his usual admirable skill, and the result was a concert which augured well for the artistic excellence of the series.

Mr. Edgar Davies gave a concert at the Holborn Town Hall on the 11th. The handsome room was well filled, and the audience very appreciative. Mr. Davies has a tenor voice of considerable power, and sings carefully and conscientiously. When his style has matured he may be expected to do good service. The other vocalists were Miss Clara Dowle, Miss Florence Kent and Mr. Edmund Roche; Miss Maud Evans contributed pianoforte solos; Mr. Frank Loughlin played with much taste on the organ; Signor Luigi Meo gave several violin pieces with his accustomed success, and two recitations by Mr. Albert Harris lent variety. Encores were numerous.

MR. CORNEY GRAIN'S NEW SKETCH.

"JOHN BULL ABROAD" is the title of the new sketch which Mr. Corney Grain presented to his friends on Monday last. The follies, and the scrapes, the manners and customs of the British tourist are, it must be confessed, fair game for Mr. Grain's satire; and those who know his versatility, his genius for fun, and his keen powers of observation, need not be told that the popular entertainer has succeeded in producing a novelty which, of its kind, is excellent. The woes of travel, which, it is a curious fact, are always ridiculous when they befall an Englishman, are reflected faithfully in the bright little work; and the patter songs, the mock sentimental ballads, the clever imitations of continental sights and sounds, linked together by Mr. Grain's humorous comments and narratives, make up a performance which should not be missed by anyone who appreciates refined fun and clever music.

HAMPSTEAD CONSTITUTIONAL CLUB.

THE season of entertainments in connection with this well-known club, which has Dr. Cooper Rose for President, and Mr. C. Acret for Hon. Sec.; was opened on Wednesday last with a concert, for which a programme of considerable and varied interest had been prepared. Dr. Cooper Rose was Chairman for the evening, and the musical arrangements were under the efficient direction of Mr. James Shaw, who accompanied throughout, and played a clever pianoforte composition of his own. Signor Luigi Méo contributed some excellently-played violin solos, which evoked much enthusiasm, and joined Mr. Shaw and Dr. H. Cooper in tasteful performances of two instrumental trios. Songs were given by, amongst others, Mr. J. D. Fitzgerald, Mr. Henry Arthur, and Mr. F. L. Clayton. The concert, as a whole, was one which in point of artistic value, compared most favourably with many others of the same sort, in which the so-called "humorous" element prevails.

AN EDITOR'S INVESTIGATIONS.

The Bristol Times and Mirror says:—"Our attention having been called to an article, in favour of which much has lately been said by the Press throughout the United Kingdom, we felt that, in the interest of our readers, it was our duty to make enquiries on the subject. We first called on Mr. James Henry Gould, 24, Cumberland Street, Bristol, who stated that he has derived much benefit from using the preparation in question, that he had suffered so severely from rheumatism, that he was compelled to relinquish his work. He consulted a doctor, and took a large quantity of medicine, but all to no purpose. An acquaintance induced him to try St. Jacob's Oil. He used less than half a bottle, and has resumed work again, entirely free from pain, and a well man. A member of the firm of Mardon, Son and Hall, the well-known lithographers and printers of this city, testifies in the warmest manner possible to the surprising benefits he has derived from its use in neuralgia and rheumatism, and says that his family and friends could mention a dozen cases where its value has been proved beyond doubt. Another instance was brought to our notice. Miss Agnes Fuller, of Southfield Villas, Westbury-on-Trym, who, having been a long sufferer, used St. Jacob's Oil and received immediate relief. Other enquiries have brought strong cases of suffering before us where this remedy has been used with like results; so that we give the details as above, feeling that a matter of such importance as the existence of a powerful remedial agent should be known to all. We might further refer to the remarkable case of Henry Ricketts, who resides at Trym Cottages, Westbury. He suffered severely from rheumatism for years, and had to be conveyed to Bath Hospital. His case was so serious that he was discharged in five weeks, worse than when he entered. He was pronounced incurable and taken home, and then persuaded to try St. Jacob's Oil. His pain was so great he could not apply it himself. His wife rubbed the Oil in well, and, difficult as it may be to believe, this single application entirely freed him from all pain, and he is, of course, very thankful for his recovery."

ADVANCES
ARRANGED on LIFE POLICIES, REVERSIONS, ANNUITIES, SETTLED INCOMES, and every kind of negotiable SECURITY.
BILLS DISCOUNTED.
W. AUSTIN & CO., BANK CHAMBERS, 44, HAMMERSMITH ROAD, KENSINGTON, W.

THE TRINIDAD
Cocoa and Chocolate Company,
Offices and Show Rooms: 35, Walbrook, London. E.C.
Works: Queen's Road, Battersea London, S.W.
Manufacturers of all kinds of COCOA and CHOCOLATE for the Wholesale and Retail Trades
PRICE LISTS ON APPLICATION.

CAFÉ FLORIO (HAXELL'S),

STRAND, W.C.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice.

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

Without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s, 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings

FOR

VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,

ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,

Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

Vins de Champagne

ARTHUR ROEDERER, Reims.

MAISON FONDEE 1876.

ESTABLISHED THREE QUARTERS OF A CENTURY.

A. S. MALLETT, ALLEN & CO.,

CONTRACTORS TO

HER MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE,

Type Music Printers,

LITHOGRAPHERS, &c.

PORTRAITS.
(Speciality.)
POSTERS.

WINDOW BILLS.
BOOKS.
CATALOGUES

STATIONERY.
SHOW CARDS.
PLANS, &c., &c.

68 & 70, WARDOUR ST., LONDON, W.

TELEGRAPHIC ADDRESS—"ASMAL, LONDON."

CASSON'S

PATENT

Organ-Building System.

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c., See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart.
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The Late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A.
Mr. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—

CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN COMPANY, LIMITED,

DENBIGH.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Stndio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO.

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had but little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me, or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

To Mr. Ainsworth. BURNHAM-HORNER, F.R. Hist. S.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and Organ student who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music or organ arrangement, with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is, as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours, I. B. THORNTON,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly, HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.

To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilitate the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number), each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS,

BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

Ascherberg Piano Depot,

211, REGENT STREET, W.

A LUXURY

A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY

NO LONGER UNKNOWN IN ENGLAND.
BARBER & COMPANY'S
FRENCH COFFEE,
As Used in Paris,
In its Highest Perfection,
TENPENCE PER POUND.
(See that you have none other.)
2lb. (Sample) in tins sent free per
Parcels Post for 2s. 4d.,
Or 5lb. for 5s. 6d.
Postal Orders from 1s. 6d. to 10s. 6d.
May now be had from all Post Offices.

A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY

This is the choicest and most carefully selected Coffee, "Roasted on the French Principle," and mixed with the Finest Bruges Chicory.

2-lb. Sample Tins sent per Parcels Post to any Post Town in the United Kingdom for 2s. 4d.; 5lb. in Tins for 5s. 6d.

ONFA CONGO

ONFA
ONFA
ONFA
ONFA

NEVER Sold in England before at the price.

The Pick of the Season's Growth.

BARBER & CO.'S

RICH SIRUPY

ONFA CONGO.

ONFA
ONFA
ONFA
ONFA

ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE PER POUND.

A TEA abounding in Strength and High Quality. Never Sold before in England at the Price

COMPARE

It with that Sold by others at Two Shillings.

6½ lb. sent by Parcels Post for 10s. 9d. to any Post Town in the United Kingdom and Channel Islands. 4½ lbs. for 7s. 6d.; 2½ lb. Samples for 4s. 3d.

BARBER AND COMPANY,

274, REGENT CIRCUS, OXFORD STREET, W.
61, BISHOPSGATE STREET, CITY.
11, BORO' HIGH STREET, S.E.

102, WESTBOURNE GROVE, W.
42, GREAT TITCHFIELD STREET, W.
KING'S CROSS, N.

ALSO

BRIGHTON, HASTINGS, MANCHESTER, BRISTOL, LIVERPOOL, PRESTON, AND BIRMINGHAM.

Postal Orders, from 2s. 6d. to 10s. 6d., may now be had for One Penny from all Post Offices.
Cheques to be crossed "London and Westminster."

Printed by A. S. MALLETT, ALLEN & Co., London, and Published by WILLIAM PEARCE, at 138a, Strand, W.C., to which address all communications must be sent.

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1836.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 67.—No. 43. SATURDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1888. PRICE {3d. Unstamped. 4d. Post Free.

THE
KARN AMERICAN ORGANS

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,
WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs, equal to, if not surpassing all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

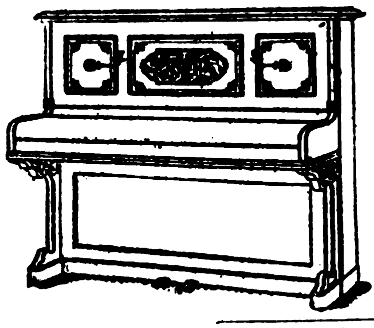
New Illustrated Catalogue and Price Lists Free of the
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:
THE SCHREIBER PIANO COMPANY,
3, NEWMAN MANSIONS, NEWMAN ST., LONDON, W.

W. G. THOMAS'S PIANOS!!

ARE the BEST and cheapest in the market. Professors and others will find an advantage by sending for the Free Illustrated lists. Splendid Iron-framed PIANOS, full-compass trichord, in Walnut Wood Cases, at popular prices. Packed FREE. Contracts taken for large quantities. Old Pianos bought for Cash, or taken in exchange.

W. G. THOMAS, Pianoforte Manufacturer,
Gospel Oak Grove, Malden Road, Kentish Town, London, N.W

PIANOS, PIANOS
Harmoniums, and American Organs,
ON THE THREE YEARS' SYSTEM



Pianos .. ... from 10s. 6d. per month.
Harmoniums ... „ 5s. 0d. „
American Organs „ 7s. 0d. „

Any Instrument sent home on receipt of first Instalment.

OUR UPRIGHT IRON GRAND, Trichord, Double Check Repeater Action, Celeste Pedal, 15s. per month.

This is a thoroughly sound and elegant Instrument, warranted in every respect.

Other Classes equally cheap.

Write for Catalogue to
SHENSTONE, SHENSTONE & CO.,
Steam Works: GRANGE ROAD, LEYTON, E.
Show Rooms: 70, Hackney Rd.; 87, St. Peter's St., Islington; & 29, Kennington Pk. Rd.

Special Notices.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—FOURTH CONCERT, Saturday, November 3. Vocalist, Mdme. Alphonsine Douilly. Violin, Miss Marie Douglas. Pianoforte, Mdlle. Janotha. Conductor, Mr. Joseph Manns. The programme will include—Overture, Leonore, No. 2, in C, (Beethoven); Festal Symphony, (H. Gadsby) (first time of performance); Cavatina, Jours de mon Enfance (Hérold); Concerto for Pianoforte and Orchestra (Schumann); Five German Dances for Orchestra of Strings (Schubert) (first time of performance); Solos for Pianoforte (Chopin and Mendelssohn); Gipsy Dances from "Etienne Marcel" (Saint-Säens).—Seats, 6d. to 2s. 6d. Admission to Palace, 2s. 6d. before 5, 1s. after.

MR. WILLIAM NICHOLL'S FIRST CHAMBER CONCERT (Third Season), PRINCES' HALL, Piccadilly, THURSDAY, November 1, at 8.30 p.m. Artists—Miss Louise Phillips, Madame Isabel Fassett, Miss Lucy Riley (violin), first appearance of the Euterpe Quartet. Messrs. W. Nicholl, Arthur Thompson, Arthur Oswald, and B. H. Grove. Conductors, Miss Mary Carmichael and Mr. F. Harold Hankins. Reserved Stalls, 7s. 6d.; stalls, 3s.; balcony, 1s.; at Chappell's, Cramer's, Stanley Lucas's, Pitt and Hatzfeld's, and at the hall.

GRESHAM HALL, Brixton.—Messrs. HANN'S CHAMBER CONCERTS (Third Series), OCT. 31, Nov 21, Dec. 12, 1888. First Concert, Oct. 31, 8 p.m. Programme: Quartet, A minor (Schumann); quartet, Satz (posthumous) (Schubert); trio, D minor (Mendelssohn); pianoforte solos—Andante, Spianato, and Grand Polonnaise (Chopin). Vocalist, Miss Marion McKenzie.

HERR WALDEMAR MEYER will give TWO GRAND CONCERTS at ST. JAMES'S HALL, on THURSDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 22, and WEDNESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 12. Full particulars will be duly announced.—W. B. HEALEY, 10A, Warwick Street, Regent Street, W.

DRILL HALL, BROMLEY, KENT.

MESSRS. F. LEWIS THOMAS' and W. C. HANNS' Third Annual Grand Evening Concert, Tuesday next. October 30. Artists: Miss Joyce, Miss Eleanor Rees, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Bertram, H. Salter, and Mr. Maybrick. Solo Violoncello: Mr. Wm. C. Hann. Solo Pianoforte: Mr. F. Lewis Thomas. Tickets of Strong & Sons and Collins, Bromley; and of Moody, Chiselhurst Station.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.—Mr. Henschel, conductor.—The series of the Third Season, 1888-89, will comprise 10 EVENING CONCERTS, to take place at ST. JAMES'S HALL, on the following TUESDAYS, Nov. 20, 27, Dec. 4, 11, Jan. 15, 22, 29, Feb. 5, 12, 19, and in addition (not included in the subscription) two Afternoon concerts on Wednesdays, Dec. 19 and Feb. 27. Subscription, Reserved seats for the series of 10 concerts, £2 15s. and 1£ 10s.; single tickets, 7s. 6d. and 4s.; unreserved seats, single ticket, 2s.; admission, 1s,, at the usual agents.—N. Vert, 6, Cork. Street, W.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL. FIRST GRAND NATIONAL CONCERT.—SCOTCH FESTIVAL, HALLOWE'EN, Wednesday, October 31, at 7.45, Miss Josephine Simon (from San Francisco) (her first appearance), Miss Winifred Parker, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Valentine Smith, Signor Foli. Violin, Mons. Joahnnes Wolff. Organ, Mr. Churchill Sibley. Mr. William Carter's Choir. Band and Pipers of Scots Guards (by permission). 7s. 6d., 5s., 4s., 3s., 2s., 1s.

HERR L. EMIL BACH has returned to London. Letters respecting engagements for Concerts in London and the Provinces to be addressed to his Secretary, 12, Kent Terrace, Regent's Park.

HERR L. EMIL BACH has a limited number of vacancies for pupils in the higher development of Pianoforte Playing.—For terms apply to his Secretary, 12, Kent Terrace, Regent's Park

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card' space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, or £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the Manager of THE MUSICAL WORLD, 138*a, Strand, London, W.C.*

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, HAMILTON TERRACE,
ST. JOHN'S.WOOD, N. W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.,
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, FINSBURY PARK VILLAS,
GREEN LANES, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI,
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor).
12, WESTBOURNE PARK TERRACE, W.

Mr. F. ST. JOHN LACY,
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist (Baritone),
FITZROY MANSION, CHARLOTTE STREET,
FITZROY SQUARE, W.

Mr. H. MARTIN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor)
Address—7, WIMPOLE STREET,
CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.

Mr. LOUIS N. PARKER, A.R.A.M.
(Composer, Conductor, Lecturer),
SHERBORNE, DORSET.

Mr. G. W. L. MARSHALL-HALL
Gives Lessons in Composition and Dramatic Singing,
151, RUCKLIDGE AVENUE,
WILLESDEN JUNCTION, N.W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts)
BOSWORTH HOUSE, HUSBAND'S BOSWORTH,
RUGBY.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o NOLAN & JACKSON.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorio),
41, WELBECK STREET,
CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, PORTSDOWN ROAD, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concerts and Oratorio),
29, ALBANY STREET, REGENT'S PARK, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio)
2, SEDGMOOR VILLAS,
Private Lessons given. CAMBERWELL, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
(Ballad, Oratorio, etc.)
31, MONMOUTH ROAD,
BAYSWATER, LONDON, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, NORFOLK SQUARE, HYDE PARK, W.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts),
56, DUCHESS ROAD,
EDGBASTON, BIRMINGHAM.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 36, ALBION PLACE, HYDE PARK W.; or to Mr. N. VERT, 6, CORK STREET, W.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. ALFRED MOUL,
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.,
Or, 270, ELGIN AVENUE, MAIDA VALE, W.

Mr. IVER McKAY
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concerts),
1, MILNER SQUARE, LONDON, N.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio),
OLD TRAFFORD, MANCHESTER.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio),
28, DEVONSHIRE STREET, ISLINGTON, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
GOTHIC LODGE,
LORDSHIP LANE, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, ST. STEPHEN'S AVENUE,
SHEPHERD'S BUSH, W.

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
40, STANLEY GARDENS, BELSIZE PARK, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
VILLA D'ESTE, LAKE COMO, ITALY.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, UPPER MOUNT STREET, DUBLIN.

Mr. RAPHAEL GORDON
(Operas, Concerts, and At Homes).
c/o Signor ODOARDO BARRI,
60, MARGARET STREET, W.,
Or, 97, TALBOT ROAD, BAYSWATER, W.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. VERT, Esq.,
6, CORK STREET.

Mr. FREDERICK KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, CANFIELD GARDENS, S. HAMPSTEAD.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
EGREMONT, CROXTED ROAD,
WEST DULWICH, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert),
63, STAFFORD PLACE,
BUCKINGHAM GATE, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, etc.),
30, LANCASTER ROAD, NOTTING HILL, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorios, and Operas),
70, PORTSDOWN ROAD, MAIDA VALE, W.

Harp.

Mr. W. T. BARKER
(Concerts, At Homes, Receptions),
49, EBURY STREET, BELGRAVIA, S.W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22A, DORSET STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified." 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
"YELBANA," 99, ANERLEY ROAD,
Pupils visited and received. ANERLEY, S.E.

Miss FREDA MARSDEN,
Solo Violinist (Concerts, At Homes, etc.),
Address, c/o Mr. CHARLES WOOLHOUSE,
81, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. ALFRED MOUL (sole agent),
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella (Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST,

Telegraphic Address: "HEALEY'S AGENCY," LONDON

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Madame WILSON-OSMAN (A.R.A.M.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert), (Soprano)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Miss FLORENCE EMERSON (Soprano)
(Concerts, Oratorio, At Homes, Etc.)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY.
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Miss FALCONAR (Contralto),
(Oratorio, Concerts Etc.)
24, OPPIDANS RD, PRIMROSE HILL, N.W.
or Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor),
28, BELSIZE ROAD, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. HENRY PHILLIPS (Tenor),
Sole agent, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone),
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Herr WALDEMAR MEYER (Solo Vlnst)
Concerts, At Homes, Etc.)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET,
REGENT STREET, W.

upon to grapple. To create a healthy public opinion, to remind the nation of its errors and to bestir it to a sense of its responsibilities in matters musical and dramatic—these were the aims of both speakers of the gatherings to which we have above adverted, and not alone from the position which the leaders occupy but also from the weight of their utterances, it is to be hoped and expected that the lessons which they inculcated have not fallen on deaf ears.

In the general sense just indicated the two addresses may be said to coincide, but in the methods of enforcing the principle underlying them, they are wholly dissimilar. Mr. Irving, with that exuberant eloquence which is never absent from any of his discourses, sets forth in a manner worthy of his audience and of the occasion, a panegyric of the drama, claiming, that is, to use his own significant words, for "a drama in which the arts of poetry, music, and painting blend," national recognition in the form of municipal or state subsidies. Without expressing any opinion, one way or the other, as to the expediency of such a view, it is worthy of observation how much Mr. Irving has himself accomplished upon the lines above suggested, unaided by a subvention.

Sir Arthur Sullivan, on the other hand, was far less ambitious in his pretensions. He contented himself with urging upon the public the advantages of cultivating their taste by listening to and endeavouring to appreciate music of a high standard. This is all very well as far as it goes. but is this really all that is requisite? Is it not, perhaps, to be regretted that the opportunity was not seized for pointing out the need of at least one permanent orchestra which should be available for concerts all the year round in London, and at each important provincial centre? Might it not also have been advisable to dilate upon the dearth of operatic performances in this country, a circumstance which, when we look to Germany or even to France, reflects discredit upon our boasted musical tendencies. Such preaching might not be very palatable to our national vanity, but if any good is to be effected it is useless to ignore deficiencies which are a standing reproach to a nation whose ambition it is to hold an honoured place in the world of art.

We understand that Dr. Villiers Stanford has just completed the score of a new symphony. The work will, it is said, be performed at a concert in Berlin which will be devoted entirely to Dr. Stanford's compositions.

The Report of the Stewards of the Hereford Festival, which has just been published, shows that the total receipts of the week's concerts amounted to £2,877 3s. and the expenditure to £3,582 15s., leaving a deficiency of £705 12s. The statement of attendances shows that in 1888 the gross attendance was 8592, as against 7248 in 1882, and 9224 in 1885. It cannot but be regarded as unfortunate that an enterprise of this nature which, whatever its shortcomings, was at least attempted in a spirit not less loyal and courageous than in the past, should receive only diminished support and sympathy at the hands of those in whose benefit it and its predecessors were conceived. The shortcomings referred were dealt with fully at the time of performance, nor do we propose to speak of them again. We shall but express the hope that the financial ill-fortune of the Festival of 1888 may in no wise impair the future usefulness of an institution that has fully established its claims to respect and support.

The Vienna "Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde" will give, on November 18, a performance of Handel's oratorio, "Theodora." This work, best known to the general amateur, of course, by the air, "Angels, ever bright and fair," should be interesting to a modern audience, if only for the reason that Handel has combined in it the elements of purely religious and dramatic music—or, to put it more tersely, the Church and the Stage—than in any other of his works.

The substitution of colours for the ordinary symbols of musical notation is by no means a new idea; and a German writer, Ch. A. B. Huth, has recently published yet another proposal, which, with charming naiveté, he calls a "Simplified Note System." He would use to express the common triad of C major the primary colours, red, blue, and yellow. By mixing half blue and half yellow he produces green for D; with two-thirds yellow and one-third red he obtains golden orange for F. Into his further calculations it is not necessary to follow the ingenious German. We would only ask what is to be the fate of colour-blind people in the future? They certainly cannot become musicians.

It seems that the flood-tide of musical progress which, optimists would have us believe, is setting in steadily in Europe, has not so much as wetted the steps of two European thrones, those of Italy and Greece. That King Humbert is what our Parisian friends call a "mélophobe" is sad, but not fresh news; but it is still sadder to read the latest story of the King of Greece. In the course of recent wanderings the unmusical monarch found himself in the Théâtre Communal at Bologna, where "Il Matrimonio Segreto" was being played. The King had scarcely seated himself, however, before he began to show signs of disgust and ennui, and speedily he arose and went forth, with contempt upon his face. "Call me," he commanded, "before the ballet begins; I will not lose a single bar of that!" We are not disposed to spurn the nobly-born, and we are prepared to believe that as musical a heart may beat in a royal household as in the "royal" hall of another sort; but still it is grievous to think that there are kings amongst us who positively enjoy a ballet. Should not some courtly and accomplished musician, such as one of the noble organ-grinders whose woes we related a short time since, be sent as a missionary to the unmelodious monarchs in question?

Finding that private business in the United States would prevent Madame Nordica from arriving in time to fulfil her engagement at the Liverpool Philharmonic Society, November 6, for the performance of Gluck's "Iphigenia in Tauris," the directors have secured the services of Madame Albani.

A London correspondent of the Allgemeine Musik Zeitung writes in the columns of that paper an interesting article concerning the Royal Academy and the Royal College, and, after some highly eulogistic remarks on the work which is being done at the latter institution, comments more generally on the state of English music, to the following effect:—

> "No doubt the English are making enormous exertions in the domain of music, and it is getting day by day more difficult for foreign musicians to get a firm footing in England. Remarkable is the susceptibility of English connoisseurs to the purity and beauty of the sung tone (des gesungenen tones), and this may explain the fact that for some years scarcely a single German singer has achieved that complete success here which it has been only too easily possible to achieve in Germany."

That German audiences are strangely tolerant of false intonation will be readily admitted by those English musicians who were present at Bayreuth this year, and found it hard to understand how singers like Reichmann, Wiegand, and Gillmeister, whose intonation was often shockingly false, could have won that success in the Fatherland which justified the direction in choosing them to perform in Wagner's Theatre.

Madame Patti has, it is said, promised to play Juliette to M. Edward de Reszke's Romeo in the forthcoming revival of Gounod's opera at the Grand Opera, Paris. Of course the usual crescendo of excitement has begun.

Miss Adela Duckham, aged 13 years, will be the solo violinist at Mr. Samuel de Sola's Concert at Princes' Hall on November 29.

WAGNER AND THE "NINETEENTH CENTURY."

Sir,—I notice that you have generously opened your columns to correspondence on the subject of that curious compilation, "The Wagner Bubble," published in this month's Nineteenth Century. I beg to be allowed to add a few words to the able rebuttal of Messrs. Parker and Dowdeswell. I would prefer, however, that the heading under which you class this letter—should it have the good fortune to be thought worthy of publication—should not be "Is Wagnerism a Failure?" for, apart from the hackneyed form of that phrase, I contend that it is not a question of "Wagnerism"—whatever that may be—but of Wagner. "Wagnerisms" deserve to be failures, as do all mannerisms borrowed from the style of great men. But Mr. Rowbotham deals with a much wider matter than the mere adoption of tricks of fashion set by a leader, though he does incidentally make the startling statement that Wagner has had no "influence on the common practice of the art of music," a statement which is disproved by the growing prevalence of the leit-motiv in the musical compositions of the present day, both in operatic and oratorio form. The article in the Nineteenth Century, however, goes far beyond this harmless inaccuracy. In fact I am almost tempted to regard it as a ponderous burlesque of the criticism that held good in times when Englishmen had not enjoyed the opportunities now open to them of gaining a personal acquaintance with Wagner's works.

Mr. Rowbotham talks of "ten or fifteen years ago;" his article would have had more chance of credence had it been indited then; for his chronology is singularly inverted. He elects to transpose the order of time, to regard the present from the standpoint of the past, and in the records of the past to find the chronicle of events now current. It is amusing to note the sublime innocence with which he expects that because Mr. Rowbotham states that the music of Wagner is dead and buried, therefore no man shall henceforth trouble his head to enquire whether it had really met with this sad catastrophe. We are treated to such expressions as "at this distance of time," &c., &c., as though indeed we were investigating a curious problem of ancient history; but let me tell Mr. Rowbotham, through you, that the music-drama of Richard Wagner is very much alive, as is evident not only by the brave list of performances instanced by Mr. Dowdeswell, but by the phenomenal success of this year's Bayreuth Festival.

Seventeen performances were given at Bayreuth this year, nine being of "Parsifal," and eight of "Die Meistersinger," and to meet the bare expenses—including between £3,000 and £4,000 capital outlay on electric light, &c.—it was necessary that £17,000 should be brought in by the sale of tickets. Not only was this result attained, but a profit of two or three thousand pounds was realised, and on several occasions the doors were besieged by unsuccessful applicants for seats, Madame Wagner herself having informed me that on August 12 the demand for tickets was five hundred in excess of the seating capacity of the theatre. This does not look like a burst bubble. And let it not be said that these were poor misguided "Germans" who crowded in such unprecedented numbers to Bayreuth; no, sir, twelve hundred tickets (£1 each) were sold in London alone, and many more were bought by English and Americans at Bayreuth itself. I have been at Bayreuth each year that "Parsifal" has been rendered, and I never saw there so large a concourse of my countrymen as this year.

Mr. Parker has noticed the singular unfairness of judging Wagner's poetry by an English translation; was this the only form in which Mr. Rowbotham could gain acquaintance with the poems? If so, he is the loser thereby, for the very form of metre and rhythm adopted by Wagner is that which lends itself the least to transposition to another tongue, each sentence being so short that necessarily small choice of adaptation of word to accent is left to the translator. But even if Mr. Rowbotham could not gain intimacy with the music of Wagner's words, he might at least have searched the plots and incidents of the poems before condemning the poet. Who can deny to Wagner the claim of poet's rank who has seen the delightful picture of mediæval manners portrayed in "Die Meistersinger," the humour of its plot, and the masterly way in which the loveable character of Hans Sachs is drawn; the touching farewell scene between Wotan and Brünnhilde in "Die Walküre;" the tender fidelity of Kurwenal who even with his last breath pleads to his dead master Tristan, "Chide me not, my master, that I too come with thee"; and the magnificently dramatic conflict of emotions pervading the whole second act of "Parsifal?" Such are but a few instances that will at once be recognised by all who have the slightest direct knowledge of Wagner's works; were I to do this matter full justice my letter would swell into the volume of an essay.

Perhaps the most glaring indication of want of comprehension of the subject with which he deals is the passage in which Mr. Rowbotham states, in fancied opposition to Wagner, "that the recitative should be interrupted every now and then by an air is simply saying that musical utterance will travel for a time in tones but little different from those of declamatory speech; but every now and then it reaches a height of emotion, and breaks out naturally into a melodious song—the ecstacy of utterance and the best beauty for man's ear to listen to." Quite so; but what more than this does Wagner ask, and what more than this do his compositions evince? I should have thought that these words of Mr. Rowbotham's, had they not been employed by him for a directly opposite purpose, were the most scathing condemnation of the whole system of ordinary operatic construction, where the voice does not every now and then break out naturally into a melodious song, but is burdened with song after song strung together by small shreds of lifeless recitative. Once for all, "recitative" is not the groundwork, intentional or otherwise, of the Wagner music-drama, but "musical utterance" that travels on the lines of speech and is supported by a wealth of musical utterance in the orchestra that cannot for one moment be compared with the pause and then a chord, pause and two arpeggios of the customary recitative and its accompaniment.

Amongst other charges every musician will take exception to the flimsy assumption that owing to "musical weakness" Wagner chose "the sphere of opera-writing rather than the pure air of the concert-room, where music stands alone on its own merits." Is there any evidence of "musical weakness" exhibited in the grand strains of the "Götterdämmerung" funeral-march, the melodious overture to "Tannhäuser," or that marvel of brilliant counterpoint, the overture to "Die Meistersinger." I adduce these merely as compositions in which the ear has no assistance yielded by the eye, and as even the most devoted laudator temporis acti cannot arraign them for lack of melody or rhythm.

But the key note to this whole attack is found in Mr. Rowbotham's words: "Had his genius been that of a true artist, he would still have continued until he had subdued the wilfulness of his thoughts and taught them to travel in that groove which the cultivated world of the time had agreed to admire as the true one." A more complete misconception of the mission of the "true artist" could not be conceived. The picture of the man of genius striving with his "wilfulness of thought"—his inspiration—and fastening it down to the Procrustean bed of the "cultivated world" were ludicrous were it not so pitiable. On whom is the "true artist" to wait until he is shown the groove in which the "cultivated world of the time" will graciously permit him to slide? And of what "time"? If the world is to have "culture" varying with the "time," who is to indoctrinate it with that culture? I had humbly thought till now that it was from men of genius that the world was to receive its enlightenment; but no, the men of culture are apparently to meet in solemn conclave and fix the canons of art from time to time, and until their fiat has gone forth let no presumptuous artist mould his thoughts anew. What should we say if this dictum were applied to science as well as to art, and we were told that Newton, Dalton and Darwin should have taught their wilful thoughts to travel in the groove which the scientific groundlings had run smooth for them?

No, sir, this most recent of attacks upon Richard Wagner has overreached itself, and even those who know as yet but little of the Master's works are not in danger of being misled by such an array of groundless charges miscalled argument.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
Oct. 22, 1888. WM. ASHTON ELLIS.

PROFESSOR SIR GEORGE ALEXANDER MACFARREN.

HIS LIFE AND WORK.

A PAPER READ BEFORE THE COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS BY HENRY C. BANISTER.

(Continued from page 815).

Now, it will not be expected that, on this occasion I should enter in any fulness, or in any controversial way, upon so vexed and much-discussed a question as this greatly abused, and, at one time wholly discredited theory. It has received much severe handling; but has, notwithstanding, seemed to possess such vitality as to survive, even as though it were the fittest, the polemical canonade to which it has been subjected, and is, at this moment, widely, though by no means universally, accepted as a theory, both for the explanation of the phenomena of, and the educational and practical guide to actual musical structure and composition. And it must be borne in mind that whether the theory be accepted or not, the combinations and progressions which, for want of a better word, I have termed phenomena, in the works of the great masters, which the theory professes to explain and justify, exist; and that, moreover, in, as it would seem, too great a number to be dismissed as exceptions to rules, or vagaries of particular composers. So that it is not a question as to what is allowable in music; but of how that which is unquestioningly accepted is to be most logically accounted for, and, in addition, how it is to be expressed, for with reference to this latter point, it is well known that the theory affects notation very considerably. Unquestionably, as a result of the wide disemination, and authoritative inculcation of this theory by a musician of such distinction as Professor Macfarren, many progressions and combinations which were formerly considered doubtful and exceptional, and were therefore timidly used, have become, I had almost said, common-places of musical-writing; and though some of these may be regarded or felt to be somewhat harsh, the majority are unhesitatingly used and listened to. The Macfarren discipleship, of more than one generation, has become so numerous, that no retreat or retrogression in this matter seems now possible, if even it were desirable. The influence of the theory has stamped certain characteristics upon the music of those who accept it to so large an extent, that it seems vain to deny that it has enlarged the range of the acknowledged, the allowed, and given rise to phases of thought in music, and musical idioms, which, at all events were unfamiliar, previously, I have heard certain applications of the theory sneered at by its being said that certain themes had been Macfarrenised. I have even heard it hinted that some of the originality claimed for Macfarren's own compositions has really sprung from a vigorous, unstinted application, and an abundant infusion, of his theoretical methods. With regard to the various petty sneers and critisms which we have heard concerning him, we may do well to remember the saying of an acute writer: "A great man will always pay deference to a greater; a little man will not, because little men are ambitious, and the weaker they are the more obstinate and crooked."* But in considering and estimating the work he has wrought as a theorist, let all acknowledgement be made if he has, in connection with theory, drawn attention to certain idioms, or whatever they may be termed, which may have the effect of extending the range of harmonic usage, whatever the theory; if he has, for instance, emphasised the consistency with good effect of the resolution of either dominant, supertonic, or tonic discords to either of one another's roots; and of the upward progression of chromatic discords, in addition to the downward progression prescribed of old. All this must be placed to his credit, and no tribute to his work would be complete without this recognition.

Leaving theory, however, and coming to rules, a very different matter, let it be remembered that rules given to students are educational and disciplinary provisions; and, moreover, that rules are—theory apart—expressions of the individual opinion and feelings of the law-giver, as to what is, firstly, good as music, or, secondly, desirable for students. Macfarren's rules are indeed numerous and stringent, and although the exceptions may ease the difficulties of the worker, they do greatly add to the burden upon his memory. Some of his terminology may with all respect be challenged, and also some of his objections to conventional terminology. I could give examples of both these assertions, but must forbear, lest a tribute to the memory of a man of such remarkable power should diverge into technical argument. I have never found myself differing from him in judgement without sincerely questioning the validity of my own; and I have never, I think, spent even a short time with him in conversation without having a spirit of enquiry aroused within me, and rarely without gaining some actual knowledge, or being quickened into some fresh insight into the mysteries of our beautiful art, and its theories.

I think I must forbear further enlargement on this important topic, lest I should weary you, interesting as as the discussion may be. I must also waive, with regret, any remarks upon his book on Counterpoint, which has been attacked on different grounds from his other books.

Dr. Alfred Day greatly desired to expatiate upon and unfold his theory of harmony to Mendelssohn, litile doubting, perhaps, that it would commend itself to the great man, who was mathematical as well as imaginative. For this purpose, he induced Macfarren to arrange an evening's meeting and conversation on the subject. He reckoned, however, not indeed "without his host," but without his hosts' visitor. Dr. Day had proceeded in his exposition only a few minutes when Mendelssohn's countenance exhibited signs suggestive, as Macfarren told me, of a recent dose of nauseous medicine; and, to prevent unpleasant consequences, the host was compelled to interpose, and cut the disquisition short, prematurely and premptorily. As Macfarren said to me, Mendelssohn was such an apponent of all theorising. In one of his letters he says, "Why do people talk so much about music instead of writing good music?" And Macfarren said that he could well believe the story of Mendelssohn which he had not heard till I told him, that when asked the root of the first chord in the Wedding-March, his answer was, "I don't know, and don't care." Even as his friend Sterndale Bennett, when asked to account for a certain progression, said, "I can't account account for it; let us have a cigar."

I need hardly say that no such expressions ever fell from the lips of Macfarren. "Don't know the root of that chord! Don't care! Can't account for it! Ah! then do not go up to Macfarren to be examined!"

When Macfarren's "Rudiments" had appeared, the late Dr. Gauntlett met him in a music warehouse, and, going up to him, said—"Ah! Macfarren, I have read your book; but I don't agree with you, at all." "Then you are like Christmas pudding," was the rejoinder of the supposed hard pedant and polemic. And, although his convictions on theoretical matters were deeply rooted, he did not treat with contempt the honest opinions of others. Although I have heard him speak of the binding of one book on Harmony as the best part of it; on the other, I have heard him, in a public utterance, say "Musicians whom I respect differ from me about this point of a super-tonic root." It was shallowness, evasiveness, slip-shod expediency, which he despised in any dealing with so sincere an expression of truth as beautiful music.

And while, on account of this, he could be so decided in his utterances that I have heard an eminent musician say: "Macfarren is so violent," yet how simple, gentle, forbearing he was, often remaining silent when he dissented. And while he has been thought so radical, as indeed he was theoretically, his views having reference so much to the roots of chords, yet so reverentially did he cling to those structural methods whose enduringness has evidenced their soundness and solidity that he came to be thought narrow by certain modern musicians, or as he expressed it to me: "I know that they think me a rabid old Tory." And in private life, most loveable, highly estimating domestic affections, which I could illustrate by instances of, however, too personal a nature for such an occasion as this.

And how generously he liked to praise other musicians! During the last railway-journey that I took in his company, from Cambridge to London, he was talking about various musical matters and men; and, speaking of a series of papers on orchestral instruments and their use, by your esteemed secretary, Mr. Turpin,* he said that they seemed to him about the best of the kind ever written. And, in his Musical History, he is careful and just, after treating of the organ, to add the foot-note. "These facts are drawn from the excellent writings of Dr. E. J. Hopkins, to which the reader is referred for details."

For himself, he only valued the distinction of being esteemed by his professional brethren: that he did greatly value. He implored them, as marking their friendship, not to address him by his titular distinction, upon which I hope it is not unloyal to say, he set about as much value as upon his doctor's robes, which, he said, made him look like "first cousin to the knave of hearts." When I dedicated to him my Fantasia in F minor, he not only wrote of the work in terms which I must not repeat, but specially thanked me for styling him my Friend.

---

* Landor.

* Since published separately by Weekes & Co.

Of his ceaseless, untiring activity, one final, affecting instance must be given. On Sunday, October 30, he had a fall which shook him very much. On Monday morning, however, he dictated three letters, one of them very complicated. In an hour and a half he passed away, in harness to the end. At the last Academy dinner, in response to the toast of his health, he assured us that the truest mark of friendship would be to give him plain intimation when his health was so failing as to unfit him for the efficient discharge of his duties. Who would have had the courage or the heart? We have been spared that pain.

And now, who shall succeed him? I do not mean in any honoured position, such as the Presidency of this college, or of other societies; you and they will have to ask and answer that question. I do not mean in the Professorship in the University of Cambridge or in the Principalship of the Royal Academy of Music—I mean who is to succeed him as the all-round, universally reverenced Nestor and head of our profession, whose attainments and honesty, and knowledge and judgment, and high-mindedness shall win such perfect and deferential recognition from all ranks and parties. We have all been proud of him, we are proud of our countrymen, and we feel proud of a profession which has been ennobled by having enrolled among its numbers, one who has laboured, harder than any of us, perhaps, with such dignified persistence, and such indomitable energy, for our persistent dignity, in suchwise as may well stimulate our energies to a correspondingly indomitable vigour. His example remains to us. We may not emulate, with any hope of attainment. his almost Machiavellian memory, his—I had almost said Crichton-like culture; but we may all emulate—and this is the lesson which his example furnishes to students—his single-minded directness of aim, his perseverence, his unflagging industry; and that, moreover, with the certain assurance that honest work, thoughtful work, with no scamping, and none of what he called "dissolute" evasion of difficulties, but resolute encounter, must have its reward: must issue in a natural result of such working causes. I heard him say, once: "Trouble is not a word in my vocabulary." Of course toil, work, labour, fatigue: all these he knew, and you must know if you are to win any prize. But not trouble, as something to be shirked, or minimised. And while I repeat the question which I cannot answer, who is to succeed him, as the all-round musician? all here, especially the younger generation, may say, each one—I will. I may not ever succeed him, in that fashion; but, coming after him, I will succeed like him, in his fashion, by a stainless course of devotedness to the highest in art, never swerving from the path of unsullied purity of motive, aim, and endeavour.

PROVINCIAL.

Bishop's Stortford.

A highly successful Evening Concert was given in the Great Hall, on Tuesday, Oct. 16, the vocalists being Madame Clara West, Miss Lottie West, Mr. Joseph Heald, and Mr. James Bayne, solo violinist, Miss Kate Chaplin, solo clarionet, Mr. H. Philpot, accompanist, Mr. Philip Sharpe. A large audience testified their approval of the programme, which was carried out by these artists in a way quite worthy of their reputations.

Manchester, October 23.

On Thursday last at the Gentlemen's Concert Hall, Mr. Max Meyer gave a chamber concert which though hardly in any part of it remarkable, was of considerable and sustained interest. Mr. Mayer is an esteemed pianoforte teacher here, and the artists who assisted him are well known to Manchester concert-goers. Of his playing we may say that it is impossible not to admire its extreme conscientiousness, and he often shows a grasp of the composer's meaning which we have failed to mark in more pretentious performances. But unfortunately he has so small a hand that he is compelled to adopt a special manipulation for certain passages; and it is to this physical effect that we attribute his excessive use of the forearm, which too often results in the production of an unpleasantly harsh and unsympathetic tone. The instrumental portions of the programme consisted of Brahms' Sonata in E minor for pianoforte and violoncello, op. 38, a fine work, though with a tendency to diffuseness and involvement in the first movement, Beethoven's G major Sonata for pianoforte and violin, op 96, and a very brilliant Trio in F major by Saint-Saëns. The violoncello part in these was taken by Mr. Carl Fuchs, an artist whom we have praised more than once in these columns. On the present occasion there was a roughness about his tone which we have not noticed before. and which we hope is only temporary. Mr. Bauerkeller, the violinist of the evening, played with delightful smoothness and purity, and the Beethoven Sonata was one of the most enjoyable events of the programme. Some interesting vocal selections were given by Mr. Spengel, who, perhaps achieved his greatest successes in "Werner's Lied," a capital song by Mr. Max Mayer, and M. V. White's "Chantez, Chantez, jeune inspirée." Mr. Mayer's second concert takes place in January.

Birmingham, October 22.

Sir Arthur Sullivan's visit to Birmingham, an event which has been looked upon with keen interest not only by the musical portion of our large community, but by all classes of men devoted to the welfare, progress, and education of this great town, has restored that entente cordiale, the existence of which, at the time of the festival was so seriously threatened. After his masterly address, Sir Arthur attended a reception at the Council House, given by the Mayor to the Institute of Chartered Accountants, and later on was present at a Smoking Concert, organised in his honour by the Clef Club, of which he is president. An excellent programme rendered in a musicianly and artistic style by leading local musicians had been arranged by the Clef Club Committee, the principal performers being Dr. Winn, Mr. F. Ward, Messrs. Priestley, Mr. Peacock, a young local baritone, who possesses a fine rich voice of rare timbre, Mr. Crosbee, Mr. Brewerton, and Mr. Langston.

The Festival Choral Society's performance of the "Redemption," on Thursday last at the Town Hall, was well attended, and augurs well for the remainder of the series. The choruses were uniformly good, their intonation and ensemble perfect, and the orchestra, under Mr. Stockley's careful direction, never played better. They had the advantage of excellent leaders in Messrs. F. Ward and Abbott and Mr. Ould as principal violoncellist. The soli were taken by Madame Dotti, Miss Morley, Mr. Henry Piercy, Mr. Brereton and Mr. Robert Grice, most valuable and artistic help being given by Mr. C. W. Perkins on the organ. Madame Dotti was suffering from a bad cold, and had, in fact, just risen from a sick bed, but in order not to disappoint the Committee she appeared. The performance as a whole reflected much credit on all concerned. A capital little chamber concert was given at the Council House on Friday during the Mayor's reception. Two artists new to Birmingham made their appearance, Miss Lena Law (contralto), and Mr. Harold Lavery (baritone). Miss Law possesses a fine rich contralto, her phrasing is perfect, her enunciation distinct. She created a most favourable impression, and was well received. Mr. Lavery's voice has a considerable range, is powerful and pleasing. He sang with much dramatic fervour "Molloy's Lighthouse Keeper." The instrumentalists were Dr. Winn (piano), Mr. F. Ward (violin), Mr. A. G. Priestly (violoncello), who afterwards took part in the Clef Club Concert. Carl Rosa's opera company appear this evening for the first time this season. Their week's repertoire will include "Robert la Diable," "La Juive," "Mignon," "Carmen," "Le nozze di Figaro," and "The Bohemian Girl." Mr. Barton McGuckin, and Miss Julia Gaylord are again cast for principal parts. They have not been heard in opera in Birmingham for a considerable time.

Glasgow, October 23.

A large and fashionable audience attended the Queen's Rooms on Thursday evening, October 18, to witness the debut of Miss Pauline Hofmann, a young pianist, and native of this city. Miss Hofmann played with intense feeling and gave every satisfaction. to those present. Her programme included: Weber's Concerto in C, first movement, Brahms's Capriccio in F minor; Beethoven's Sonata in C, op. 53, and Liszt's (a) Soirées de Vienne in A, and (b) Etude, Walderauschen. At the end of the Etude a magnificent laurel wreath was presented to the debutante, and Mr. Seligmann, in a few words, explained that the fellow students of Miss Hofmann, at Berlin, being unable to be present, had sent the wreath as a token of the regard and esteem in which they held her.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Advertisements of Concerts, &c., will be received up to 4 p.m. on Thursdays, if addressed to the Manager, 138a, Strand, W.C. "The Musical World" is the recognised medium for advertising London, Suburban, and Provincial Concerts, and has no other address whatever for the reception of communications.

Knighthood of the Legion of Honour, 1878. Knight Commander of Villa Viraga, 1883. Gold Medals at the principal International Exhibitions.

JOHN BRINSMEAD & SONS'

UPRIGHT IRON GRAND PIANOFORTES combine the Elegance and Convenience of the COTTAGE with the perfection of Touch, Tone, and Durability of the HORIZONTAL GRAND. Prices from 40 Guineas upwards.

JOHN BRINSMEAD AND SONS, Pianoforte Manufacturers, 18, 20, 22, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W. Lists free.

THE "EMPRESS" PIANOS

ARE the best value in the market. Workmanship cannot be surpassed. Touch and tone unequalled. Professors and others are invited to inspect these beautiful instruments. Prices from 20 guineas. Ten years' guarantee with every instrument. Messrs. Chudleigh Bros., 140, Strand, London.

WALTER BACHE SCHOLARSHIP.

It is proposed to close the Subscription List of the above in October. Intending Subscribers are requested to send their names at once to the Hon. Secretary, in order that they may be included in the Hon. Treasurer's Statement of Accounts, which will be issued as soon as possible after that date. Those who have already kindly promised donations, but have not yet paid them, will oblige by forwarding them either to the Hon. Treasurer, Mr. Alfred Littleton, 1, Berners Street, W., or to Mr. C. A Barry, Hon. Secretary, Gloucester Lodge, Laurie Park, Sydenham;

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE, and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be of the greatest efficacy in every form of disease. Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.

Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT, 78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 3, or by letter

---

THE RIGHT HON. LORD KNUTSFORD, G.C.M.G. Engravings from the original Portrait of Lord Knutsford, by J. F. Acret, are now being issued. Steel Line Engraving, by Harold Bourne. Artist's proof, £1 1s., Enfield House Studio, Windmill Hill, Hampstead.

Musical World Portraits.

NOVEMBER 3 - HERR WALDEMAR MEYER.

NOVEMBER 10 - - - - - MR. WILLIAM NICHOLL.

Publishers' Announcements.

NEW LEGITIMATE TEACHING METHOD.

GILHAM'S KEYBOARD INSTRUCTOR.

Patented througheut the World. Price 2/6. Post Free 2/9.

HOW TO PLAY THE

PIANO, ORGAN, OR HARMONIUM,

In the shortest time and easiest and simplest manner.

WALTER SCOTT, 24, WARWICK LANE, LONDON.
AND FELLING, NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, ENGLAND.

SIMS REEVES: HIS LIFE. By Himself.

Ready Oct. 8, at all Libraries and Bookstalls,

SIMS REEVES: HIS LIFE. By Himself. 1 Vol., demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

London: Simpkin, Marshall, and Co., and London Music Publishing Company (Limited), 54, Great Marlborough Street, W.

Positively Ready Oct. 8,

SIMS REEVES: HIS LIFE. By Himself. 1 Vol., demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

London Music Publishing Company (Limited), 54, Great Marlborough Street, W.

VIOLIN TUTOR.

PRACTICAL VIOLIN SCHOOL, for Home Students. A Practical Book of Instructions and Exercises in Violin Playing, for the use of Amateurs, Self-learners, Teachers and others. By J. M. FLEMING. 1 vol., demy 4to, cloth gilt, price 7s. 6d.; also in monthly parts, 7d. "Can be heartily recommended to students who wish to lay a solid foundation for good and artistic playing."—Musical Standard.

London: L. UPCOTT GILL, 170, Strand, W.C.

TO COMPOSERS,—RIDGEWAY and CO., Music Publishers, 10, Argyll Street, W. undertake the REVISING, PRINTING, and PUBLISHING of Musical Works upon exceptionally low terms. The finest work in the trade. Estimates upon receipt of MSS. IMPORTANT.—Composers' Works included in Catalogue and introduced without extra charge.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR THE VOICE,

By T. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 27, Harley Street, W.

THE VOICE.

A Complete Explanation of the Throat and its Functions in Breathing and in the Production of Voice, will be found in

"ELOCUTION, VOICE, & GESTURE."

By RUPERT GARRY.

Remedies for Clearing and Strengthening the Voice, and for the Cure of Hoarseness, Sore Throat, and other derangements of the Breathing Tubes.

"The section on the Voice is well considered and trustworthy, based as it is on the writings of authorities on the question of the Hygiene of the Vocal Organs."—STAGE.

"The Book contains many valuable hints in regard to Voice and Gesture."—VOICE (New York).

POST FREE, 1s. 2d.

London: Bemrose, 23, Old Bailey, E.C., and of the Author, at his residence, 49, Torrington Square, W.C.

IN SIX GRADES,

Price Two Shillings each.

Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:

A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,

By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWANN SONNENCHEIN and CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE;
And all Book and Music Sellers.

The Organ World.

THE MUSICAL ART IN CHURCH.

In one of a series of articles on this subject, in an American paper, Mr. F. Norman Adams observes:—For this very pertinent reason should the hymn or chorale be studiously attended to by musicians, for through these simple channels for good the masses can be influenced in a very important manner, and much harm has been done by neglect in the execution and treatment of the hymn. Its metrical structure melodically should be easily grasped by the ear, without in any way being commonplace or possessing sentiment foreign to the Sacred Service in which it is employed, and this should be in every way supported by plain and dignified harmony, with modulations appealing to all, as most natural for if other means than these be employed, the object of the hymn will be defeated to a considerable degree by those who have to make an effort, even to participate in this portion of Congregational Worship. The speed should be sufficient to ever keep alive the interest of all concerned, and should be maintained firmly by the musician in charge, as nothing is so contrary to the spirit of Praise as a tempo which signifies to all intents and purposes, apathy, whereas the greatest willingness and feeling should exist in offering praise; it cannot be extreme in any case, but there should always be a definite tempo adhered to expedient to circumstances, and on no account should this be altered after the hymn has once been commenced, except where the text absolutely demands it, as there is an exception to every rule. The instrumental tone in accompanying should always be ample in every way, and not too subordinate to the vocal, as is generally the case in the Church's Music, and elsewhere; many will thus be encouraged to participate in the singing, for this is a special trait in the character of all good accompaniments to vocal music, and which is especially aidful and also needful in large bodies of singers, professional or otherwise. Many have a wrong opinion upon this matter, demanding prominence to the vocal to the almost utter exclusion of the instrumental which can exhibit, intensify, and beautify the spirit of that which the singer produces. All these very important matters should be continually observed and borne in mind by the trained or skilled singers in the Congregation or Choir, as each individually brings about that which is desired for Congregational Singing, the amount of success depending upon the observance individually and collectively of the requirements of it.

The hymn should also be harmonised only by trained singers, and the melody strictly confined to all others, indeed, even by trained vocalists; unisonal singing should be complied with as a necessary adjunct to encourage Congregational participation in the melody of all hymns, and it would be of great benefit to congregations in this respect, if from time to time notice was given to sing the melody only, and to discourage the instruction of any other style amongst a congregation which musically must be so very diverse in attainments, to bring about any definite result, by singing any other part in the construction of the hymn than the melody, as much of the good intention of large bodies of men and women singing together is hindered by those whose imaginary fitness causes them to introduce a part other than that which accords with unisonal singing, defeating not only the grandeur of a large volume of tone coming from men and women at the distance of an octave in pitch, but making it unbearable for any one in close proximity who has had a training in these matters, and who, at least, has a sense of hearing musically to discern immediately the abortive attempts made in this direction, whereas, by all participating in the melody, and that only, those with musical fitness and attainments would, and could, considerably help out others in this respect, indeed, for successful Congregational singing, facts like these require only practically dealing with to estimate them at their proper value in a very short time. Unisonal singing is especially congregational, and all other parts foreign to the melody should be discouraged amongst large bodies of men and women, when united for singing hymns, etc., in church worship.

ANOTHER OLD WRITER ON CHURCH MUSIC.

Having quoted one old writer at length, it will not be out of place to give the words of another classic writer of the past, Bishop Atterbury—a zealous, restless spirit, but a thoughtful and observant man withal. Dr. Francis Atterbury (1662-1731) thus writes on the "Usefulness of Church Music":—

> The use of vocal and instrumental harmony in divine worship I shall recommend and justify from this consideration: that they do, when wisely employed and managed, contribute extremely to awaken the attention of all serious and sincere Christians; and their usefulness to this end will appear on a double account, as they remove the ordinary hindrances of devotion, and as they supply us further with special helps and advantages towards quickening and improving it.
>
> By the melodious harmony of the Church the ordinary hindrances to devotion are removed, particularly these three: that engagement of thought, which we often bring with us into the Church from what we last converse with; those accidental distractions that may happen to us during the course of divine service: and that weariness and flatness of mind, which some weak tempers may labour under, by reason even of the length of it.
>
> When we come into the sanctuary immediately from any worldly affair—as our very condition of life does, alas, force many of us to do—we come usually with divided and alienated minds. The business, the pleasure, or the amusement we left, sticks fast to us, and perhaps engrosses that heart for a time, which should then be taken up altogether in spiritual addresses. But as soon as the sound of the sacred hymns strikes us, all that busy swarm of thoughts presently disperses; by a grateful violence we are forced into the duty that is going forward, and, as indevout and backward as we were before, find ourselves on the sudden seized with a sacred warmth, ready to cry out with holy David, "My heart is fixed; O God, my heart is fixed. I will sing and give praise." Our misapplication of mind at such times is often so great, and we are so deeply immersed in it, that there needs some very strong and powerful charm to rouse us from it; and perhaps nothing is of greater force to this purpose than the solemn and awakening airs of Church music.
>
> For the same reason, those accidental distractions that may happen to us are also best cured by it. The strongest minds, and best practised in holy duties, may sometimes be surprised into a forgetfulness of what they are about by some violent outward impressions; and every slight occasion will serve to call off the thoughts of no less willing though much weaker worshippers. Those that come to see, and to be seen here, will often gain their point; and will draw and detain for a while the eyes of the curious and the unwary. A passage in the sacred story read, and expression used in the common forms of devotion, shall raise a foreign reflection, perhaps in musing and speculative minds, and lead them on from thought to thought, and point to point, until they are bewildered in their own immaginations. These, and a hundred other avocations, will rise and prevail; but when the instrument of praise begins to sound, our scattered thoughts presently take the alarm, return to their post and to their duty, preparing and arming themselves against their spiritual assailants.
>
> Lastly, even the length of the service becomes a hindrance sometimes to the devotion which it was meant to feed and raise; for, alas! we quickly tire in the performance of holy duties; and as eager and unwearied as we are in attending upon secular business and trifling concerns, yet in divine offices, I fear, the expostulation of our Saviour is applicable to most of us, "What! can ye not watch with me one hour?" This infirmity is relieved, this hindrance prevented or removed by the sweet harmony which accompanies several parts of the service, and returning upon us at fit intervals, keeps our attention up to the duties when we begin to flag, and makes us insensible of the length of it. Happily, therefore, and wisely it is so ordered, that the morning devotions of the church, which are much the longest, should share also a greater proportion of the harmony which is useful to enliven them.

But its use stops not here, at a bare removal of the ordinary impediments to devotion; it supplies us also with special helps and advantages towards furthering and improving it. For it adds dignity and solemnity to public worship; it sweetly influences and raises our passions whilst we assist at it, and makes us do our duty with the greatest pleasure and cheerfulness; all of which is a very proper and powerful means towards creating in us that holy attention and erection of mind, the most reasonable part of this our reasonable service. Such is our nature, that even the best things, and most worthy of our esteem, do not always employ and detain our thoughts in proportion to their real value, unless they be set off and greatened by some outward circumstances, which are fitted to raise admiration and surprise in the breasts of those who hear or behold them. And this good effect is wrought in us by the power of sacred music. To it, we, in good measure, owe the dignity and solemnity of our public worship; which else, I fear, in its natural simplicity and plainness would not so strongly strike, or so deeply affect the minds, as it ought to do, of the sluggish and inattentive, that is, of the far greatest part of mankind. But when voice and instruments are skilfully adapted to it, it appears to us in a majestic air and shape, and gives us very awful and reverent impressions, which while they are upon us, it is impossible for us not to be fixed and composed to the utmost. We are then in the same state of mind that the devout patriarch was when he awoke from his holy dream, and ready with him to say to ourselves, "Surely the Lord is in this place! This is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven."

Further, the availableness of harmony to promote a pious disposition of mind will appear from the great influence it naturally has on the passions, which, when well directed, are the wings and sails of the mind, that speed its passage to perfection, and are of particular and remarkable use in the offices of devotion; for devotion consists of an ascent of the mind towards God, attended with holy breathings of soul, and a divine exercise of all the passions and powers of the mind. The passions, the melody of sounds serves only to guide and elevate towards their proper object; these it first calls forth and encourages, and then gradually raises and inflames. This it does for all of them as the matter of the hymns sung gives an occasion for the employment of them; but the power of it is chiefly seen in advancing that most heavenly passion of love, which reigns always in pious breasts, and is the surest and most inseparable mark of their devotion; which recommends what we do in virtue of it to God, and makes it relishing to ourselves; and without which all our spiritual offerings, our prayers, and our praises, are both insipid and unacceptable.

At this our religion begins and at this it ends; it is the sweetest companion and improvement of it here upon earth, and the very earnest and foretaste of heaven; of the pleasures of which nothing further is revealed to us, than that they consist in the practice of holy music and holy love; the joint enjoyment of which, we are told, is to be the happy lot of all pious souls to endless ages. Now, it naturally follows from hence, which was the last advantage from which I proposed to recommend church music, that it makes our duty a pleasure, and enables us, by that means, to perform it with the utmost vigour and cheerfulness. It is certain, that the more pleasing an action is to us, the more keenly and eagerly are we used to employ ourselves in it; the less liable are we, while it is going forward, to tire and droop and be dispirited. So that whatever contributes to make our devotion taking, within such a degree as not at the same time to dissipate and distract it, does, for that very reason, contribute to our attention and holy warmth of mind in performing it. What we take delight in we no longer look upon as a task, but return to always with desire, dwell upon with satisfaction, and quit with uneasiness. And this it was which made holy David express himself in so pathetical a manner concerning the service of the sanctuary: "As the hart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God."

"When, oh when, shall I come to appear before the presence of God?" The ancients do sometimes use the metaphor of an army when they are speaking of the joint devotions put up to God in the assembly of his saints. They say we there meet together in troops to do violence to heaven; we incompass, we besiege the throne of God, and bring such a united force as is not to be withstood. And I suppose we may as innocently carry on the metaphor as they have begun it, and say, that church music, when decently ordered, may have as great uses in this army of supplicants, as the sound of the trumpet has among a host of the mighty men. It equally rouses the courage, equally gives life and vigour and resolution, and unanimity, to these holy assailants."

These words it will be conceded are still worthy of thoughtful perusal.

THE NEW GREAT ORGAN AT CHICAGO.

The following description comes from an article by Mr. Clarence Eddy in the Indicator:—

Chicago will have a great concert organ to adorn her new Auditorium. It gives the writer intense pleasure to make this statement, inasmuch as he now has the honour of presenting to the public the complete specification of what will be one of the largest and most perfect organs in the world.

Recognising the importance and the necessity of procuring a grand organ for their temple of art, the directors of the Chicago Auditorium Association have decided to obtain an instrument which shall meet every requirement of a most perfect concert organ. The contract has already been signed and placed with Mr. Frank Roosevelt, successor to the distinguished organ builder, Hilborne L. Roosevelt, of New York.

The specifications were prepared by Mr. Walter F. Crosby, the manager of the Roosevelt Organ Works.

Many novel features of remarkable interest and usefulness will be found in the scheme, and although a few organs, perhaps three or four, in the world are a trifle larger in the mere number of speaking stops, yet the advanced methods upon which this instrument will be built, including its many mechanical attributes, will certainly place it at the head of the list in resources and practical completeness.

The location of the main body of the organ will be in a chamber at the left of the stage and immediately in front of the proscenium arch.

This chamber, which was designed especially for the reception of the organ, has an average of 25 feet and 6 inches wide, 44 feet deep, and 34 feet and 6 inches high. The opening toward the hall is ample for a proper egress of tone, whilst the acoustic properties of the great room have already been pronounced absolutely perfect and entirely satisfactory. The key-box will be placed in the orchestra on the side nearest the organ, about 17 feet below the floor of the organ chamber, and located in such a manner that the player can observe the conductor in choral or other ensemble performances, and be seen by the entire audience. This position will also enable him to judge accurately of all the various effects produced.

The echo organ will be located in the attic over the Hall, about 70 feet away from the player. The pipes being enclosed in a swell-box, most marvellous effects of distance and echo may be produced. This feature of the organ will doubtless prove one of the most charming and attractive. Another novelty will be found in the Stage organ, which will be placed on a side wall of the stage sufficiently high to allow head room beneath. The design of this adjunct is to assist the chorus in operatic and choral performances, and at times it will be in of inestimable value. The pipes will be enclosed in a swell-box with a special view to protecting them from dust. This organ, like the Echo organ, will be played from one of the keyboards in the orchestra, by means of electric action. Perhaps the most striking novel feature of the entire organ will be the Cathedral Chimes, suspended in an elevated position above the stage, or one of the "fly galleries." They will consist of twenty-five heavy seamless, drawn-brass tubes of proper length and size, which will be struck by hammers actuated by pneumatics, controlled by electric action from the Solo organ keyboard. The compass of the Cathedral Chimes will be two complete octaves from tenor F up, which will enable the player to make innumerable changes.

A set of Carillons, composed of forty-four steel bars furnishes still another item of special interest, which in orchestral transcriptions and other brilliant concert pieces will prove particularly pleasing to the ear.

The following is a detailed specification:—

GREAT ORGAN (Four and one half-inch pressure).—Double Diapason, Contra Gamba, First Open Diapason, Second Open Diapason, Gem-shorn, *Viola di Gamba, *Viola d'Amour, Principal Flœte, *Doppel Flœte, *Quint, Octave, *Gambette, *Flute Harmonique, *Octave Quint, *Super Octave, *Ophicleide, *Trumpet, *Clarion (61 pipes); *Mixture 4 and 5 ranks (193 pipes); *Schaff 3 and 4 ranks (220 pipes).

Google

* Included in the Choir swell-box

SWELL ORGAN (Four-inch pressure).—Double Dulciana (lowest 8 pipes stopped), Bourdon (treble and bass, split knob), Open Diapason, Viola Diapason, Spitz Flœte, Salicional, Æoline, Flute Harmonique, Clarabella, Stopped Diapason, Octave, Salicet, Hohl Flœte, Flauto Dolce, Flageolet, Contra Fagotto, Cornopean, Oboe, Vox Humana, Clarion (61 pipes each); Vox Celestis (49 pipes); Cornet 4 and 5 ranks (281 pipes); Acuta 3 ranks (183 pipes).

CHOIR ORGAN (Three and one half-inch pressure and enclosed in a separate swell-box).—Double Melodia (lowest 10 pipes stopped), Open Diapason, Geigen Principal, Dulciana, Flauto Traverso, Lieblich Gedeckt, Quintadena, Octave, Fugara, Flute d'Amour, Nazard, Piccolo, Euphone, Tromba, Clarinet (61 pipes each); Dolce Cornet 5 ranks (305 pipes); Carillons (from tenor F up, 44 steel bars).

SOLO OGRAN (Eight-inch pressure and enclossd in a separate swell-box).—Stentorphone, Violoncello, Concert Flute, Viola, Flute Octaviante. Hohl Pfeife, Piccolo Harmonique, Tuba Major, Bass Horn (basset clarinet), Tuba Mirabilis, Orchestral Oboe, Orchestral Clarinet, Cor Anglais, Tuba Clarion (61 pipes each); Cathedral Chimes (25 Bell Tubes).

ECHO ORGAN (Three-inch pressure. Situated at a distance, enclosed in a separate swell-box and played from Solo keyboard).—Quintatœn, Keraulophone, Dolcissimo, Unda Maris, Fern Flœte, Dulcet, Flauto Traverso, Horn, Oboe, Vox Humana (61 pipes each); Armonia Ætheria 4 ranks (244 pipes).

STAGE ORGAN (Three and one-half-inch pressure. Located on stage, to accompany chorus, and played from Solo keyboard).—Open Diapason, Doppel Flœte, Octave, Trumpet (61 pipes each).

PEDAL ORGAN (Five and three and one-half-inch pressures).—Double Open Diapason, Bourdon, First Open Diapason (wood), Second Open Diapason (zinc, fifteen inches diameter), Dulciana, Violone, Stopped Diapason, Quint, Octave, Violoncello, Flute, Octave Quint. Super Octave, Contra Bombard, Trombone, Serpent (free reed), Contra Bassoon, (30 pipes each); Mixture 3 ranks (90 pipes).

COUPLERS.—Swell to Great, Choir to Great, Solo to Great, Swell to Choir, Swell Octaves on itself, Solo Octaves on itself, Solo to Pedal, Swell to Pedal, Great to Pedal, Choir to Pedal.

MECHANICAL ACCESSORIES.—Swell Tremulant, Choir Tremulant, Solo Tremulant, Echo Tremulant, Echo Organ Ventil, Stage Organ Ventil, Combination Release, Crescendo and Diminuendo Indicator. High Pressure Wind Indicator, Medium Pressure Wind Indicator, Low Pressure Wind Indicator, Belt Shifters, Engineer's Signal.

ROOSEVELT PATENT AUTOMATIC ADJUSTABLE COMBINATION ACTION.—Seven Pistons over Great Keys affecting Great and Pedal Stops, Eight Pistons over Swell Keys affecting Swell and Pedal Stops, Five Pistons over Choir Keys affecting Choir and Pedal Stops, Five Pistons over Solo Keys affecting Solo and Pedal Stops, Five Pedals affecting Pedal Stops and Pedal Couplers.

PEDAL MOVEMENTS.—Full Organ Pedal (to draw all speaking stops without throwing out the knobs), Pedal Ventil to silence any adjustable selection of Pedal Stops without throwing in the knobs), Solo "Off" Echo "On" on Ventil, Solo to Great Reversible Coupler, Swell Octaves Reversible Coupler, Solo Octaves Reversible Coupler, Solo to Pedal Reversible Coupler, Great to Pedal Reversible Coupler, Balanced Swell Pedal, Balanced Great and Choir Pedal, Balanced Solo and Echo Pedal, To close all boxes, To open all boxes, Crescendo Pedal and Diminuendo Pedal (affecting the entire instrument).

Roosevelt Patent Electric Action used.

SUMMARY.—Great Organ: 20 stops, 1,611 pipes.—Swell: 23 stops, 1,733 pipes.—Choir (Carillons): 17 stops, 1,210 pipes.—Solo (Chimes): 15 stops, 854 pipes.—Echo: 11 stops, 842 pipes.—Stage: 4 stops, 244 pipes.—Pedal: 19 stops, 630 pipes.—Couplers: 10 stops.—Mechanical Accessories: 13 stops.—Adjustable Combination Pistons: 25 stops.—Pedal Movements: 20 stops.—Total: 177 stops, 7,124 pipes, 69 Bells.

The stops of the different departments are symmetrically grouped, beginning always with those of the lowest pitch, and arranged in such a manner that the reeds all come nearest the keys, thereby being most accessible to the player. The couplers and mechanical accessories are all placed over the fourth manual, and arranged with equal care in their order. The pedal movements are located in accordance with the same system, and the combination pistons are situated over instead of under the manual they are intended to affect, a plan which will doubtless meet the approbation of every organist.

The seven different departments of the organ, namely: Great, Swell, Choir, Solo, Pedal, Echo, and Stage organs, are all controlled from the keyboards in the orchestra by means of the Roosevelt Patent Electric Action. The keybox, which is a marvel of compactness, will extend downward to the basement floor beneath, and in this extension the great labyrinth of Combination Action and Electric Contacts will be contained. Every particle of this action, however, is easily accessible from the four sides of the column, and notwithstanding the magnitude of the organ and its wealth of mechanical resources, yet the system of construction is a paragon of simplicity and perfection.

ANCIENT ORGANS.

By J. F. ROWBOTHAM.

(Continued from page 166.)

"Next as to the number of pipes which these ancient organs contained, and the number of keys on the beyboard. The accounts of the Latin and Greek writers, from which we have gathered much of the above narrative, though sufficiently full and satisfactory on the other points that we have discussed, are provokingly reticent on this final question which enables us to complete our conception of the ancient organ. Optatian, a court poet of the time, wrote a poem on the organ to please the then Emperor of Constantinople, who was a great lover of the instrument. Without saying a word in his poem beyond the merest platitudes about harmony, heavenly symphony, and so on, Optation has yet contrived, by an absurd conceit, to furnish more valuable information in a short compass than all the theorists and musical writers of his day convey. He has so arranged his verse that it shall represent the actual appearance of an organ itself. His poem bears an analogy to those bright masterpieces of wit, better known to last century than to this, which arranged drinking-songs in the form of wine-glasses, and love sonnets with the type so disposed as to imitate a heart, and so on. The first verse is of many letters, the second of one letter more than the first, the third of one letter more than the second, and so on, increasing by one letter each verse, so that the appearance of the lines exactly imitates the gradual rise of the front pipes of an organ, pipe after pipe. And to these he has appended shorter verses, all of the same length, which stand for keys; and one is at the bottom of each pipe. Now there are twenty-six verses in all, and twenty-six keys to match. In this way we know infallibly the compass of the ordinary organs at Constantinople in the time of Optatian.

"Taking a step from Constantinople to the court of Charlemagne at Aix-la Chapelle, we can easily and reasonably assert that this organ, built after the model of the ambassadors, had twenty-six keys, perhaps more, but certainly not less. As to the number of its pipes—since it could "roar as loud as thunder, and yet be reduced to the softness of a lyre or tinkling bell"—if we only credit it with one stop to perform the change from loud to soft, there must have been twice twenty-six, fifty-two pipes in the organ; if with two stops, thrice twenty-six, seventy-eight; and so on.

"Built, then, in this form, and after the pattern of the famous instrument at Aix-la-Chapelle, organs began to be multiplied throughout France, and from thence through Europe at large. In the shape we have described them they were a compromise between the water-organ and the wind-organ; and the latter seemed now to have effected a permanent lodgment in organ-building, and to have begun the career of triumph over the rival form, which it was eventually to oust from any partnership in the instrument at all. Yet, so conservative are men, and particularly organ-builders—if we may judge from the present instance—that the water-organ, pure and simple, was again and again returned to in the future, as if the utility of bellows was entirely out of the question. In the reign of Louis the Pious—Charlemagne's successor—we hear that the combind wind and water-organ had quite dropped out of fashion again, and nothing but water-organs were being built all over the and. The leading organ-builder of the time was named George the Venetian, and of all the numerous organs which he supplied to the churches and chapels of France, by the command of the King, not one was there which was not a water-organ of the most approved and indisputable type. This epoch was plainly one of retrogression for the art of organ-building, and similar epochs of retrogression followed at intervals afterwards. Little by little the water-organ dropped completely out of use. The compromise between the wind and the water-organ of Charlemagne's day supplanted it everywhere, and finally this form began to give way before the genuine wind-organ, as we understand it to-day.

It was towards the commencement of the tenth century that bellows began to appear universally as the feeder of the organ, instead of the hydraulic mechanism which had held its own so long. The unsteadiness and weakness of the bellows—the main objection in time past, and a drawback even in the present case when the bellows were still the same simple household bellows which are employed to light fires to day—this unsteadiness and weakness, then, of the blowing was counteracted by using a multitude of bellows at the same time to feed the organ, so that while one was filling another could be exhausting, and thus a constant current of air could be kept up. Or rather there were two ways to counteract the deficiencies of bellows:—The first was to use many bellows, as we have said, the second was to make the organ so small that one pair of bellows was sufficient to feed it. And both these plans were adopted. And the first tended to produce enormous organs, far larger than any water-organ ever constructed; while the second produced organs diminutive. For in the first case it is plain that since the supply of wind was unlimited, now that the idea had occurred of multiplying bellows indefinitely, there was no limit also to the size of the organ. And a remarkable spirit that was passing over the architecture of this period was loudly calling large organs into requisition. For at the early part of the tenth century, the time we write of, the great Romanesque churches were beginning to cover France, England, Germany, and indeed the whole of Europe. And what could a puny organ do in the illimitable vaults of their roofs or the deserts of their aisles!

(To be continued.)

RECITAL NEWS.

CHURCH OF ST. ANDREW UNDERSHAFT, E.C.—A crowded congregation attended at the Harvest Festival Service on October 17th. A surpliced choir of seventy-five voices, consisting of St. Andrew Undershaft and Spitalfields Church choirs, and choir-boys of St. John, at Hackney Grammar School, accompanied by the Church Orchestral Society of twenty-one players and organ (organist, Mr. F. J. Yeatman, of Spitalfields Church), rendered the music in an excellent manner under the conductorship of Mr. W. M. Wait (organist and choirmaster of St. Andrew Undershaft).

THE NEW PUBLIC HALLS, ALBERT PLACE, STIRLING.—Dr. C. E. Allum, organist of the Halls, gave the first recitaf of this season on the grand organ on 19th October. Programme: Overture to "The Occasional Oratorio," Handel; Communion in F, Grison; Grand Fugue in D major, Guilmant; Die Heinzelmannchen, Eilenberg; Capriccio in B flat, Filippo Capocci; Concert March in D major, Dr. Chipp; Organ Concerto in G minor, Handel; Larghetto from the Grand Symphony in D major, Beethoven; Turkish March from "The Ruins of Athens," Beethoven; Selections from "The Bohemian Girl," Balfe; Overture to "Le Domino Noir," Auber.

THE ABBEY CHURCH, SHERBORNE.—An organ recital was given by Mr. G. E. Lyle, organist of the Abbey, on Thursday, October 18. Programme: Offertory for the Feast of Pentecost, Ch. Collin; La Serenata, Braga; Overture to the "Occasional Oratorio," Handel; Reverie, Arthur Page; Offertory on a well-known Christmas Hymn Tune, G. E. Lyle; Fantasia Pastorale, Lefébure Wely; Military March, Beethoven: Slumber Song, L. Lacombe; Adagio from Symphony No. 4, Mozart; Concerto in G., Handel; Duo Poetique, J. Romano; March from "Athalie," Mendelssohn.

ST. BARNABAS, KENTISH TOWN.—On Saturday, Oct. 6, the weekly recital was given by Mr. H. A. Wheeldon, F.C.O., organist of Christ Church, Hendon. Programme: Allegto (from a Sonata), Mailly; Canzonetta, Nicodé; Introduction, Air and Varieties Guilmant; Two movements, Massenet; Introduction and Fugue in C minor, Merkel; Musette, Turpin; Andante and March, Klein.

ST. MICHAEL AND ALL ANGELS, FOLKESTONE.—Organ recital given by Mr. J. H. Holloway, on October 18. Programme: Occasional Overture, Handel; Fiancee Pensive, Field; Tocata, Fugue snd Fantasia, Bach; Adeste Fideles (Introduction, Air, Variations, Finale), A. Oake; Andantino in A flat, Schubert; Offertoire in G, Wély; Harmonious Blacksmith, Handel; Overture in E minor, Morandi.

LIVERPOOL.—Mr. W. T. Best gave a Recital at St. George's Hall, on the 11th and 13th inst. The programme included, Bourree, "Pastor Fido," Handel; Allegro (F minor), and Andantimo (A flat major, Op. 94), Schubert; Capriccio (Organ Pieces, Book 6), Capocci; Theme with Variations (D flat major), Noble; Arietta and Fuga Graziosa (G major), Wesley; Overture, founded on the Austrian Hymn, Haslinger; Allegro Moderato (Organ Pieces, No. 4, A major), Smart; Airs, "Dove Sei?" (Rosalinda) and "Reportai gloriosa palma" (Atalanta), Handel; Organ Sonata (No. 1, E. Minor, Mendelssohn; Spanish Sarabande (A minor), Auber; Overture, "Gemma di Vergi," Donizetti.

NOTES.

Speaking of a recently-departed musician, a contemporary says:—"The late Mr. Frederick Gunton was laid to rest at Upton, near Birkenhead. He was born at Norwich in the year 1813, and received his early musical education from Mr. Pettit, who was himself a pupil of the well-known Beckwith. At the age of twenty-one he was appointed organist of Southwell Minster, where the late Dean Anson was a prebendary, and, on his appointment to the Chester Deanery, he offered Mr. Gunton the post of organist, which he held for thirty-six years. He raised the tone and style of the cathedral services at once, and he was unsurpassed as an executant, while the exquisite expression and finish of his playing was the admiration of the musicians gathered at the first re-opening of the Cathedral. When the nave services were instituted, Mr. Gunton lent for some time his own private organ, and did all in his power to promote the efficiency of the choir. It was to him that the appointments of Mr. Irons (the gifted nephew of Sir George Elvey) and of Dr. Joseph Bridge were due, both having been his assistants."

Mr. C. L. Williams, the organist of Gloucester Cathedral, is writing a church cantata, entitled "The Last Night at Bethany," for the Three Choir festival of next year.

Messrs. Cornish & Co., Washington, New Jersey, U.S.A., make a remarkable offer. They are ready to send for fourteen guineas an American organ with five octaves, fourteen stops, sub-bass, two octave couplers, and two knee-swells, in a black walnut case, carved and gilt. Ten days' trial is allowed, and if the instrument suits the purchaser is to send price and freight; if it does not suit Messrs. Cornish will pay freight charges both ways!

A Church paper observes:—"To judge from the absence of all Church music from the Art Exhibition, and of all references to music from the Congress itself, one would suppose that it is a matter of no moment. Yet one can hardly suppose that we are prepared either to abolish music from our services, or cease to take an interest in it. And nowhere in the world is Church music in such a pitiful condition as at Manchester.

"However, on the Saturday morning the eleven o'clock service at Manchester Cathedral was attended by a considerable number of the members of the Congress, and the service was rendered in the fullest choral sense, the anthem being, 'How goodly are Thy tents,' sung to Sir Frederick Ouseley's music. Musically, it was as worthy of the occasion as it was unlike Manchester."

In the course of a capital address on "Music of the Victorian Age," recently delivered by the Rev. Dr. Hunt, at Trinity College, London, on October 9, the subject of Church music was not overlooked.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS CALENDAR.

On Tuesday next the Library will be open from 7 to 9.

The dates given of following arrangements must be regarded as preliminary and may be subject to slight alterations:

November 6. Lecture at 8. December 4. Lecture at 8. January 8. F.C.O. Examination (Paper work). January 9. F.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). January 10. F.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). January 11. Diploma Distribution. January 15. A.C.O. Examination (Paper work). January 16. A.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing) January 17. A.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). January 18. Diploma Distribution. February 5. Lecture. March 5. Lecture. April 2. Lecture. April 29. Annual College Dinner. May 7. Lecture. June 4. Lecture. July 16. F.C.O. Examination (Paper work). July 17, 18. F.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). July 19. Diploma Distribution. July 23. A.C.O. Examination (Paper work). July 24, 25. A.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). July 26. Diploma Distribution. July 30. Annual General Meeting.

Further arrangements and particulars will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Secretary.

95, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury.

(From Photographs by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, Bake

SIR CHARLES HALLÉ.

SIR CHARLES HALLÉ was born on April 14, 1819, at Hagen, near Elberfeldt, in which place his father was Kapellmeister. In 1835 he proceeded to Darmstadt, where he studied under Rink, and in the following year settled at Paris, remaining there for twelve years, one of the brilliant circle of artists who at that time held such a conspicuous position, amongst them being Cherubini, Liszt, and Chopin. After the revolution of 1848, Mr. Hallé left Paris for England, where he has since resided. His first public appearance was at the Covent Garden Orchestral Concerts, on May 12, 1848, when he played Beethoven's E flat Concerto. As the founder, in 1857, of the Manchester Orchestral Concerts, and on account of his connection with the Monday and Saturday Popular Concerts at St. James' Hall, Mr. Hallé has established himself as one of the most prominent conductors and pianists of our time. As a fitting recognition of his services to art, Mr. Hallé has received the honour of knighthood; and more recently has married Madame Norman-Neruda, with whom he had for many years been associated as an artist.

FOR nea has been h family which of distinguis
the subject c organist of th
March 21, 18 in Vienna, w in singularly the utmost with her fami
and at length monic Society continent, and Ludwig Nor after as Mada in 1869, and visitor, playin
the Provinces,

Festivals.

BRISTOL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

As we briefly implied in our last report, the chief musical interest of the Festival centred round the performance, on the evening of Wednesday week, of Berlioz's dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet." It is hardly necessary to recount here in detail the romantic circumstances under which this marvellous work was begun; how

Paganini, who "Symphonie F
atoire in 1831, following morni
he might thus,
leisure to write and Juliet," to t
by his admirati seen the Miss S of Juliet. With invention Berlioz has treated his noble theme, need not here be set down. Few would venture to question the wisdom of the design by which the lovers are represented only by instrumental music, and are not introduced as vocal personages in the ordinary operatic way. The work, save, perhaps, in the last numbers, abounds with examples of supreme beauty and orchestral power; the exquisite larghetto of the scene which is headed by the words, "Romeo alone; sadness, distant noise of the dance and the music," the succeeding allegro, and the marvellous skill with which the two themes are subsequently united; afford sufficient indication of the might of Berlioz's genius. Of the performance of the work it is possible on the whole to speak with satisfaction. The difficulties of the score are felt by soloists, chorus, and band alike; and it is in the highest degree to Sir Charles Hallé's credit that so excellent a rendering was possible. Of the soloists, Madame Belle Cole deserves the chief honours; her interpretation of the beautiful contralto "Strophes," "Premiers transports," was highly sympathetic. Mr. Watkin Mills and Mr. Banks, on the other hand, were somewhat dull in their respective parts, shewing but little appreciation of the meaning of their music.

The morning of Thursday was devoted to the production of Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Golden Legend." The Bristol public came together with an altogether unwonted enthusiasm to do honour to the graceful and popular work, and the performance was in every way worthy of their appreciation. Madame Albani, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley were as admirable as usual in the parts with which they are so closely identified, and Madame Belle Cole's fine voice was heard to excellent advantage in the contralto numbers. Especially tasteful and sympathetic was her rendering of the air, "Slowly, slowly, up the wall."

The evening concert was again of a miscellaneous nature, and calls only for passing comment. Its chief feature of interest was the performance by Madame Albani of the closing scene from "Tristan und Isolde," which the famous prima donna sang with magnificent passion and dramatic power. The performance of the "Messiah" on Friday morning brought the Festival to a close. It may not be out of place to express the regret that internal dissensions should have combined with public apathy in preventing the Festival from being a complete success. It appears that a strong feeling exists in Bristol that the local orchestra, conducted by Mr. Riseley, should be utilised, instead of being excluded by Sir Charles Hallé and his band. It would be absurd for outsiders to offer a positive opinion on the merits of the case. If Mr. Riseley be as good a conductor as he is an organist, he certainly ought to be competent for the post, as far as the duties of the actual conducting are concerned; but we do not pretend to know if he possesses the wide experience and special tact required for carrying through an important festival scheme. But all who recognise the importance to musical education of such functions, must join in hoping that before the next festival a modus vivendi may be found which shall unite all the opposing elements, and restore that perfect harmony and unanimity of aim which, in matters of this kind, is absolutely essential to success.

SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN ON MUSIC IN ENGLAND.

Sir Arthur Sullivan delivered his address as President of the Birmingham and Midland Institute on Friday night. Sir Arthur, who was very warmly welcomed, confessed that it was with very considerable diffidence that he spoke on the subject of music, because during his whole life his business had been to make music, not talk about it. It was so easy, in an address on music, either to sink into dull platitudes or to indulge in wearisome and, to many in a general audience, incomprehensible technicalities. Among the many advances in our country in the last half century surely none had been greater than that of music. Publications and performances were now so extraordinarily multiplied that the masterpieces—not only of the old composers but of the most modern writers—were brought within the means of everyone, more so, probably than in any other country; and England had thus, so far, the chance of again assuming the position that she held many hundred years ago—of being at the head of all Europe as a musical country. She was once (as he believed the most Teutonic of German historians now allowed) a long way in advance of other nations; yet, how little was this known or acknowledged by ourselves! So far back as the year 1230 a piece of music composed by a monk of Reading (John of Fornsete was his honoured name, and the MS. of his work was now at the British Museum) was far, far in advance, both in tunefulness and expression, of anything else produced at that time. He alluded to the celebrated glee, in six vocal parts, "Sumer is a cumin in." And they should observe that the pre-eminence implied many years (he might say centuries) of previous study and progress on the part of our countrymen. But they need not trust to implication only; records existed to prove how diligently and enthusiastically music was pursued in England from the reign of King Alfred to the time of the Reformation. In 550 A.D. there was a great gathering and competition of harpists at Conway—an early Eisteddfod. In 866 King Alfred instituted a professorship of music at Oxford, and there must have been concerted music in those Anglo-Saxon times, for in the British Museum an old picture might be seen of a concert consisting of a six-string harp, a four-string fiddle, a trumpet, and a crooked horn. Curiously enough, with the exception of the horn, this was exactly the same combination of instruments to be seen nearly every Saturday night playing outside a London public-house. Even then music had begun to exercise an influence on trade; the metal industry and joinery must have already benefited by it, for in the 10th century the monk Wulston gives a long description of a grand organ in Winchester Cathedral, and St. Dunstan, famous for his skill in metal work, at the same date fabricated an organ in Malmesbury Abbey, the pipes of which were of brass. Long before the Conquest three-part harmony was practised. Thomas à Becket, on his visit to France to negotiate the marriage of Henry II., took with him 250 boys, who sang in harmony of three parts, and this was expressly recorded to have been "in the English manner." In those days musicians were well paid, for at the wedding of Edward I.'s daughter they received 40s., equal to £20 of present money.

Joan of Arc and her tragical end seemed a long, long way back in history, and yet only thirty years after her death the first musical degree was conferred at Cambridge, and even now in all Europe none but English Universities conferred musical degrees. In the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries the English school progressed. Edwards, Redford, Shepperd, Tye, White, Johnson, and Marbecke were much in advance of any of the predecessors of Palestrina on the Continent—their equals in science, their superior in tunefulness and the common sense of "sweet reasonableness" of their music. Morley, Weekes, Wilbye, Ford, Dowland, and Orlando Gibbons, maintained the supremacy in the latter half of the sixteenth century, and for nearly 200 years England had to depend on illustrious foreigners—Handel, Haydn, Spohr, Mendelssohn, and of the Italian Opera, which exclusively occupied the attention of the fashionable classes, and, like a great car of Juggernaut, overrode and crushed all efforts made on behalf of native music. This decadence was largely due to the enthusiasm with which commerce was pursued, and to the extraordinary way in which religious and political struggles, and later still practical science, absorbed English energies. We were content to buy music, and make churches, steam engines, railways, cotton mills, constitutions, anti-Corn Law Leagues, and caucuses. Now, however, the condition of things is changing—it has changed. And yet we are only at the entry of the Promised Land. Habits of mind and modes of action are still to be found which show that we have much to do before we become the musical people that we were in the remoter ages of our history. We do, indeed, love music, but it is with an inferior affection to that which we lavish on other objects of life. We have not yet ceased to talk whilst music is being performed; we still come in late to a concert, and whilst some noble and pathetic work is enchaining the attention of everyone we too often insist upon disturbing twenty or thirty people and destroying their enjoyment because we have bought seats Nos. 23, 24, and 25, and mean to have our money's worth. And if we come late, depend upon it we always go out before the concert is finished to show how thoroughly independent we are. We have a lesson to learn from both Germans and Frenchmen in this respect. Even yet, in the mind of a true Briton, business, society, politics, and sport all come before art. Art is very well. We have no objection to pay for it, and to pay well; but we can only enjoy it if it interferes with none of these pet pleasures, and in consequence it has often to suffer. Having alluded to the influence of such songs as "Auld Lang Syne," and the ballads of Dibdin, Sir Arthur continued:—Well, this was all sentiment, many might be disposed to say. Yes, but he who refused to accept the force of sentiment on human nature was a blind fool. Many a statesman had found, and would still find, this to his cost That the force of sentiment had been recognised they knew from the fact that certain music had been prohibited by reason of its influence. In Poland no man, woman, nor child was allowed by the Russians to sing any of their own national songs. They raised feelings dangerous to the conquerors.

He had himself witnessed the extraordinary effect of their rhythmical music on the Arabs in Egypt, more especially at the great ceremony of the departure of the Sacred Carpet for Mecca. Now, if this influence was so great, ought it not to be recognised and controlled by proper education—education, not for performance but for appreciation and understanding? After referring to the work of the Royal College of Music and the Royal Academy of Music, Sir Arthur observed that musical education played a prominent part at the Midland Institute. He read on the list of teachers names of men well known to him—their names were a guarantee that the instruction was sound. But there was one particular branch for which no professor was appointed, and with good reason, for every teacher on the staff included it in its instruction—namely, the art of listening. We wanted good listeners, rather than indifferent performers, and with that little moral axiom and warm thanks for the compliment they had paid him in being such attentive listeners he would conclude (loud applause).

Concerts.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

There was a little surprise in store for visitors to the Crystal Palace Concert on Saturday last, to wit, the following interesting notice prefixed to the programme:—

"THE THIRTY-THIRD ANNIVERSARY
OF THE FIRST CRYSTAL PALACE SATURDAY CONCERT, OCTOBER 20, 1888.

It was on Saturday, October 20, 1855, that the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts were started with the following programme:—

Part I. (String Band in the Music Court.)

Festival Overture ... ... Leutner.
Fantasia Brillant for Violin, on Airs from "Der Freischütz" ... Moeser.
Violin, MR. MANNS.
Solo for Pianoforte, "The Chimes of England"... ... ... Holmes.
Pianoforte, Mr. DARLINTON.
Romance for Violin, Opus 50, in F ... ... Beethoven.
Violin, Mr. MANNS.
Overture, "Oberon" ... ... Weber.

Part II. (Wind Band in the Central Transept.)

Overture, "Ruy Blas" ... ... Straus.
Charivari ... ... Zulehner.
Marian Redowa ... ... Manns.
Overture, "Le Roi d'Yvetot" ... ... Adam.
Musical Director ... ... AUGUST MANNS.

Similar arrangements were—according to the little Book of Programmes from which the above has been copied—continued until Saturday, December 1, when the performance took place in the North Transept, and the programme consisted of the following selection of pieces:—

Overture, "A Midsummer Night's Dream ... ... Mendelssohn.
Solo for Flute on Airs from "The Huguenots" ... ... Briccialdi.
Flute, Mr. HARTMANN.
Two Movements from the Seventh Symphony ... ... Beethoven.
Overture, "William Tell" ... ... Rossini.
Solo Violin, "Farewell to Switzerland" ... ... Manns.
Mr. MANNS.
Waltz, "Guirland" ... ... Strauss.
A Musical Picture "Night and Morning" ... ... Strauss.
Muiscal Director ... ... AUGUST MANNS.

This programme indicates that the performance of the Wind Band had been discontinued on Saturdays, and that a trial of Symphonies was, for the first time, ventured upon. How, from that day, the Saturday Concert scheme grew, and gradually developed into a musical institution of high importance, is now so generally known that it requires no further elucidation; but I cannot resist the temptation of pointing out the difference in the musical taste of thirty-three years ago compared with that of to-day. At that distant period the musical provision for the visitors to the Crystal Palace consisted almost entirely of such selections as are contained in the second part of the above programme of October 20, 1855. Within the last ten days, however, I have played by special request, Symphonies by Haydn, Mozart, Schubert, and Schumann, and I have also received a request for all the Symphonies by Beethoven in chronological order. This latter request has, up to date, been only so far complied with that the first five have been performed since last Saturday, but Nos. 6, 7, and 8, and the Orchestral Movements of No. 9, will be included in the programmes of next week. The fact that this marvellous change in the musical requirements of the residents round the Crystal Palace has, to some extent at least, grown out of that little seed which was sown in the musical ground of the Palace thirty-three years ago to-day and that we can now point with pride to the possession of an Orchestra which is able to do full justice to the demand for refined performances of high class musical compositions, will, I feel sure, be sufficient excuse for my having, in the pride of my heart, referred in these lines to the Thirty-third Anniversary of the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts.

AUGUST MANNS."

In the face of such facts as these it would surely be no more than an obviously legitimate application of the golden rule Palmam qui meruit ferat were the "powers that be" to enable Mr. Manns to quote Longfellow, in the following slightly amended form:—

"Something attempted, something done
Has earned a knight's repose."

A knight's nightly repose, bièn entendu, for of course no one wants Mr. Manns to repose during the day, for a very, very long time to come.

It seemed a pity that a programme more typical of the good work done during so many years, had not been chosen. It was, however, interesting enough, as its subjoined scheme will show:—

Overture ... ... "Preciosa" ... ... Weber
Symphony ... ... No. 2 in E flat (op. 35) .. ... Goldmark
First time in England.
Air ... ... "Oh, night, gentle night" (Eve) ... Massenet
Madame VALLERIA.
Song ... ... "I'll sing thee songs of Araby" ... ... F. Clay
Mr. Braxton Smith.
(His first appearance at these concerts.)
"Concerto Romantique" for Violin and Orchestra ... ... B. Godard
First time at these concert.
Violinist—Mr. Johannes Wolff.
(His first appearance at these concerts.)
"Orchestral Introduction to 3rd act of Tannhauser" ... ... Wagner
Canzone ... "Mia Piccirella" (Salvator Rosa) ... Gomez
Madame VALLFRIA.
Violin Solos ... ... (a) "Reverie" .. ... Vieuxtemps
(b) "Polonaise" ... Weiniawski
Mr. J. WOLFF.
Incidental music to "Merchant of Venice" with Italian Serenata for Tenor ... ... Sullivan
Mr. BRAXTON SMITH.

Goldmark's first symphony, "A Country Wedding," is so genuine, pleasing, and deservedly popular that when, not long ago, the composer donned Wagnerian armour, and discarded his natural style for a bad imitation of the Bayreuth master's manner, judicious listeners shook their heads and—it was not important enough to grieve about—smiled. In his new symphony, heard at Dresden for the first time in public less than a year ago, not a trace of Wagner is to be found. A change of front apparently so sudden and complete would excite surprise if experience had not taught us that the opus number of a work is no safe guide to a composer's progress. We may indeed believe that Goldmark, seeing his error, has thrown Wagner overboard, but it is also not impossible that, to put it in Irish fashion, his second symphony was composed before his first. Leaving, however, such problems to the historian, let us consider the work on its own merits.

The first movement, though unfortunately too suggestive of Beethoven and Schubert (especially of the "Eroica," and "B minor" of those masters) is by far the best of the four as regards cohesion, craftsmanship and melodious charm. These qualities and its lucidity and conciseness are certain to secure for it admirers, among those whom professional duties have not rendered too exacting. The rest of the work, as far as one hearing justifies opinion, seemed lacking in unity of purpose. Thus the slow movement (in A flat minor) might very well be an elegy, a supposition favoured by the dramatic and grief-laden episode for strings which follows the plaintive principal theme. The Scherzo, (allegro quasi presto, six-eight time, violins con sordini) might be a dance of sprites and elves, but that a Trio written in the style of the old English air throws one off the scent. As to the last movement its character is happily indicated by the programme analysts who dubs it a "clog dance." An attempt made to encore the scherzo may be attributed to the fact that the "old English" trio was confided to a cornet. What modern audience could resist a cornet—the instrument par excellence of an advertising age! Goldmark's "second" symphony will be heard again, for in spite of many faults it is never dull. It belongs, however, to a class of works, symphonic in form, but not in idea, and the number of which, being on the increase, suggests that perhaps the symphony, like the "Caucasian," is "played out."

Mr. Johannes Wolff played so well that one regretted his choice of M. Godard's Concerto. It is "Romantique" in name only. In substance it is tedious, uninteresting and flimsy. Madame Valleria's contributions were warmly appreciated, and Mr. Braxton Smith made a distinctly favourable impression. His voice, though at present of high baritone rather than of tenor quality, is rich and resonant and he phrases with taste. A word must be said for the perfect playing of the orchestra in the Tannhauser piece, but it was at its best all through the concert, and what that means no reader of the Musical World needs telling.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

At the concert given at the Royal College on Thursday of last week, an excellent programme was most admirably performed. Its most important number, the Brahms's second sextet in G minor, was played in a manner with which little fault could be found. The repertory of modern chamber music includes no work more difficult of adequate interpretation than this, and the students are to be cordially congratulated on a rendering most creditable whether regard as an example of style or of technique. The idyllic charm of the opening movement, the graceful scherzo allegretto with its bustling trio, the lovely adagio, and the romantically beautiful finale were played with an intelligence which spoke volumes for the careful artistic training of the performers. Mr. Chapman gave Beethoven's sonata "Les Adieux' with a fair measure of success, but we do him no injustice in saying that only ripened powers can cope with this most exacting work.

Mention should also be made of Mr. Hobday's performance of an Elegié, for viola, by Viextemps, in which he displayed a good tone, accurate intonation, and correct phrasing. Miss Hoskins, who possesses a soprano voice of excellent quality and sympathetic timbre, sang with great charm.

GRESHAM HALL, BRIXTON.

Miss Alice Patten held her second annual concert on Monday evening at the Gresham Hall, Brixton, when the only drawback to the success of the evening was the fact that the fair benificiaire was suffering from a severe cold, and could not sing the pieces allotted to her. Amongst those who appeared, favourable mention must be made of Madame Florence Winn, who sang a new song by Roeckel, entitled "Who was It" with much archness Miss Maud Cameron, Mr. Robert Hilton and Mr. Charles Chilley; whilst a clarinet solo by Mr. G. A. Clinton was extremely well rendered. The hall was crowded.

"JUDAS MACCABEUS" AT HOVINGHAM.

The Hovingham Musical Festival, on 16th and 17th inst., which was a great success, concluded with the "Judas Maccabeus." The principals engaged were Misses Eleanor Rees, contralto, Agnes Wilson, and Gertrude Aylward, sopranos, Messrs. Frangeon Davies, baritone, and Braxton Smith, tenor; Messrs. Sutton and Eckener, violin, Emil Kreuz, viola, W. T. Barker, harp, Vivian and Chapman, flute; conductor, Rev. Canon Hudson.

RUSSIAN OPERA

The long-deferred performance of Rubinstein's "Demon" took place at the Jodrell (late Novelty) Theatre on Monday. A willing, if not always discreet, orchestra had been engaged; the chorus was competent, and the conductor, Signor Truffi, brought energy and an evident familiariarity with his task to bear on its fulfilment. With regard to the principal artists, whilst it would obviously be unreasonable to look for stars of the first magnitude in performances given at theatre prices, the standard is so far above mediocrity, that leniency is hardly needed, and, in the case of Mr. Winowgradow, the representative of the title rôle, would be impertinent. There should be a golden future in store for this young artist, if success be governed by the fitness of things.

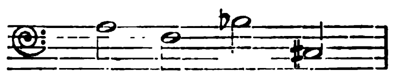
With regard to the work itself, our readers need scarcely be reminded that its performance at Covent Garden in 1881 was a mere succes d'estime, due, more than anything, to the personal popularity of its composer, who conducted. We cannot say that a second hearing, after seven year's interval, gives us cause for complaint against those responsible for the shelving. "The Demon" is too sombre and earnest to appeal successfully to the frivolous portion of our public; while those prepared for the reception of serious works are far too critical and exacting to be satisfied with it, whether regarded from a musical or from a dramatic point of view. It is singular that Rubinstein, in whose chamber-music beautiful and ear-haunting themes are so plentiful, should have written an opera distinguished, musically, by paucity of ideas—ideas, that is, which, having a recognisable individuality, may be called themes, and the development of which constitutes, of course, a great part of the musical interest, whether regarded as music per se, or as helping to elucidate and unify the emotional progress of the drama. Music, no doubt, is an emotional language, but a continuous flow of emotional utterance, however powerful and truthful, is not art until it has found its expression by moulding for itself a musical form, possessing either characteristic or plastic beauty. Whether such forms be afterwards used for the elaboration of a continuous musical web, as with Wagner, or for the construction of arias, cavatinas, &c., matters nothing—the initial requirement for work which is to be musically interesting is a theme or themes, heard either in the orchestra or on the stage. It goes without saying that there are a few passages which the ear may retain, even in "The Demon"; but these, for the most part, belong to airs and choruses in which a coleur locale is sought. The pretty ballet music was unfortunately omitted on Monday, and the deficiency we have pointed out was thus more glaring.

Dramatically "The Demon" is most irritating. It suggests so much, that one fancies none but a bungler could have missed the production of a masterpiece of power and significance. The devil, sick of evil-doing, yearns for a woman's love. Think of the possibilities latent in this magnificent conception, and then compare with them the puerile, dull and mechanical libretto of Rubinstein's "Demon!" Turn we from the disappointing work to its interpretation. We have already spoken of the baritone, Mr. Winowgradow, to whom, as the Demon, the honours of the evening fell. His voice, a powerful but mellow baritone of extensive range, was used with great tact, since the fire and intensity displayed were always and obviously well under control, thus suggesting a measure of strength admirably in keeping with the character. Mdlle. Wieber, as the persecuted heroine, was sympathetic and sang with considerable charm. The small part of the Prince—a mere puppet—was agreeably sung by Mr. Jumaschew, and Mdlle. Ivanowa, Mdlle. Gordiewa, Mr. Weisshoff, and Mr. Liarow, in smaller parts, gave satisfaction. It is to be regretted that our visitors did not commence their campaign with an opera altogether new to Londoners. They have several such in their repertoire, and yet they threaten "Traviata" and "Rigoletto!" Que diable vont-ils faire dans cette galère?

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL WORLD."

SIR,—Can any of your readers inform me through the medium of your paper why the following passage should have been used by Bach, Handel, and Mozart:—



Bach uses it as the subject of his fugue in A minor (No. 20 of the second book of the "48"); Handel as the theme of the chorus "And with his stripes," in the "Messiah;" and Mozart as the subject of the Kyrie in his Requiem.

I should like to know also whether there are instances of the use of this subject by composers of earlier or of later date than the above named.—Yours obediently, Esher, Surrey. J. E. ADKINS.

[The above subject has much in common with that given to Bach by Frederick the Great as a test of his improvising power—afterwards used by the master in his "Musical Sacrifice." This and many other striking and easily recognisable groups of notes appear to have been regarded by composers as common property. Numerous instances of the practice are given in Mr. Rockstro's admirable article "Subject," in Sir George Grove's Dictionary of Music. The interest, in fugues, being due less to the subject itself than to the counterpoints extracted from and added to it, composers would naturally take pride in occasionally treating a theme which had already done duty, either in mere unconscious emulation, or by way of enabling comparisons to be made, or because perceiving in such themes possibilities as yet unrevealed.

The practice is, however, by no means confined to the subjects of fugues. How far it is admissible in freer forms without justifying a charge of plagiarism is a very delicate question upon which much might be said, and upon which we shall be glad to receive letters from those who have made a study of that much neglected science, Musical Ethics. ED. M. W.]

STUDENTS AS TEACHERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL WORLD."

SIR,—I will endeavour to reply to "L's" letter this time so clearly that not even he will be in danger of misunderstanding my meaning.

Now, music is not a mere trade, with its "Trades Union" protections and such like, therefore a pupil of any of the principal colleges, whether a paying-student or a scholar, has as much right to teach as "L" and his friends. If he, the paying-student or scholar, be competent, he will be successful; if not (and in this case he will be disobeying the rules of the College) he will certainly not be successful.

On the other hand, if "L," and others who entertain his ideas, are thorough musicians, in the literal sense of the word, they themselves will be successful, and of course need not fear competition from any incompetent persons. But if they are only "musicians" or "professionals" in the lower meaning of these words (here I hope "L" can understand me) and try to make believe that they are competent teachers, they will necessarily be ousted by those who are able to teach, whether present or past, paying-students or scholars of the principal academies.

By-the-bye, many of the paying-students as well as scholars of the R.C.M. hold the diplomas of F.C.O. and A.C.O. What has "L" to say to this? He will surely not raise his voice against that great and grand institution—the College of Organists—for granting diplomas to students when "merely pupils and not scholars" (using "L's" words), of the Royal College, or other colleges?—I remain, yours faithfully,

SCHOLAR.

HEADING THE POLL BY 212 VOTES.

(From Modern Truth.)

"THE great success and popularity of an article has now been confirmed by a Post Card Competition inaugurated by that old, well-known, popular, and influential paper, The Chemist and Druggist, a copy of which reaches each week nearly, if not quite, every dealer in medicine in the United Kingdom and the Colonies, besides having a circulation on the Continent and in the United States. The publishers of this paper recently conceived the idea of ascertaining from the Trade the most popular preparation for outward application now being manufactured and sold. With this object in view, they invited a Post Card Competition, each dealer to name on said post card the preparation for outward application which was most popular with his customers.

St. Jacobs Oil	384
Elliman's Embrocation	172
Holloway's Ointment	32
Allcock's Porous Plasters	19
Bow's Liniment	7
Perry Davis's Pain Killer	7
Vaseline	4
Cuticura	2

while eight other outward applications had one vote each.

It will thus be seen that St. Jacobs Oil was named by 384 different dealers as being the most popular remedy sold for outward application, leaving 251 (less than half), to be divided among fifteen other remedies; showing couclusively, if further evidence were wanted, that St. Jacobs Oil to-day, stands pre-eminent among all other proprietary medicines for outward application. In fact the sales of St. Jacobs Oil are more than double those of any other proprietary medicine in the world, and ten times greater than those of all other liniments and embrocations.

This wonderful success rests on the solid foundation of merit (acknowledged everywhere) which St. Jacobs Oil possesses, combined with systematic, original, and dignified advertising, which has always characterised the announcements of the proprietors. It is advertised only for such ailments as it will cure, and hence it possesses the confidence of all classes of people, and has become a household word in every civilised conntry.

The great success and popularity of St Jacobs Oil has become the subject of comment by almost the entire press of the country; in many instances the leading articles of large and influential papers have been devoted to the details of what seem to be almost magical cures effected by the use of St. Jacobs Oil in local cases, coming under the immediate attention of the publishers. St. Jacobs Oil is endorsed by Statesmen, Judges, the Clergy, the Medical Profession, as well as by people in every walk of life.

The curative powers of St. Jacobs Oil are simply marvellous. It is wholly an outward application. It conquers pain quickly and surely. It acts like magic. It penetrates to the seat of the disease. It cures even when everything else has failed. It has cured thousands of cases of rheumatism and neuralgia which had resisted treatment for the greater part of a lifetime. It has cured people who have been crippled with pain for more than twenty years. After the most thorough and practical test, St. Jacobs Oil has received Six Gold Medals at different International Exhibitions for its marvellous power to conquer pain. It is used extensively in the leading Hospitals and Dispensaries of the metropolis and provincial cities, and also on board Her Majesty's Troopships and the Cunard Steamship Company's Fleet. Put up in white wrappers for human use (the Oil is also sold in yellow wrappers with such ingredients added as are particularly adapted for use on horses cattle, and dogs), price 2s. 6d. per bottle, of all dealers in medicine throughout the world, or sent post free by the proprietors, The Charles A. Vogeler Company, 45, Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

If there should be any of our readers who have never used St. Jacobs Oil, we most strongly advise them to secure a supply in case it should be required. We believe that it is the most valued, and possesses the greatest merit of any preparation for outward application ever offered to the public."

ADVANCES
ARRANGED on LIFE POLICIES, REVERSIONS, ANNUITIES, SETTLED INCOMES, and every kind of negotiable SECURITY.
BILLS DISCOUNTED.
W. AUSTIN & CO., BANK CHAMBERS, 44, HAMMERSMITH ROAD, KENSINGTON, W.

THE TRINIDAD
Cocoa and Chocolate Company,
Offices and Show Rooms: 35, Walbrook, London, E.C.
Works: Queen's Road, Battersea London, S.W.
Manufacturers of all kinds of COCOA and CHOCOLATE for the Wholesale and Retail Trades
PRICE LISTS ON APPLICATION.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice.

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

Without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s, 9d. ; also in bottles for abroad.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings

FOR

VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,
ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,

Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

Vins de Champagne

ARTHUR ROEDERER, Reims.

MAISON FONDEE 1876.

SODEN MINERAL PASTILLES.

FOR THROAT
IRRITATION
COUGHS
& COLDS.

"9, HARLEY STREET,
"I regard them as extremely valuable in obstinate Catarrhal affections of the Throat."
MORELL MACKENZIE, M.D.

FOR BRONCHITIS
ASTHMA
& CATARRHAL AFFECTIONS.

SPECIALLY RECOMMENDED BY Sir Morell Mackenzie WHOSE TESTIMONIAL IS WITH EACH BOX

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING For a cheque for £5 we will print a ten-line advertisement in Two Million copies of leading English Papers. This is at the rate of less than One Penny each 1,000 Circulation! The advertisement will appear in but a single issue of any paper, and consequently will be placed before Two Million different newspaper purchasers—or TEN MILLION READERS, if it is true, as is sometimes stated, that every newspaper is looked at by five persons on an average. Ten lines will take about eighty ordinary words. Address with copy of advertisement and cheque, or send Sixpence for SELL'S illustrated books on advertising. HY. SELL, SELL'S ADVERTISING AGENCY, LTD., 167 & 168 FLEET STREET LONDON E.C.

ESTABLISHED THREE QUARTERS OF A CENTURY.

A. S. MALLETT, ALLEN & CO.,

CONTRACTORS TO
HER MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE,

Type Music Printers,
LITHOGRAPHERS, &c.

PORTRAITS.
(Speciality.)
POSTERS.

WINDOW BILLS.
BOOKS.
CATALOGUES

STATIONERY.
SHOW CARDS.
PLANS, &c., &c.

68 & 70, WARDOUR ST., LONDON, W.
TELEGRAPHIC ADDRESS—"ASMAL, LONDON."

CASSON'S
PATENT
Organ-Building System.

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c., See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart.
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The Late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A.
Mr. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—

CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN COMPANY, LIMITED,
DENBIGH.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Studio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO.

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had but little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me, or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

To Mr. Ainsworth. BURNHAM-HORNER, F.R. Hist. S.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and Organ student who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music or organ arrangement, with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is, as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours, I. B. THORNTON,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them ; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly, HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.
To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilitate the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number), each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS,
BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

ASCHERBERG

"I only perform an when I ascribe my succe extent to the excellent In your factory, on which to play before the p convinced that I shall a everywhere give prefe
Pianos over all others, assurance of my unbound

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR

Ascherberg Pia

211, REGENT STR

"THE SHAVER'S DELIGHT."

12 MONTHS LUXURY FOR 12 PENCE

(a shilling shaving stick lasts a year.)

Printed by A. S. Mallett, Allen & Co., London, and Published by William Pearce, at 138a, Strand, W.C., to which address all communications must be sent.

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1836.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 67.—No. 44. SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1888. PRICE {3d. Unstamped. 4d. Post Free.

THE
KARN AMERICAN ORGANS

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,
WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs, equal to, if not surpassing all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

New Illustrated Catalogue and Price Lists Free of the
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:
THE SCHREIBER PIANO COMPANY,
3, NEWMAN MANSIONS, NEWMAN ST., LONDON, W.

W. G. THOMAS'S PIANOS!!

WILLIAM G. THOMAS
TRADE MARK.
REGISTERED.
UNITED WE PROSPER

ARE the BEST and cheapest in the market. Professors and others will find an advantage by sending for the Free Illustrated lists. Splendid Iron-framed PIANOS, full-compass trichord, in Walnut Wood Cases, at popular prices. Packed FREE. Contracts taken for large quantities. Old Pianos bought for Cash, or taken in exchange.

W. G. THOMAS, Pianoforte Manufacturer,
Gospel Oak Grove, Malden Road, Kentish Town, London, N.W

PIANOS, PIANOS
Harmoniums, and American Organs,
ON THE THREE YEARS' SYSTEM

Pianos ..	...	from 10s. 6d.	per month.
Harmoniums ...	„	5s. 0d.	„
American Organs	„	7s. 0d.	„

Any Instrument sent home on receipt of first Instalment.

OUR UPRIGHT IRON GRAND, Trichord, Double Check Repeater Action, Celeste Pedal, 15s. per month.

This is a thoroughly sound and elegant Instrument, warranted in every respect.

Other Glasses equally cheap.

Write for Catalogue to
SHENSTONE, SHENSTONE & CO.,
Steam Works: GRANGE ROAD, LEYTON, E.
Show Rooms: 70, Hackney Rd.; 37, St. Peter's St., Islington; & 29, Kennington Pk. Rd.

Special Notices.

HERR WALDEMAR MEYER has the honour to announce TWO GRAND ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS, which will take place at ST. JAMES'S HALL, on Thursday Evening, November 22, and Wednesday Evening, December 12, to commence each evening at 8 o'clock. Tickets 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 3s., and 1s.; at all the libraries and musicsellers, and of Mr. Basil Tree, Ticket Office, St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, W. The concerts under the management of Mr. W. B. Healey.

PROGRAMME of HERR WALDEMAR MEYER'S First Concert, Thursday Evening, November 22.—Symphony in D major, No. 1 (Mozart); Violin Concerto (Brahms); Suite de Pieces (Ries); Ballad Overture, "The dowie dens o' Yarrow" (Hamish MacCunn); Violin Concerto (Mendelssohn); Overture, "Namensfeier" (Beethoven).—Orchestra of 70 performers.—Leader, Mr. A. Burnett.—Conductor, Professor C. Villiers Stanford.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.—Mr. Henschel, conductor.—The series of the Third Season, 1888-89, will comprise 10 EVENING CONCERTS, to take place at ST. JAMES'S HALL, on the following TUESDAYS, Nov. 20, 27, Dec. 4, 11, Jan. 15, 22, 29, Feb. 5, 12, 19, and in addition (not included in the subscription) two Afternoon concerts on Wednesdays, Dec. 19 and Feb. 27. Subscription, Reserved seats for the series of 10 concerts, £2 15s. and £1 10s.; single tickets, 7s. 6d. and 4s.; unreserved seats, single ticket, 2s.; admission, 1s,, at the usual agents.—N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.—FIRST CONCERT (Third Series), TUESDAY EVENING, November 20, at 8.30. Programme: A Faust Overture (Wagner); Symphony in A, No. 7 (Beethoven); Ballet Music from "Rosamunde" (Schubert); Overture, Scherzo, and Finale, Op. 52 (Schumann); New Suite, Op. 46 (first time) (Grieg). Tickets, reserved seats, 7s. 6d. and 4s., unreserved seats, 2s. and 1s, at St. James's Hall; usual agents; and of N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

MR. HAROLD SAVERY begs to announce a Series of FOUR POPULAR CONCERTS at the LYRIC HALL, EALING, on Saturdays, Nov. 10, Dec. 8, 1888, Jan. 12, Feb. 9, 1888.—Vocalists—Soprani, Mlle. Marie de Lido, Miss Louise Phillips, and Mrs. Dyke; Contralti, Miss Meredith Elliott, Miss Frances Hipwell, and Miss Lena Law; Tenori, Mr. William Nicholl, Mr. Hirwen Jones, Mr. Ralph Dawes, and Signor Mhanes; Baritoni, Mr. Herbert Thorndike and Mr. Harold Savery; Basso, Mr. Franklin Clive.—Violin, Miss Adelina Dinelli; Flute, Mr. John Radcliffe; Clarionet, Mr. Julian Egerton; Pianoforte, Mr. Alfred Izard, Mr. Albert H. Fox, Mr, Henry R. A. Robinson, Mr. Sidney Naylor.—Recitations, Miss Maud Webster and Mr. Odell.

TOWN HALL, STAINES.—Dr. J. H. LEWIS' Annual CONCERT, Thursday, November 8, at 8.—Artists, Miss Annie Chappell, Mr. Ralph Dawes, Mr. Frank May; Zither, Miss Fry; Horn, Mr. E. L. Jordan; Pianoforte, Mr. J. H. Lewis, Mus. Doc.—Tickets at local Agents.

PUBLIC HALL, Harrow.—Mr. WHATMOOR'S CHAMBER CONCERTS, Second Concert, November 9. Trios; Dvorák, Op. 21; and D minor, Mendelssohn. Piano Solos: Liszt and Chopin. New song, "Eidôla," by Freeman Whatmoor. Vocalist, Mrs. Trust. Trains from Baker Street direct.

MISS AMY FLORENCE (late Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, has the honour to announce that she will give a GRAND EVENING CONCERT at Steinway Hall (Lower Seymour Street, W.), on Saturday, Nov. 17, commencing at 8 precisely carriages at 10.30 o'clock; when she will be assisted by the following eminent artists:—Mr. Iver McKay, Mr. Walter Wells, Mr. R. Henri Goddard, and Mr. George Gear; Miss Eliza Thomas, Miss Clarice Willats, Miss Mabel M. Smith, and Miss Kittie Claremont. Conductor, Signor Gennaro Bisaccia, of Covent Garden. Manager, Mr. Edwin Barlow, 14, Bessborough Street, St. George's Square, S.W.

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, or £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the Manager of The Musical World, 138 a, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, Hamilton Terrace,
St. John's Wood, N. W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.,
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, Finsbury Park Villas,
Green Lanes, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI,
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor).
12, Westbourne Park Terrace, W.

Mr. F. St. JOHN LACY,
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist (Baritone),
Fitzroy Mansion, Charlotte Street,
Fitzroy Square, W.

Mr. H. MARTIN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor)
Address—7, Wimpole Street,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mr. LOUIS N. PARKER, A.R.A.M.
(Composer, Conductor, Lecturer),
Sherborne, Dorset.

Mr. G. W. L. MARSHALL-HALL
Gives Lessons in Composition and Dramatic Singing,
151, Rucklidge Avenue,
Willesden Junction, N.W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts)
Bosworth House, Husband's Bosworth,
Rugby.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o Nolan & Jackson.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorio),
41, Welbeck Street,
Cavendish Square W

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, Portsdown Road, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concerts and Oratorio),
29, Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio)
2, Sedgmoor Villas,
Private Lessons given. Camberwell, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
(Ballad, Oratorio, etc.)
31, Monmouth Road,
Bayswater, London, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, Norfolk Square, Hyde Park, W.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts),
56, Duchess Road,
Edgbaston, Birmingham.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 36, Albion Place, Hyde Park W.; or to Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul,
26, Old Bond Street, W.,
Or, 270, Elgin Avenue, Maida Vale, W.

Mr. IVER McKAY
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concerts),
1, Milner Square, London, N.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Old Trafford, Manchester.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio),
28, Devonshire Street, Islington, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
Gothic Lodge,
Lordship Lane, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, St Stephen's Afenue,
Shepherd's Bush, W.

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
40, Stanley Gardens, Belsize Park, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Villa D'Este, Lake Como, Italy.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, Upper Mount Street, Dublin.

Mr. RAPHAEL GORDON
(Operas, Concerts, and At Homes).
c/o Signor Odoardo Barri,
60, Margaret Street, W.,
Or, 97, Talbot Road, Bayswater, W.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street.

Mr. FREDERICK KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, Canfield Gardens, S. Hampstead.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
Egremont, Croxted Road,
West Dulwich, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert),
63. Stafford Place,
Buckingham Gate, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, etc.),
30, Lancaster Road, Notting Hill, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorios, and Operas),
70, Portsdown Road, Maida Vale, W.

Harp.

Mr. W. T. BARKER
(Concerts, At Homes, Receptions),
49, Ebury Street, Belgravia, S.W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22a, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified." 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
"Yelbana," 99, Anerley Road,
Pupils visited and received. Anerley, S.E.

Miss FREDA MARSDEN,
Solo Violinist (Concerts, At Homes, etc.),
Address. c/o Mr. Charles Woolhouse,
81, Regent Street,
London, W.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul (sole agent),
26, Old Bond Street, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella (Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST,

Telegraphic Address: "Healey's Agency," London

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Madame WILSON-OSMAN (A.R.A.M.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert), (Soprano)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss FLORENCE EMERSON (Soprano)
(Concerts, Oratorio, At Homes, Etc)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey.
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W, B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss FALCONAR (Contralto),
(Oratorio Concerts Etc.)
24, Oppidans Rd, Primrose Hill, N.W
or Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor),
28, Belsize Road, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. HENRY PHILLIPS (Tenor),
Sole agent, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio)
Business Manager, W, B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone),
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W, B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Herr WALDEMAR MEYER (Solo Vlnst)
Concerts, At Homes, Etc.)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street,
Regent Street, W.

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC. Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter 1830. Under the immediate patronage of
The Queen and the Royal Family.
Principal—Dr. A. C. MACKENZIE.
The NEXT FORTNIGHTLY CONCERT, THIS EVENING, at 8.
The Half-Term will begin Thursday, November 8. Exam. for admission this day (Saturday), Nov. 3, at 2.
Metropolitan and Local Exams., 1889, Syllabus on application.
Tenterden Street, Hanover Square. JOHN GILL, Secretary.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, Kensington Gore, London.
Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.
President—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director—SIR GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL.D.
NEXT COLLEGE CONCERT will be on NOVEMBER 15.
The Half-Term will commence on November 7.
Regulations and all information may be obtained of the Registrar, Mr. GEORGE WATSON, at the College CHARLES MORLEY, Hon. Sec.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and EXAMINATION, etc., and the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music. Instituted 1872.
President, THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.

LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN INSTRUMENTAL AND VOCAL MUSIC.

Arrangements are being made for holding Examinations in Vocal and Instrumental Music at the following, amongst other, centres:—Nov. 5-10—Portsmouth, Herne Bay, St. Ives, Southampton, Dover; Nov. 12-17—Bristol, Taunton, Exeter, Chippenham, Ilminster, Cheltenham, Brecon; Nov. 19-24—Southport, Preston, Bolton, Salisbury, Bath, Hastings, Brighton, London, S.E.; Nov. 26—Dec. 1—Birmingham, Leicester, Northampton, Wolverhampton, Shrewsbury, Colchester, Yarmouth, King's Lynn, Reading; Dec. 3-8—Liverpool, Carnarvon, Manchester, Chesterfield, Weymouth, Plymouth, Maidstone; Dec. 10-15—London, Croydon, Surbiton, Rochester, Aldershot, Guildford; Dec. 17-22—Leeds, Newcastle, Stockton, Carlisle, Newark, Bedford, Hull, York, Keighley, Halifax, Swindon, Stroud. These dates are subject to alteration.

Applications for particulars and regulations should be made to the Secretary, Trinity College, London, or to the local Secretary of the centre. A complete list ofthe latter can be had from the College. By order of the Academical Board.
Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C. PATRON—THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.

Established to advance the cause of Church Music and the truest interests of its Professors.

Members of the Church of England and Ireland and the Episcopal Church of Scotland are eligible for Election.

Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates), 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members), 15s, per annum; Life Subscription, 5 guineas.

Prospectus and further particulars may be abtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

MUSIC SCHOOL.—CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL for Girls (Limited), 6, Upper Baker Street, Regent's Park.—Head Music Mistress, Miss Macirone, late Professor of Royal Academy of Music. Fee, three guineas per term. Children from 8 to 13 allowed to begin and continue for two guineas per term. Pupils not in the School may pay an entrance fee of one guinea. The fees payable in advance. Pupils wishing to join Violin Class under Mdlle. Gabrielle Vaillant, to send in their names to Miss Macirone. F. J. HOLLAND, Chairman.

ANGLO-FRENCH SCHOOL, FOR DAUGHTERS OF GENTLEMEN, Granville House, Hornsey Rise, London, N.—Miss NASH and Madlle. RAYMOND, assisted by a staff of efficient Professors and Teachers, receive Pupils to board and educate. Special attention given to Music. Healthy and pleasant locality. Terms moderate. References kindly permitted to parents of pupils and to the Editor of "The Musical World."

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

PARENTS seeking ENGLISH or FOREIGN SCHOOLS, TUTORS, or GOVERNESSES for their children, are invited to write fully to
J. F. MOON, M.C.P.,
85, NEWMAN STREET, LONDON, W.,
Who will forward prospectuses and every requisite information, free of charge.

Particulars required are: age and sex of pupil, locality preferred (if any), and about what terms will be paid. Housekeepers, Nursery Governesses, and Companions are also recommended. Hours 11 till 3. Saturdays closed

SPECIAL TINNED TUBES.
FOR
TUBULAR PNEUMATIC ORGANS.
MELLOWES & CO., LEAD PIPE WORKS, SHEFFIELD

DRURY LANE.—AUGUSTUS HARRIS,
Lessee and Manager.
EVERY EVENING, at 7.30, concluding at 11.15.
A New Grand Spectacular Drama entitled,
THE ARMADA, a Romance of 1588.
By HENRY HAMILTON and AUGUSTUS HARRIS.
Box-office open daily from ten till six.

THE ARMADA at DRURY LANE.—Winifred Emery, Edith Bruce, Kate James, Ada Neilson, and Maud Milton; Leonard Boyne, Luigi Lablache, Edward Gardiner, Victor Stevens, A. Beaumont, Henry Loraine, S. Dawson, Mervin Dallas, Stanislaus Calhaem, B. Robbins, F. Dobel, Basil West, W. Uridge, F. Harrison, U. Winter, Fitz-Davis, W. S. Parkes, H. Denvil, F. Thomas, F. Collins, and Harry Nichols.

THE ARMADA.—The unanimous praise bestowed upon this historical drama and grand spectacle by the leading Press of the country is nightly endorsed by the crowded audience which fill Drury Lane Theatre at each performance.

THE ARMADA.—It is impossible in an advertisement to give an idea of the volumes that have been written enthusiastically commending this play to the attention of the lovers of the artistic, the beautful, and the true.

RUSSIAN NATIONAL OPERA COMPANY.

THE JODRELL THEATRE (late NOVELTY), Great Queen Street, Long Acre, W.C.—Sole Lessee, Mrs. CHURCHILL JODRELL. Manager, COL. H. J. SARGENT.

THE DEMON.—TO-NIGHT, and every night next week.

RUSSIAN NATIONAL OPERA COMPANY.

THE DEMON.—TO-NIGHT, and every night next week.

To Orchestral and Choral Societies.

ALFRED MAPLESON,
47½, LEICESTER SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
(Opposite the Alhambra).
Music Librarian and Copyist to H.M. The Queen, also the Philharmonic Society, Richter, Sarasate Concerts, &c. LENDS ON HIRE Orchestral and Vocal Music of every kind—OPERA, CONCERTS and FESTIVALS supplied.
SOLE AGENTS IN LONDON FOR
RICHARD WEICHOLD'S TESTED (DRESDEN) VIOLIN STRINGS.
Which surpass all others, See Testimonials from Joachim, Carrodus, Sarasate, &c.
MUSIC COPYING A SPECIALITY.

The Musical World.
LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1888.

⁂ MSS. and Letters intended for publication must be addressed to "The Editor." Rejected MSS. cannot be returned unless accompanied by stamped directed envelope.

⁂ Advertisements and business communications generally should be addressed to the Manager (Mr. WILLIAM PEARCE), whose receipt—with the sole exception of the Proprietor's—for amounts due since August 1, 1888, will alone be recognised. Advertising, Publishing, and General Offices: 138*a*, Strand, London.

Facts and Comments.

A curious story comes from America concerning Madame Patti's success in San Francisco. Soon after the diva had returned from that place to New York, she received a small packet, in which was found a silver dollar, accompanied by the following terse but suggestive note:—

"DEAR MADAME,—The accompanying coin was found in the street just after your departure. As nobody here was left with a dollar, I am certain the money must be yours, and therefore forward it."

Madame Patti, without doubt, regards the incident as one highly complimentary to the power with which she fills houses and empties purses. For our own part, we see in it a forcibly satirical commentary on the rapacity of prima donnas.

As stated in another column, Dr. A. C. Mackenzie was presented at Bristol with an address, signed by 100 members of the South Midland Section of the National Society of Professional Musicians. In addition to the well-deserved compliment, however, Dr. Mackenzie has received a similar address from the members of the Central Committee of the same Society.

At a time when a proposal has been coolly made to boycott German musicians in England, it may not be amiss to call attention to the fact that Dr. Mackenzie's "Twelfth Night" Overture has just been performed at Vienna, and Mr. Cowen's Fifth Symphony is about to be played at Dresden.

The sixtieth anniversary of Madame Schumann's first appearance as an artist was celebrated at the Hoch'sche Conservatorium at Frankfort on October 21. Speeches were made in her honour, and addresses of congratulation presented by Senator von Mumm on behalf of the present teachers, by Herr Bern-Scholz on behalf of the directors of the Leipzig Gewandhaus, where Madame Schumann made her first appearance, as a girl of nine, sixty years ago, by Miss Fanny Davies on behalf of the English pupils, and by Fräulein Leuthäuser for the present pupils of the school. It would be superfluous to describe with what enthusiasm the illustrious artist and beloved teacher was greeted.

We referred a short time since to the illness of Herr Joachim, for which the great violinist had been undergoing the "massage" cure, under the care of a celebrated Amsterdam doctor. A private letter recently received from Herr Joachim conveys the welcome news that he is now completely cured of the attack of gout. The physician in question will receive the gratitude of all music-lovers for having restored to them their King Joseph I.

The tenacity with which certain benighted individuals cling to their beliefs in the worth of Wagner's music is really extraordinary, and the saddest feature in this persistent madness is that many of the unfortunate victims are of otherwise eminent rank. The Emperor of Germany, for instance, shares in the absurd belief that what has been termed with scintillant originality, the "Wagner Bubble," is not burst; and he has expressed a wish that a special commemorative performance of the "Meistersinger" should be given on January 27, the anniversary of His Majesty's birth. Moreover, it appears that there is still in Berlin a body which, in defiance of Mr. J. S. Rowbotham's inexorable logic, still dares to exist, and calls itself the "Wagner Society." This Society will give a concert of Wagner's music, on November 5, the programme of which will include the Venusberg music written for the production of "Tannhäuser" at Paris in 1861. Logic is truly in evil case when such things as these can be

The next Centenary will be that of the Royal Academy of Stockholm, which will shortly celebrate the hundredth year of its useful existence. The chief feature of the celebration will be a conference, over which King Oscar will preside, upon various important questions connected with Swedish musical art.

According to the latest reports from America, Mrs. Alice Shaw, the lady who, as "La Belle Siffleuse," was so popular a figure in London society last season, is having a very successful tour in the United States. Certainly it cannot be claimed that whistling is the most dignified and important form of art; but it must be admitted that Mrs. Shaw's performances were of a very clever kind. The skill and brilliancy with which she executed difficult fioriture passages, her purity of tone, and the general accuracy of intonation, were quite sufficient to account for the fair whistler's popularity. There is but one Mrs. Shaw; we shall not be charged with discourtesy when we hope that for her sake, and our own, there may not be another. A generation of whistlers is an appalling thing to imagine, and yet it seems not wholly impossible, if the following advertisement, which recently appeared in a contemporary, met with any adequate response:—

> WHISTLERS WANTED.—A well-known professor of singing trains ladies and gentlemen in artistic whistling, now so fashionable at concerts and West End At Homes. All having talents can be introduced, and paid engagements as above. Terms moderate.—Professor, care of, &c.

The farmer's boy, in the poem, whistled as he went for want of thought, an excuse which at least appears to have satisfied the poet. Could the amateur whistlers better that excuse?

Chinese opera is, to musical students, a thing of the greatest interest; but to the unregenerate amateur it is a thing diabolical, not to be borne. An instance of this has recently reached us from Chicago, in which enterprising city there lived a Chinese musician who rejoiced in the apparently inappropriate name of Song-Sing, and who earned his daily bread by the Homeric occupation of washing. It is scarcely necessary to say that he washed clothes—other people's! This musical washerman had gathered round him other Chinese musicians, worse than himself, if history sayeth true, with the assistance of whom he produced a horrible and heart-rending opera, called "The Chalk Circle. The dramatis personæ were three in number: first was the Widow Ma, played by one Tom-Ki-Kong; the heroine's name was Hattang, played by Bo-Ke-Wah; and then there was an Animal, a frightful animal, possibly of the Catawampuss or Slithy Tove genus. The orchestra consisted of violins, cymbals, tom-toms, and "Flums," the latter instruments being wooden drums. The story would appear to be the old one of the Judgment of Solomon; for there are two mothers, each of whom claims proprietary rights in a child. The true mother is quickly discovered, and the other woman is led away to the wings, where she is torn by the Animal into precisely 135 pieces! The noise of the performance was of a character so excruciating to the ears of a certain German baker who lived near the theatre, that during one of the rehearsals he rushed into the theatre and threw himself madly upon the band. What damage he inflicted is not quite obvious; but, at any rate, he was condemned to a fine of fifteen dollars. No doubt a Chinese opera is a vexatious thing to those who are unable to perceive the historical interest of the performance, but amateur criticism of this sort is extremely undesirable.

A series of Promenade Concerts will probably be given at "Olympia" during the approaching winter. The recent withdrawal of the licence applies, it appears, to the grounds only, and not to the building itself.

ROWBOTHAM v. WAGNER.

The current number h e Nineteenth Century contains a forcible reply by Dr. C. Villiers Stanford to Mr. Rowbotham's recent article on "The Wagner Bubble," from which we extract the most salient passages:—

"Mr. Rowbotham's article in the October number of this review would seem at first sight to have its best answer in the title which he has prefixed to it. To find its parallel in critical blindness one is forced back to the articles on Beethoven which appeared half a century ago in the Musical Quarterly Review.

* * * * *

To me it is at once a difficult and distasteful task to discuss Wagner, because, at this date when controversy is still warm, it is hard to defend Wagner without being written down as a Wagnerian by his

There is no obligation to accept Wagner's librettos as fine literature for enjoyment in the quiet of the study: it is enough that they are a sufficiently poetised material containing the right quality and quantity of ideas for serving along with music as a vehicle of emotion. But with what can Mr. Rowbotham compare them? With the jingles set to airs for brigands, roystering soldiers, and the other picturesque riffraff of Italian opera? One, indeed, is constantly at a loss to know where Mr. Rowbotham finds his standards. He speaks of the 'little' opera of 'Lohengrin.' Where is the larger overshadowing work outside this charlatan of a composer? Music, he tells us, has gone one way, Wagner another; and the musical enthusiast anxiously searches among the giants of to-day to find the man of might who has outstripped Wagner, or has even escaped his influence. Wagner, we are assured, had not the genius to work within the lines that satisfied his predecessors, and we are driven to ask where, in respect of mere musical accomplishment, there is evidence of a greater abundance of ideas and of richer fertility in their management."

THE C MINOR SYMPHONY.

Notwithstanding all that has been written upon it, the history of Beethoven's fifth Symphony is not yet complete. We know that it was to have followed the "Eroica," No. 3, and that Beethoven laid it aside for a time and interpolated the present No. 4, in B flat. A letter and receipt have recently been printed* which are said to show that the C minor was written for Count Oppersdorf, who now stands as the dedicatee of that in B flat. The reference in the letter to the three Trombones and Piccolo is conclusive, as neither the one nor the other figure in the finale to No. 4. Unfortunately, however, the letter has no date. The receipt though valuable—like every scrap from Beethoven's pen—is dated, but it is not so conclusive as it might be, because it does not indicate which Symphony is referred to. It may just as well be the 4th as the 5th, for the 4th was then ready, and indeed was performed in the following month, and moreover, it became Oppersdort possession. But the letter has a strong claim to notice as giving Beethoven's own account of the finale of the C minor. We therefore venture to translate both documents (the italics are in the original).

THE LETTER.

That you, my beloved, have run off without letting me know anything of your departure, has really disturbed me. Something in me has perhaps vexed you—certainly with no intention of mine. To-day I have too little time to be able to write to you. I will, therefore, only mention that your Symphony has been ready for a long time, and that I send it you by the next post.

You can keep† back 50 florins, since the copying which I had done for you comes at least to 50 florins. In case, however, you don't wish to have the Symphony, let me know about it before next post-day. In case you take it then do me the kindness to send me the 500 florins that are coming to me as soon as possible.

The last movement of the Symphony has 3 Trombones and Piccolo. Not 3 Drums, though it will make more noise and better noise than 6 drums. I am still curing my poor innocent finger, and for the last 14 days have been kept from going out by it. Good bye. Dear Count, let me hear something about you soon. I am not well. In haste your devoted Beethoven.

To GRAF OPPERSDORF, roppau, in Silesia"

The Count evidently sent the money, for the next document is a

"RECEIPT FOR 500 FLORINS, which I have received from Count Oppersdorf for a Symphony which I have written for him.—With my own handwriting,

1807, February 3. LUDWIG VAN BEETHOVEN."

This receipt, the writer of the article in which it and the letter are printed seems to refer to the C minor Symphony. But how, after the payment of 500 florins, the Symphony appeared with a dedication to Lobkowitz and Rasumofsky is at present impossible to say. It may be repeated that the B flat Symphony, which is dedicated to Count Oppersdorf, was first performed in March, 1807, a month after the date of the receipt. Perhaps the change of dedication took place after the Count had heard No. 4, for that work was not published till March, 1809.

The subject is curious and deserves closer investigation, which we hope it will receive from Mr. Thayer, Mr. Max Friedländer, or some other of the German biographers. G.

---

* In the Allgemeine Musik-Zeitung of Oct. 5, 1888.

† Abziehen; but the meaning is not clear. It should rather be the other way.

Concerts.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The rare and welcome sight of a full room on Saturday last gave food for reflection. This was the scheme:—

Concert Overture, "In Autumn" ... ... Grieg.
(First time at these concerts.)
Scena, for two solo voices, female chorus, and orchestra, "At the Convent Gate" (Op. 20) ... ... Grieg.
(First time at these concerts.)
Miss ANNA WILLIAMS and Miss MARIE CURRAN.
Benedictus for Orchestra... ... ... A. C. Mackenzie.
(First time of Performance.)
Walther's Prize Song (Meistersinger) ... ... Wagner.
Mr. EDWARD LLOYD.
Offertoire for Organ ... ... J. F. Barnett.
(First time of Performance.)
Played by the COMPOSER.
The Hymn of Praise ... ... Mendelssohn.
Miss ANNA WILLIAMS, Miss M. CURRAN,
Mr. EDWARD LLOYD, and the CRYSTAL PALACE CHOIR.
Organ, Mr. A. J. EYRE.
Conductor ... ... Mr. AUGUST MANNS

To which of these items the large attendance was due can scarcely be doubtful. The popularity of Mendelssohn is not so much on the wane as those who bewail the spread of modern tendencies would have us believe. Thoughtful musicians indeed, discovering that "Mendelssohn worship" savoured of blasphemy towards the epoch-makers of our art, have long ago agreed to a large deduction from the exaggerated estimate once in vogue; but the amateur cares little for such distinctions. Mendelssohn will hold his own until sublimity and depth are more in demand than charm and comprehensibility; strength and significance more valued than grace and finished workmanship. That it will be long before such an attitude can be spoken of as general, need give no cause, even to advanced thinkers, for chagrin. It were well if nothing less worthy than the pure and refined strains of Mendelssohn occupied the attention of the British music-consumer. Students heard the "Lobgesang" on this occasion with interest freshened by a recent series of articles in the Musical Times, and by a discovery, announced in the programme, by Sir George Grove, that "the Allegro of the first of the orchestral movements is founded on the Symphony in B flat, frequently mentioned in Mendelssohn's letters of 1838-39 as in progress." On this point however, the indefatigable analyst promises further information before long. Meanwhile it is noteworthy that Schumann, in his report of the first performance of the work in 1840, says: "If we conjecture aright, the symphony movements were originally independent of the Hymn. These movements—the first, and especially the Allegretto—contain extraordinary beauties; but for the festivity and pomp of the "Lobgesang" they seem to me to be worked too delicately." The interpretation on Saturday was on the whole a fine one, the orchestra in the Allegretto especially, being at its best, and the choir showing in many respects a marked improvement Miss Anna Williams was, unfortunately, in bad form, her intonation being often faulty; but Mr. Lloyd gave customary satisfaction, and Miss Curran, whose name was new to most of the audience, made an excellent "first impression." Grieg's melodious, and, if somewhat patchy, yet picturesque and brightly scored overture, so recently admired at Birmingham, gave much pleasure. So did the expressive beauties of his Scena, though in dramatic power these were hardly on a level with the poem whose spirit they were meant to embody. An excellent reception was accorded to Dr. Mackenzie's beautiful "Benedictus," an arrangement for orchestra of the third of his six pieces for violin and piano, so warmly praised in the Musical World for August 4. The composer was present and bowed his thanks from the gallery. Mr. Barnett's Offertoire is well written and effective, but its subjects are not very original or interesting.

TOWN HALL, STREATHAM.

A pianoforte recital was given in the Town Hall, Streatham, on October 25, by Mr. C. S. Macpherson. The programme, which included such familiar items as Beethoven's C sharp minor Sonata, Schumann's "Novelette" in E, and Weber's "Rondo Brillante" in E flat, was well carried out. Mr. Macpherson also introduced a graceful suite of valses from his own pen. Miss Kate Norman was the vocalist.

ATHENÆUM, CAMDEN ROAD.

A series of excellent Friday evening concerts is now in progress at the Athenæum, Camden Road, the proceeds of which are devoted to various deserving charities. On Friday evening last Miss Juliet Gascoyne, Mr. G. Secretan, and Mr. G. Clues were the vocalists, and sang in a manner that proved highly acceptable to the audience. Mr. Joseph Hoffman gave some clever humourous sketches, and Miss Freda Marsden, a very young violinist, performed several solos. Her technique is surprisingly good, and the performance was altogether one of considerable promise.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

The annual Scotch Festival was held at the Albert Hall on Wednesday last, under the direction of Mr. William Carter. The programme which consisted of items so familiar that little criticism need be offered, included some of the most beautiful and pathetic of Scottish ballads. Madame Belle Cole gave an exquisitely sympathetic rendering of "We'd better bide a wee," and Mr. Sims Reeves recalled the triumphs of former days by the pathos which he infused into "The Land o' the Leal." Signor Foli was tumultuously encored for his vigorous interpretation of "Wi a hundred pipers an' a'." A new aspirant for English favour appeared in the person of Miss Josephine Simon, a soprano who comes, we understand, from San Francisco. It is no light ordeal to make a first appearance in such a place as the Albert Hall; and it would be unfair to pronounce finally on Miss Simon's claims at present. It is sufficient to say that she possesses a voice of good quality and compass; but she may be counselled to seek some better method of expressing intense emotion than the gasping phrases and doubtful intonation which disfigured her performances on Wednesday. Mr. Valentine Smith's naturally fine voice suffered on account of the needlessly severe strain which he put upon it; the Albert Hall is a large place, but it is not Trafalgar Square. Mr. Carter's choir sang "The march of the Cameron men," "The Rowan Tree," and other characteristic pieces, with due expression, and gave proof of the care and skill which have been expended on their training.

DRILL HALL, BROMLEY.

A highly successful concert was given by Messrs. F. Lewis Thomas and William C. Hann, on Tuesday last, in the Drill Hall, Bromley. The vocalists were Miss Fanny Joyce, Miss Eleanor Rees, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Bertram Latter, and Mr. Maybrick. Miss Joyce sang in a way which deepened the impression made on the minds of those who had heard her at Covent Carden, that a distinguished career is before her. Her voice is of excellent quality and good range, and she sings with a spontaneity and verve remarkable in one so young. Careful training and conscientious study are necessary, however, before Miss Joyce can take the position for which her natural gifts fit her. Miss Eleanor Rees sang with her wonted grace and charm Hope Temple's "In sweet September," and Horn's "I've been roaming." Mr. Lloyd, who was in magnificent voice, sang as superbly as ever Gounod's "Lend me your aid," Balfe's "Good night, beloved," and Stephen Adam's melodious new song, "Mona." Mr. Bertram Latter possesses a baritone voice of unusually good quality and sympathetic timbre, which he uses in a thoroughly artistic fashion. It is safe to predict for him also a successful future. Mr. Maybrick gave a very spirited rendering of Mendelssohn's "I'm a roamer." Mr. Thomas introduced two pianoforte compositions from his own pen, a graceful "Berceuse" and an extremely clever "Gavotte" to which, it need not be said, he did perfect justice, and Mr. Hann played with admirable expression on the violoncello a "Romance" by Hofman, and a "Spanish Dance" by Popper.

GRESHAM HALL, BRIXTON.

That talented musical family, the Messrs. Hann, held the first of their third series of chamber concerts at the above hall on Wednesday evening, when an appreciative audience gave unstinted applause to the choice programme provided for them. Schumann's quartet in A minor was exquisitely rendered, and the solo pianoforte, "Andante spianato" and "Grand Polonaise," by Chopin, played grandly by Mr. Sidney H. Hann, fairly brought down the house, an encore being unanimously demanded. Mention must also be made of Mendelssohn's Trio in D minor, which was capitally given; whilst the vocal portion of the programme was in the efficient hands of Miss Marion McKenzie. The second and third concerts will take place respectively on November 21 and December 12.

Reviews.

MUSIC.

The London Musical Publishing Company may be congratulated on the production, in two books, of Twelve Sketches on the pianoforte called "The Months," by Erskine Allon. These dainty and charming little pieces, each of which illustrates a verse from the poets, will repay careful study and can scarcely fail to develope the player's taste. A vein of true poetical perception runs through them, and they are singularly free from the commonplaces of melody and harmony so much affected by pianoforte composers. Six songs by the same composer, words by Caroline Radford, though not so fascinating as the above, are well worthy the attention of singers who seek something better than the ordinary drawing-room song. The accompaniments are interesting and would by no means suit an indifferent player. The same publishers send a vigorously written "March of the Volunteers," by Edward W. Lear.

Messrs. Paterson & Sons forward three numbers of "The Strathearn Collection of Part-songs," "A Sailor's Song," by Otto Schweizer; "How calm, how beautiful," by T. Richardson, and "Gondellied," by Alfred Gallrein. These are so far above average merit that their popularity may be safely predicted. "To Julia Weeping," "I'll tend thy Bower," "The Ash Tree," "At the mid hour of Night," and "I will think of Thee, my Love," are five of six songs by Hamish Mac Cunn. The melody of these is of an unhackneyed type, and the accompaniments and modulations are delicate and effective. Expressive singers would do well to take note of these songs. "The Chevalier's Lament." Words by Burns, Music by A. C. Mackenzie, is a fine baritone song, full of simple, northern dignity and pathos. "My dearie," and "Maiden Fair," composed by Alfred Stella, and "My Spinning Wheel," a melody (by Mrs. D. V. Thomas) arranged by the same writer are pleasing and unpretentious songs of only moderate difficulty. A Serenade' "Awake the Starry Midnight," by Francis Gibson, has a flowing melody and a richly harmonised accompaniment.

"Cinderella" is a capital set of valses by Pierre Perrot; and a titleless mazurka in A minor by J. McLachlan Key is an excellent specimen of this characteristic dance. "Bluette d'Esprit," by Louis H. Mayer, and "On Gossamer Wing," by E. L. Hime, are graceful trifles.

We have also received three songs by George E. Barwell (Goddard & Co.), "Love, my Mary, dwells with thee," "The soldier's adieu," and "The land of light." The first of these is a pleasing setting of Moore's well-known words, with a gently flowing and expressive melody. "The soldier's adieu" is an unpretentious ballad for baritone, embodying successfully the pathos of the words, and distinguished by an entire absence of vulgar "effects." "The land of light" is redeemed from the commonplace character of the class to which it belongs by the grace and tenderness of the melody. A good instance of Mr. Barwell's sympathetic method is the sudden modulation on p. 4 into C, to illustrate the phrase "She said, The land of light."

A serenade with Italian and English words and mandoline or violin obbligato, by Giovanni Ajello (published by the composer), commends itself by tuneful grace and rhythmic piquancy. These qualities will easily account for its popularity at the Italian Exhibition.

Messrs. Ascherberg & Co. send "Trois Morceau de Salon"—No. 1, "Dolce far niente" Episode; No. 2, "Sérénade Italienne;" No. 3, "Lily of the Valley," Mouvement de Valse, pour violon avec piano, from the facile pen of Signor Guido Papini. The titles of these graceful and melodious trifles are fairly descriptive of their character. By far the most original is the "Sérénade Italienne;" the other two are cast in a somewhat conventional mould. That they are admirably written for the instrument, and grateful to the performer, those familiar with Signor Papini's work need scarcely be told.

A Suite in D major for violin and piano, by G. Saint-George (Charles Woolhouse), will be welcomed by amateurs of limited executive powers. The composer has been very happy in treating the old-world-dance rhythms with freedom and originality—a refreshing change from the dreary sameness of our annual crop of countless bourrées, gavottes, &c. The best number of the suite is perhaps the "Aria"—its mingled grace and dignity are altogether charming; but the other movements, consisting of a Preludio, Allemanda, Bourrée Passepied and Giga, offer plenty of attraction.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Advertisements of Concerts, &c., will be received up to 1 p.m. on Thursdays, if addressed to the Manager, 138a, Strand, W.C. "The Musical World" is the recognised medium for advertising London, Suburban, and Provincial Concerts, and has no other address whatever for the reception of communications.

Knighthood of the Legion of Honour, 1878. Knight Commander of Villa Virega, 1883. Gold Medals at the principal International Exhibitions.

JOHN BRINSMEAD & SONS'

PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOFORTES ARE FOR SALE, FOR HIRE, and on the THREE YEARS' SYSTEM.

The perfection of Touch, Tone, and Durability.

JOHN BRINSMEAD AND SONS, Pianoforte Manufacturers, 18, 20, 22, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W. Lists free.

THE "EMPRESS" PIANOS

ARE the best value in the market. Workmanship cannot be surpassed. Touch and tone unequalled. Professors and others are invited to inspect these beautiful instruments. Prices from 20 guineas. Ten years' guarantee with every instrument. Messrs. Chudleigh Bros., 140, Strand, London.

DRESSMAKING MADE EASY for 2/6, by using the SYMMETRICAL DRESS PATTERN. Lessons in Dress Cutting till perfect, £2 2s. inclusive.—Write, Miss HEMMENS, 10, Queen Street, Bryanston Square, London, W.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE, and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be of the greatest efficacy in every form of disease. Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.

Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT,
78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 3, or by letter

---

THE RIGHT HON. LORD KNUTSFORD, G.C.M.G. Engravings from the original Portrait of Lord Knutsford, by J. F. Acret, are now being issued. Steel Line Engraving, by Harold Bourne. Artist's proof, £1 1s., Enfield House Studio, Windmill Hill, Hampstead.

Musical World Portraits.

NOVEMBER 10 - - - -	MR. WILLIAM NICHOLL.
NOVEMBER 17 - -	MADAME WILSON-OSMAN,

Publishers' Announcements.

NEW PART SONGS FOR S.A.T.B.
By W. W. PEARSON.

'Tis Morn! (Edwin Oxenford)	3d.
The Oyster Dredgers	2d.
Welcome, young Spring	2d.
Off to Sea (Edward Oxenford)	4d.
HUMOROUS PART SONGS.
Three Doughtie Men (30th thousand)	3d.
Three Children Sliding (6th thousand)	3d.
A Ryghte Merrie Geste	4d.
The Snow-white Doe (just published)	4d.
Ben Bowlegs (Edward Oxenford)	3d.
The Carrion Crow	3d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO., 1, Berners Street, W.

NEW LEGITIMATE TEACHING METHOD.

GILHAM'S KEYBOARD INSTRUCTOR.

Patented throughout the World. Price 2/6. Post Free 2/9.

HOW TO PLAY THE
PIANO, ORGAN, OR HARMONIUM,
In the shortest time and easiest and simplest manner.

WALTER SCOTT, 24, WARWICK LANE, LONDON,
AND FELLING, NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, ENGLAND.

Publishers' Announcements—continued.

SIMS REEVES: HIS LIFE. By Himself.

Ready Oct. 8, at all Libraries and Bookstalls,

SIMS REEVES: HIS LIFE. By Himself. 1 Vol., demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

London: Simpkin, Marshall, and Co., and London Music Publishing Company (Limited), 54, Great Marlborough Street, W.

Positively Ready Oct. 8,

SIMS REEVES: HIS LIFE. By Himself. 1 Vol., demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

London Music Publishing Company (Limited), 54, Great Marlborough Street, W.

VIOLIN TUTOR.

PRACTICAL VIOLIN SCHOOL, for Home Students. A Practical Book of Instructions and Exercises in Violin Playing, for the use of Amateurs, Self-learners, Teachers and others. By J. M. FLEMING. 1 vol., demy 4to, cloth gilt, price 7s. 6d.; also in monthly parts, 7d.

"Can be heartily recommended to students who wish to lay a solid foundation for good and artistic playing."—Musical Standard.

London: L. UPCOTT GILL, 170, Strand, W.C.

TO COMPOSERS,—RIDGEWAY and CO., Music Publishers, 10, Argyll Street, W. undertake the REVISING, PRINTING, and PUBLISHING of Musical Works upon exceptionally low terms. The finest work in the trade. Estimates upon receipt of MSS. IMPORTANT.—Composers' Works included in Catalogue and introduced without extra charge.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE,

By T. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 27, Harley Street, W.

THE VOICE.

A Complete Explanation of the Throat and its Functions in Breathing and in the Production of Voice, will be found in

"ELOCUTION, VOICE, & GESTURE."

By RUPERT GARRY.

Remedies for Clearing and Strengthening the Voice, and for the Cure of Hoarseness, Sore Throat, and other derangements of the Breathing Tubes.

"The section on the Voice is well considered and trustworthy, based as it is on the writings of authorities on the question of the Hygiene of the Vocal Organs."—STAGE.

"The Book contains many valuable hints in regard to Voice and Gesture."—VOICE (New York).

POST FREE, 1s. 2d.

London: Bemrose, 23, Old Bailey, E.C., and of the Author, at his residence, 49, Torrington Square, W.C.

IN SIX GRADES,

Price Two Shillings each.

Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:

A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,

By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWANN SONNENCHEIN and CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE;
And all Book and Music Sellers.

The Organ World.

"THE PHYSIOLOGY OF PIANOFORTE PLAYING, WITH A PRACTICAL APPLICATION OF MR. W. MACDONALD SMITH'S APPARATUS."

A PAPER READ BEFORE THE MEMBERS OF THE COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS, BY T. L. SOUTHGATE.

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentleman,—I stand before you this afternoon mainly as the representative of someone else, rather than the author and demonstrator of a theory of my own connected with pianoforte playing. Mr. Macdonald Smith, whose investigations and views on the subject I shall endeavour to lay before you, resides at Oporto. He came to England a few months ago, furnished with a letter of introduction to me, and requested that I would examine his theory. Briefly, this deals with the classification and working of the particular muscles we make use of in playing the pianoforte; and further, in the production of certain apparatuses by which these muscles can be prepared for their special work, and this with a considerable saving of time compared to that usually consumed in this operation. By my advice he brought his scheme to the notice of some of our well-known London pianists. These gentlemen appear to think favourably of his theory, and it is considered to be of sufficient importance to justify its presentation for your consideration. I asked Mr. Smith to write down his remarks on the whole subject; these have been put into the customary form of your papers. I am also supplied with a set of the instruments he has invented for carrying out the design advocated—a novelty of these is that they give an audible signal when the precise work required to be done has been accomplished. I shall therefore have the honour of explaining and showing to you the action of these mechanical aids for developing and strengthening the muscles of the hand, and giving the fingers the necessary rapidity.

In bringing before the members of the College of Organists some considerations on the physiology of pianoforte playing, it may be stated that the object is first to direct attention to the special muscular movements which are required for that purpose, and secondly to submit for your examination and criticism some mechanical arrangements for speedily educating the hand, and rendering it fit for the work it has to perform on the popular instrument of our time. I have no intention of entering into a lengthy examination of the manifold details of all that is included under the general term "expression," but purpose to dwell principally upon the mechanical necessities of the pianist, and then to offer a few suggestions upon the way the best tonal effects are produced, and the feasibility of the subtle gradations of "touch" being acquired by those not naturally gifted with them. Nature has not intended us to be pianoforte players and nothing else, therefore the hands and fingers with which we are endowed require a long and intelligent training in order to permit them to perform music written for the pianoforte in a perfect way. Time is of vital importance in this matter. I need not stay to point out to you the vast amount of time that is necessarily consumed in the long process of rendering the fingers supple and strong. The cleverest and most eager pupil, under the most experienced masters, must of necessity devote many, many hours of precious time to this task. And even when proficiency is attained, considerable daily practice is required to maintain the high standard of execution that modern pianoforte music demands from the performer.

Permit me to remark that this is pre-eminently a labour-saving age. Time becomes more precious daily. The thousands and thousands of various machines that we possess amply prove how gladly we avail ourselves of time and labour-saving appliances. I venture to think that if by mechanical helps the labour of the pianoforte student can be spared, he not only economises his physical strength, but will be enabled to save valuable time that can with signal advantage be devoted to the completer development of the intellectual side of pianoforte playing.

I shall preface the theory I have to submit to you with a few remarks upon the hand.

This organ, important though it is, is not naturally suited for playing the piano. The thumb is short; with its lateral movement it is certainly very convenient for playing "scales," indeed, it is difficult to imagine how we could play them without employing it. The other fingers are all of different lengths and of varying strengths; owing to our constant use for every day purposes of the first two, the third and fourth are extremely weak. And the fact that the thumb is never used for an "up and down" movement, except in piano playing, and it will be perceived that we have an irregular combination of fingers which require a vast amount of training before they can be made equal in strength, and able to play a scale evenly.

Remarkable litheness of hand and finger from constant exercise is well exemplified in the case of Indian artisans. Sir Monier Williams, in his work on "Religious Thought and Life in India," says: "Perhaps the great secret of the beauty of Indian art lies in the suppleness and flexibility of Indian fingers, and the consequent delicacy of Indian manipulation." Of course the constant use of the hands and fingers in dexterous work for generations has had its effect in rendering them so flexible. Sir Monier goes on to say: "The hand of the commonest menial servant in an Indian household is often as delicately formed as that of the most refined aristocratic beauty at a European court. . . We must go to India for the best illustration of the truth that the human hand is the most wonderful of all machines. In Europe manufacture is no longer, as it ought to be, according to its Etymology, handwork. But in India the hand is still the chief implement employed, and a fervent hope may be expressed that no European machinery may soon take its place." . . . "In the manufacture of Decca muslin," he says, "the Hindu artisan is absolutely unrivalled. With a loom of the simplest construction, formed of a few rough sticks and reeds, he produces something which no European machinery can equal, for the mysteries of his craft" (and, we might add, the inherited suppleness of finger and perfect development of hand) "have been transmitted from father to son for thousands of years."

With ourselves, after a few dozen generations of people who do all their manufacturing by machinery, whose women no longer use their fingers for sewing, but knit and sew with machines, it is quite possible that our hands will lose their deftness, and degenerate into awkward appendages hardly capable of independant movement from the arm. Even now it may be noticed that few persons possess independent control over the muscles of the arm, and feel a difficulty in straightening it firmly without stiffening the wrist and fingers.

To come to the anatomical side of pianoforte playing, it should be noted that the movements of the fingers, hands, and arms are effected by the sudden and regulated contraction of certain muscles. These, in order to produce the rapid movements required, must be used frequently and rapidly, or they will become sluggish in obeying the will-power which causes them to act. Suppose we take a short rapid succession of notes forming what is called a scale. A good player can put his fingers down at the rate of sixteen successive and clear notes in each second. A less proficient one can accomplish perhaps twelve. But the latter can, in his mind, play twenty notes a second, only it is of no good his willing to do this, for the muscles of his fingers will not obey at that rate. It is true that if he practises any difficult passage slowly for a number of times he is soon able to play it at a much greater rate. This law is, however, subject to what might be termed an inherent capacity for repetition. In the case of the muscles being wanted to execute a certain succession of movements which they have frequently done before, it is certain that these will be automatically performed with much greater rapidity than can a new succession of muscle movements. For this mechanical and monotonous system of learning it is certainly desirable to substitute a more rational one, and thus give the performer only a small fraction of the labour required for acquiring execution by rote.

It must be remembered that, quick as is thought, it does not act upon the muscles instantaneously. The acts of volition are first given from the brain to an automatic system of nerve centres, these transmit the stimulus to the extensor and flexor muscles of the fingers, causing them to contract, but the process takes a preceptible time.

Each person has a certain well-defined "rate of finger movement." This may be easily expressed by the number of clear notes he can play in one second, so long as such notes do not belong to a sequence which he has learned to play by rote. A simple experiment seems to prove that the fingers cannot be made to strike, either separately or together, faster than at the rate of a certain number of notes per second. This number varies with the individual, and may be increased by exercise, but for a good pianist ought not to be less than sixteen.

Experiments show that the shortest time in which one can play a group of chords as crotchets is also the shortest time in which can be played the group of triplet quavers containing the same notes in arpeggio fashion. The ligaments and joints of the hand must be loose and all the fingers reasonably strong and equal in order to try this experiment satisfactorily. If a metronome is used to increase gradually the tempo of playing this passage, it will be found that the clearness of the crotchets will become "blurred" at the same time as that of the quavers. The crotchets must not be played from the wrist, but with the fingers lifted well up—and the experiment will not answer for those who have practised much technique in thirds. The rate of finger movement can only be increased by taking each muscle separately and obliging it to contract in a very short space of time. As an authority on technique has said:—"The object of the gymnastics should be the production of the greatest possible muscular contraction (or extension) in the shortest possible space of time."

Only under the supervision of a careful and intelligent teacher can a pupil acquire the indispensable habit of lifting and depressing the fingers very rapidly. Most pupils are taught to practice slowly at first, and many never attain the execution of rapid passages except "by rote." It is difficult to obtain independent command over each and every muscle. As it is a physiological rule that the function of an organ increases with its use, it follows that by exercising to its utmost degree the rapidity of nerve transmission and muscular contraction, this rapidity will soon be materially increased and the muscle developed. Incidentally it may be remarked that although the muscles of women are weaker, their finer nervous system gives them more rapid control over them than takes place amongst the sterner sex.

There is no occasion to trouble you with long names and descriptions of the muscles and bones of the hand. But it is necessary to learn to appreciate certain essential facts. If you look at this anatomical drawing it will be perceived that each finger, including the thumb, has a muscle to raise it and another to depress it. If contracted both at the same time, the joint action of the two muscles, pulling the tendons along the sides of the joints, keeps the finger stiff. When both are released the fingers are in a state of balance, perfectly loose—provided the cartilages are supple. The muscles which effect this are attached to the bones of the forearm; it is the tendons only from them that pass through the wrist, and are inserted in the joints of the fingers. There are other muscles arising from the elbow which are inserted in the hand at the wrist and which raise the hand from the wrist-joint. A corresponding set of muscles on the lower side depress the hand. The thumb has special muscles to give it the power of "opposing" the fingers; in pianoforte playing these muscles are wanted for the "turning under." The arm is furnished with many muscles which permits of its placing the hand in any required position at the keyboard.

Very important for playing are the muscles of the hand, by contracting which the fingers are moved laterally. These are situated between the fingers, near the base, and are usually very weak, unless specially developed. Practically they give the fingers the power of moving to the right notes. I have given this slight description of the muscle in order to point out some difficulty in playing. In the first place, a student finds it almost impossible to contract the muscle of his arm without at the same time stiffening his wrist and fingers; this is owing to the use he makes of these muscles in ordinary avocations. Another difficulty is this: when the hand is raised from the wrist, both the "wrist-muscle" and all the finger muscles are employed to effect it. The wrist-muscle should be independently at the command of the performer, and in this operation the fingers ought to be perfectly free. Few attain a good wrist action; they do not go to work the right way to strengthen and obtain independent command over it, and end by playing with stiff fingers, and often a stiff wrist. It is very necessary to overcome the natural stiffness of the wrist. Some of the ligaments of the hand are important in pianoforte playing. Those at the base of the fingers, which prevent the latter from opening widely, are a hindrance to rapid playing, and required to be stretched. There is great inequality in the development of the muscle of various fingers; so it is necessary that the weak muscles should be exercised gymnastically, in order to bring them equal to the other stronger ones.

(To be continued.)

ORGAN PLAYING FIFTY YEARS AGO.

In his admirable lecture on Music of the Victorian Era, the Rev. H. G. Bonavia Hunt, Mus. Doc., observes:

"I will ask you to go with me one Tuesday morning to Christ's Church, Newgate Street. As we approach we hear the strains of the organ, but it is only a private performance; and on going to the organ loft we see two eminent men, one an elderly man, the other quite young; he is under thirty. The younger man is playing the organ. He is evidently extemporising, and his companion is listening with very great interest. It is very strange at that date to hear a foreigner playing the organ in such a good, solid English style, and this seems to strike those who are listening This young man also plays the G minor Fugue (Bach), and he turns round and asks to be supplied with a new subject. The elder musician writes one on the spot and gives it to him. The player begins, and having introduced it in the various parts, employs all the devices of a fugue, until he brings in the stretto and winds up, you may be sure, with an effective coda. The elder man, although he was led to expect a great deal from the younger genius, is evidently greatly impressed. I dare say you have divined that the young man at the organ is Felix Mendelssohn: the older man at his side, the one who gave him the subject to extemporise upon, is Samuel Wesley. Wesley has now seen the last of Mendelssohn, and almost the last of this world, because, before 1837 is out, he will have been gathered to his fathers. He, however, has left England a great legacy. At this very time, his son, Sebastian, is organist at Exeter Cathedral, and has already begun to compose some wonderful anthems which will make him famous. Speaking of Mendelssohn leads me to refer to this visit of his as being productive, in him, of very great artistic results. Yes, it was a great experience for him, I suppose no other foreign composer was ever welcomed with such intense enthusiasm, never had so spontaneous a reception, as young Mendelssohn. He and Sterndale Bennett from this time forth were fast friends, to the great profit of both. We afterwards hear of Bennett being at Leipzig, and we know that Mendelssohn was there, and we hear of Mendelssohn being worshipped so much by the young ladies that, when he had to conduct at a festival, he was led by a troop of these engaging damsels to the conductor's throne, and, having been gently and gracefully placed upon his seat, he was crowned, all the young ladies standing in admiring attitudes around him. To proceed. What was the state of church music at that time? I am afraid that it was very much behind other departments of the musical art, if the records of the times are to be trusted. We have a paper like the 'Athenæum' loudly lamenting the decline of organ playing. They suppose that there is only one man who is master of his instrument, and that is Samuel Wesley, who so soon after died. He, about that time, had written an organ fugue which, it was supposed, very few organists could play, and that was the occasion for the remark of the 'Athenæum:' that organ playing had very much gone down. As regards psalmody, we know what the condition of that was fifty years ago. If you look at the psalm tunes, you will see that they abound with little grace notes, which, at the present day, would be considered very ludicrous. Cheetham's psalmody and Rippon's hymns were very favourite sources of sacred melody.

Some interesting events took place about this time. In 1838 there is a new organist at St. Paul's Cathedral: his name is Goss. He is a very modest man, and has not done much, but it is charitably hoped he may prove a suitable occupant of that distinguised post. Then, again, something is done in the way of encouragement of composition. About the time the occupant of the Gresham chair, Professor Taylor and Mr. R. J. S. Stevens, well known in connection with glee writing, had conceived the idea of encouraging sacred composition, and they did what was done by other organisations of to-day—offered a prize for the best anthem from year to year; and in 1838 we find mention of a new prize anthem called 'Out of the Deep,' and the winner of the prize was almost a boy. He held the organistship at that time of St. Peter's, Islington. His name was Edward John Hopkins."

THE MONSTER ORGAN FOR CHICAGO.

The following additional particulars will doubtless be read with interest:—

The Roosevelt Patent Adjustable Combination Action, has been called "the event of the age in organ building." Any combination of manual and pedal stops, together with their corresponding couplers, may be set at any moment by drawing the desired combination and then pulling outward (about a quarter of an inch) the piston upon which it is desired to have the combination set. Whenever this piston is pushed in it will always draw the exact combination selected when the piston was pulled out. In this way as many combinations for each manual and the pedal with their couplers may be set as there are pistons. In case a change in any combination may be desired, it is only necessary to draw the desired combination at any time, and lock it with one of the pistons. Since this mechanism moves the knobs themselves and releases itself at the close of the action, the knobs can be operated by hand in conjunction with the combination action, which is not the case with that form which fails to move the knobs. The five adjustable Combination Pedals act on the pedal stops and pedal couplers in a similar manner to the mechanism of the pistons.

A most valuable and ingenious contrivance is the Full Organ Pedal, which bring on instantly every speaking stop of the entire organ by simply locking the pedal down. The registers are not disturbed in the least, therefore when the pedal is unhooked the condition of the organ remains precisely as it was before using the pedal, unlesss the combinations have meanwhile been altered. A startling sforzando is thus obtained with the least possible effort, and no derangement of the stops is ocassioned. An organist thoroughly skilled in handling this instrument will frequently have occasion to to use the Pedal Ventil, which silences any adjustable selection of pedal stops, without, however, throwing in the knobs. By this clever device he need never be caught with a loud pedal organ on when he needs instantly a soft stop, and in many other ways this pedal will be found exceedingly useful.

The Crescendo and Decrescendo Pedals are of a novel character, and furnish complete control over the entire instrument. By a single stroke on the former pedal a gradual crescendo or increase of tone, from the softest stop to the full organ, including all couplers, is obtained, the rapidity of the crescendo being regulated by the degree of speed used in pressing down the pedal. A decrescendo or reverse effect, is accomplished by using the other pedal. Pneumatic power is the medium through which this mechanism is effected, and this also moves the stop-knobs, without however locking them or preventing their simultaneous operation by hand. Directly above the uppermost manual will be placed a dial to indicate the exact amount of organ being used. The pedal ventil: Solo off and Echo on, is another clever contrivance by means of which the fourth manual acts in the double capacity of a keyboard for the Solo and Echo organs. By locking this pedal down the electric current is cut off from the Solo organ, and in like manner the order is reversed by releasing the pedal. The duality of this keyboard obviates the necessity of having a fifth manual. Practically the present system is far more convenient for the player. Particular attention is called to the unusual number of swell-boxes. Every stop in the entire instrument, excepting the pedal organ and seven foundation stops of 16, 8 and 4 feet pitch, is inclosed. Separate swell-boxes are used for the Swell, Solo and Echo organs, while the entire choir organ is also enclosed in a box together with all the great organ, excepting the above-mentioned stops. The boxes are controlled by three balanced pedals centrally located back of the pedal keys in such a manner that they can be operated with either foot, or simultaneously with both feet. At the right of these balanced pedals will be found an ordinary pedal to close all the boxes, and another to open them altogether. It can readily be seen that the most perfect, and at the same time the most tremendous crescendo and diminuendo are hereby possible to an extent never before equalled, while the peculiar and novel effect of closing one box gradually while opening another will be extraordinary. Such an effect to the ear has been likened to the impression produced upon the eye by dissolving views. The Roosevelt's Patent Windchests, which will be exclusively used in the Auditorium organ, are conceded by experts to be the most perfect of the kind yet constructed. These windchests may be briefly described as tubular-pneumatic in principle and action, affording a separate pallet for each and every pipe. The advantages of this system are many; it renders the action light, sensitive and agreeable, the partial drawing of a stop is impossible, it is simple and durable in construction, but of paramount importance is the remarkable "repetition" which it guarantees.

One long side of the basement under the auditorium floor is to be devoted to the bellows, which will be driven by electric motors. These bellows, of which there will be two or three large ones for the manual and pedal wind, and a somewhat smaller one for the high pressure Solo organ and pneumatic work, will all be operated by belts from one main line shaft, which shaft will be driven by a large electric motor. An arrangement called the automatic belt-shifter will be used, which connects each bellows to the main shaft by means of a tight and loose pulley and shifting belt, the shifting of which will be controlled by the rise and fall of the bellows, so that, though the shaft maintains a uniform speed, the feeders will operate only as demanded by the actual consumption of wind. In the room with the main electric motor, which drives the bellows shaft, will be another electric motor to propel the specially wound dynamos which are to generate the currents used in operating the organ. All the air from the main bellows will pass through regulators, of which their will be one for each manual department in the organ, and two for the pedals. These regulators, together with a free use of concussion bellows, will afford perfectly steady wind under all cirmumstances.

The pitch of the instrument is to be what is known as the French Normal Diapason, which is the standard of all the leading orchestras of Europe and America and which has long been adopted by Mr. Roosevelt.

The contract provides that every department of the organ shall be played from the keyboards in the orchestra. A suggestion had been made, however, that the stage organ be also provided with its own independent keyboard, and that the Cathedral Chimes be controlled from this keyboard on the stage as well as from the main one in the orchestra.

The cost of the auditorium organ will not be far from £9,000, and its completion is stipulated for the 1st of December, 1889.

The Harvest Festival Service at St. Andrew Undershaft, Leadenhall Street, E.C., were held on Wednesday evening, Oct. 17, and Sunday Oct. 21. On the Wednesday the choir of St. Andrew Uudershaft was augmented by the Choir of Spitalfields Church and Choir-boys of St. John-at-Hackney Grammar School, and friends, numbering together 75 voices. The accompaniments were played by the "Church Orchestral Society," of 21 players and organ—organist, Mr. J. F. Yeatman (organist of Spitalfields Church)—conductor, Mr. W. M. Wait (organist of St. Andrew Undershaft)—Sermon by the Rector, the Lord Bishop of Bedford, and in aid of the East London Church Fund. There was a crowded congregation.

SPECIFICATIONS.

Hammersmith.—Description of organ erected in St. John's Church, by Messrs. Bevington and Sons, Soho, London.

Great Organ.—Open Diapason, Gamba, Stopped Diapason, Claribel, Principal, Twelfth, Fifteenth, Sesquialtera various, Trumpet.

Swell Organ.—Double Diapason, Stopped Diapason, Principle, Wald Flöte, Full Mixture various, Oboe, Cornopean.

Choir Organ.—Dulciana, Lieblich Gedact, Spitz Flöte, Cremona, Tremulant.

Pedal Organ.—Bourdon, Open Diapason.

Couplers.—Swell to Great, Swell to Pedal, Great to Pedal.

Three Composition Pedals to Great, Two Composition Pedals to Swell Organ. Tubular Pneumatic Action to Pedal Organ, and Part of Great.

Summary.

Great Organ: 9 stops.—Swell: 8 stops.—Choir: 4 stops.—Pedal: 2 stops.—Couplers: 3 stops—Total: 26 stops.

RECITAL NEWS.

Glasgow.—Organ recitals have been given at the International Exhibition during the week ending Oct. 27th, by Mr. T. E. Senior, F.C.O., L.R.A.M.

The following is Saturday's programme: 1. Larghetto (from Quartet in B flat.) Mozart; 2. Andante Rustico (Fantasia.) Dussek; 3. Prelude and Fugue, D minor, E. M. Lott; 4. Impromptu, E major, W. S. Bennett; 5. Polacca in A, H. von Bülow; 6. Song, "Rose softly blooming," Spohr; 7. Fuga, A minor (from 2nd Sonata) Capocci; 8. Selection from "Il Trovatore," Verdi; 9. Easter March, G. Merkel.

St. Saviour's, Denmark Hill.—The harvest festival took place on the 4th and 7th inst. The following services and anthems were rendered by the choir, who sang as a well-trained choir should sing: Service in D, Garret; Tours Anthem in F, Communion Service, Stainer; O taste and see, Goss; "Intriote," Stainer; Awake the harp, Haydn. Organ recitals were given by the organist, Mr. J. Kipps, A.C.O., who played in his usual skilful maneer. From his selection we note the following: Offertoire in D, Batiste; Andante, Wely; selection from the "Stabat Mater," Rossini; Elevation, Guilmant; selection from "Redemption," Gounod; fugue on the name of Bach, Schumann. The church was tastefully decorated and the congregations were large on each occasion.

Bristol Cathedral.—The annual festivals of the parish choirs associated with the Church Choral Union took place on the 11th inst. The number of voices taking part in the choir was 400.

Darlington.—The Harvest Festival services was held in St, John's Church, on October 18 and 21, when Mr. C. Stephenson, A.C.O., played the following pieces:—Andante, Wely; Jubilant March, Frost; Communion, Clark; Andante, Dubois; Andantino, Thomas; Andante, Benoist; Pastorale, Mullineux; Fugue in B minor, Töpfer: Andante, Lachner; Harvest Thanksgiving March, Calkin.

Derby.—Mr. S. Round, F.C.O. gave a recital at St. Luke's Church on Thursday, Oct. 18, to a large congregation, when the following formed the programme:—March Pontificale and Fuge in D major, Lemmens; Andante in D major, Archer; Toccato in A flat major, Hesse; Offertoire in G major, Wely.

CORRESPONDENCE.

EXAMINATIONS IN LITERARY WORK.

(To the Editor of the Organ World.)

Sir,—Some weeks ago one of your correspondents writing on the subject of Organists and the Clergy, pointed out that the good work done by the College of Organists would have the tendency to increase clergymen's respect for organists. I am quite sure of this; but I have often thought that the College, besides holding examinations in music, might, with excellent results, have examinations in literary work. The effect of holding such examinations would be to raise the College still higher in the public (and clerical) estimation, as well as to improve the status of organists themselves. Do not let me be misunderstood to propose that the examinations in literary work should be compulsory; I should not for an instant think of suggesting that. But I think it should be at the option of candidates for diplomas whether they will sit for the examination or not. Insisting that candidates for a musical degree shall previously pass a stiff examination in literary work—though it is the plan of the universities—is about as unreasonable as it would be to expect candidates for the B. A. degree to pass a stiff examination in music. If a candidate for a College of Organists' diploma passed the examination, it might be inserted on his testamur and appear in due course in the printed lists of Fellows and Associates. So that while the examination would be entirely optional and would not in the slightest degree affect the value of the diplomas, from the musician's point of view, the importance of a general education would (very properly) be recognised by the College. I may add that reading for the examination would not be unprofitable work for men who might contemplate some day trying for their Mus. Bac. A cathedral organist once remarked to me that clergymen were getting to be fond of having B. A.'s for their organists. And certainly these gentlemen are appointed to good positions. The universities—though indeed they carry the idea to an unreasonable length—require that candidates for musical degrees shall pass an examination in literary work. And one cannot help feeling, and respectfully suggesting, that the Gollege of Organists should do something to promote the general education of church musicians. This the College might do, without in any way altering their present arangements, by introducing the system of optional examinations in literary work.—Yours, &c.,

Orpheus.

It is an open secret, that some leading men of the College of Organists have long held opinions similar to those admirably expressed by "Orpheus." The remarkable growth of the College examinations and the high estimation in which they are held, may in course of time lead to further developments. All the same the college council will assurredly take no step not justified by the sound judgment and long-tried experience, which tne public well know characterise their proceedings with regard to the work of the institution they are called upon to govern.

NOTES.

A contemporary in a series of articles on the Novello Family, and speaking of the life and labours of the founder of that distinguished family, observes:—Distinguished literary, as well as musical society was to be met in the Novello drawing room at 240, Oxford Street, Charles and Mary Lamb, Shelley, Keats, Leigh, Hunt, Hazlit, and Coulson being frequent guests. Charles Lamb alludes as follows to the evenings spent by him with his musical friends in his charming Elia essay, Chapter on Ears: "Something like this scene-turning I have experienced at the evening parties at the home of my good Catholic friend, Nov——, who, by the aid of a capital organ, himself the most finished of players, converts his drawing room into a chapel, his weekdays into Sundays, and these latter into minor heavens."

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS CALENDAR.

On Tuesday next the Library will be open from 7 to 9.

The dates given of following arrangements must be regarded as preliminary and may be subject to slight alterations:

December 4. Lecture at 8. January 8. F.C.O. Examination (Paper work). January 9. F.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). January 10. F.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing. January 11. Diploma Distribution. January 15. A.C.O. Examination (Paper work). January 16. A.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). January 17. A.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). January 18. Diploma Distribution. February 5. Lecture. March 5. Lecture. April 2. Lecture. April 29. Annual College Dinner. May 7. Lecture. June 4. Lecture. July 16. F.C.O. Examination (Paper work). July 17, 18. F.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). July 19 Diploma Distribution. July 23. A.C.O. Examination (Paper work). July 24, 25. A.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). July 26. Diploma Distribution. July 30. Annual General Meeting.

Further arrangements and particulars will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Secretary.

95, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury.

(From a Photograph by Walery, London, W.)

HERR WALDEMAR MEYER.

HERR WALDEMAR MEYER was born in Berlin, in which city his father resided, an excellent, but by no means wealthy, musician. At the age of 11 he played the second violin in the orchestra of a Berlin opera-house, to help in the support of the family, 15 in number. When Waldemar was 13 years old, he heard Joachim, for the first time, and could not rest until he was permitted to play to the great violinist, who was so struck with the boy's talent that he accepted him as a pupil without receiving any fee. From this point Herr Meyer's life became one of almost incredible activity, for he not only studied with Joachim for the violin, but also with Professor Dorn for the Piano, and with Professor Friedrich Kiel for Counterpoint, besides being engaged at the theatre. After a short time, the late Emperor William, moved thereto by Herr Joachim's eulogies of his pupil, granted Herr Meyer an annual pension to enable him to prosecute his studies more easily. Herr Meyer was, with Wilhelmj, one of the first to rally round Wagner, in 1874, for the initial performance, at Bayreuth, of the Nibelungen Tetralogy, and was also the first German artist who appeared in Paris after the Revolution. Herr Meyer first played in London in the winter of 1887.

SIR GEORGE GROVE'S ANALYSES OF BEETHOVEN.

It is not surprising to find, though the fact has only recently come to our ken, that Sir George Grove's admirable analyses of Beethoven's nine Symphonies—which have long been familiar, not only to the frequenters of the Crystal Palace and Richter Concerts, but also to those of nearly every town in England where a Beethoven Symphony has been brought to a hearing—have found their way across the Atlantic. At the instigation of Mr. Georg Henschel they were published in book-form at Boston in 1884, primarily for the use of the audiences attending the Symphony Concerts of that city, conducted at that date by Mr. Henschel; and secondly for the instruction of the great book-buying public of America. That no undue advantage was taken of the absence of international copyright for their publication in this form, and that Sir George's sanction was duly obtained, appears from the fact that he himself has contributed a short introduction—in the form of a letter addressed to Mr. Henschel—explanatory of their genesis.

"My analyses," says Sir George, "were written expressly for the Saturday Concerts. When these concerts were first started, the only attempt at such explanatory remarks were those in the books of Mr. Ella's Musical Union, and the New Philharmonic Concerts of Dr. Wylde. I wrote as much for my own information as for that of my readers. I had been well grounded in vocal music, particularly in Handel and the old Italian and old English schools; but modern orchestral music was a new world to me, and one that puzzled at the same time that it delighted me. I felt impelled to put down the discoveries which I made in those unknown regions as I made them."

With a modesty, quite uncalled for, as it appears to us, Sir George adds: "I am not a musician: in many senses, I cannot claim to be even an amateur; and in that fact, if I may say so, lies what is perhaps one advantage of these papers. They are not written for musicians, or for those who are familiar with the structure of orchestral pieces. They are written by an ignoramus for those of his own stamp; and they attempt to put his readers into possession of the facts about the music as they have been gradually revealed to him. Their aim is to enable my readers to appreciate what I have learnt more quickly than I was able to learn it, because I had no guide, but was forced to find it out for myself. Some people can listen to music and drink in the sound and surrender themselves to the impression it creates, and care for no more. Others are not content with that. Half their pleasure is derived from the facts connected with the origin of a piece, from its structure or treatment, its resemblance or contrast to other pieces, and so on. They love to hear how often a movement has been sketched or a subject rewritten, and to trace the slow progress by which the great composers, masters of that fine tact and unwearied patience which are among the surest evidences of genius, have, out of commonplace beginnings, evoked their imperishable works. I am one of these. And, as many may be like me in this respect, it is to them especially that I address myself in these papers, and not to musicians, who knew it all, and much more, long ago."

The most interesting part of Mr. Henschel's preface deals with the vexed "question" of the metronome. In preparing this new and first complete edition of Sir George Grove's essays, he was at first strongly tempted to omit the metronome marks, embodied in his essay on the Ninth Symphony, as being of no practical utility to the general public, but in this he was overruled by Sir George. Mr. Henschel writes: "These marks had been sent by Beethoven—eight days before his death—to the Philharmonic Society of London, in his great anxiety to lessen the difficulties of studying and performing his gigantic work. Interesting therefore as they may be to the biographer, the historian, the student—to the public, I thought, it could be nothing but distracting to state that the Adagio, for instance, of the Ninth Symphony is supposed to be played at sixty beats, while the Andante alternating with it should be played at sixty-three beats in the minute. Who could, I reasoned, even supposing he had, by the help of the metronome, begun the Adagio at exactly sixty beats—who could warrant that in the Andante he would not beat more or less than exactly three beats per minute more? Surely not Beethoven himself; for, godlike as are the revelations of his soul, it was human blood that ran through the veins of his body."

In substantiation of this opinion, Mr. Henschel refers to the dicta of several eminent men, which are all worth reproducing.

"The metronome," says Nottebohm, "has nothing to do with feeling. The conception of the spirit of a tone-piece, the nuances in its motion, deviations from the absolute and normal measure founded upon the rhythmical structure of the piece, cannot be made dependent on a soulless clockwork, still less can they be determined by such. The metronome is nothing but a help toward securing a time which the composer had in mind"—a very weak one (Mr. Henschel adds) for those who cannot approximately find it through the character of the themes of a musical work, the interpretation of which can as little be measured by the degrees of a metronome as can the delivery by a reader or an actor of a poem, a monologue in rhythmical verse.

In the works of Sebastian Bach we very rarely come across a denotation even of the character of a movement. Bach lets his themes and passages speak for themselves. And, surely, they speak more eloquently, more convincingly, than the words Adagio or Allegro—words just as extensible in their meaning as their translations "slow" or "quick."

Richard Wagner confesses that his best guidance in regard to the tempo as well as to the performance of Beethoven's Symphonies he had found in the singing of the great Schroeder-Devrient, and that the only right grasping of the "melos" gives the right time.

Mr. Henschel clinches these arguments with an extract from a letter from Johannes Brahms, to whom, at the request of a well-known London conductor, he had written to ask if the metronome marks before the different movements of his German Requiem should be strictly kept.

"Your question," Brahms answered, "strikes me as rather indefinite,—whether the metronome marks before the different movements of my Requiem should be strictly adhered to? Why, just as well as those to be found before other music. I am of the opinion that metronome marks go for nothing. As far as I know, all composers have as yet retracted their metronome marks in later years. Those figures which can be found before some of my compositions—good friends have talked them into me; for I myself have never believed that my blood and a mechanical instrument go very well together."

We fully agree with Mr. Henschel in the opinion he expresses, by way of summary, that "in the moment by any invention, say a little noiseless metronome, the interpreters of musical works of any kind should be enabled and willing to control their emotions at any time, to refer at any time to that little clockwork, and set their 'deviated' feelings according to its beats—in that very moment musicians would do better to go and hang up their harps and weep over the grave of their beloved art." [C. A. B.]

DR. MACKENZIE AT BRISTOL.

On Wednesday of last week the annual meeting of the South Midland Section of the National Society of Professional Musicians took place at Bristol, when Dr. Mackenzie, the Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, distributed the certificates awarded in the recent examinations, and subsequently delivered an address.

Dr. Mackenzie, having paid a high tribute to the usefulness of the Society, said that he had joined it holding a broad view that any combination which was instrumental in drawing more closely together the men and women who spent their lives in teaching music—who, in fact, lived for, in, and by that art—must eventually become a great power for good (applause). Certainly of late years their profession had risen to a much higher rank among its sisters, and claimed now that equality which, for a number of years was, if not absolutely denied to it, at least somewhat grudgingly accorded to it. If, as some asserted, they had themselves to blame to a very considerable extent, at least they were now striving to improve the shortcomings with which they had been rightly or wrongly credited, by increased interest and more earnestness in their work, and by exhibiting, above all, the existence of an esprit de corps which was formerly honoured in the breach more than the observance. It would be affectation to deny that the Society of Professional Musicians had been a very useful and powerful lever, if not one of the chief motive powers, in bringing this about (applause). He personally had ample reason to speak feelingly of the good spirit which undoubtedly dwelt among musicians. By the particular circumstances in which he was at that moment placed he was reminded that the certificates which were now in their hands were not the only ones which were competed for over the land. He believed that the Royal Academy of Music also distributed some such awards, and had also a system of local examinations, which was occupying its attention very seriously at this very time. He was told, however, that that institute was so peculiarly constituted that it was not at all desirous of being at the head and front of examinations, that it could feel quite as happy in the success of the same kind of work done by others as in its own; and that it actually considered it to be its duty as a national institution to assist musical culture and education under all properly-constituted and creditably-organised circumstances in the Empire from whose Government it received some pecuniary assistance for so doing (cheers). Of course he was not the person to state that fact officially, but from information he had received he found that the statement was a tolerably accurate one (applause). He told the members of the society who had invited him there that day that he was himself deeply interested in the question of local examination, and he regretted to say that his only motive for coming down there that day was to carry out a deliberately-conceived and villainous plan—that of watching and taking notes of any hint or improvement in their carefully-matured scheme which might prove useful in assisting his own deeply-laid schemes and ends (laughter). Seriously, rare Ben Jonson had left them a sentence which was uppermost in his mind—"No man is so foolish but he may give another good counsel, and no man so wise but may easily err if he will take no other's counsel but his own. But very few men are wise by their own counsel or learned by their own teaching, for he that was only taught by himself had a fool for master" (laughter).

Having referred to the value of examinations, Dr. Mackenzie said that he could not help thinking that soon it would be necessary to insist on a knowledge of harmony up to a certain given point before they could grant certificates to any candidates at all (applause). Particularly did he object to the nursing, the "coddling" of so-called systems. In this country—he could not help saying it—was wasted a great deal of precious time and energy upon mere pedantry (hear, hear). Had musical composition ever been benefited by all this in England? He thought not. Let them have fewer systems and a little more music, if they pleased (cheers). Those who were constantly snuffing and grubbing at the foot of a tree for so-called roots were very apt to forget all about the existence of its beautiful branches, the leaves, and even the illimitable blue sky beyond (applause). It was generally admitted that, for instance, the study of counterpoint had been hampered by a good many rules, which had now absolutely no application at all in the extended domain of modern music. That and the study of harmony might be made, he was sure, more easy, might be simplified by an intelligent teacher. Let them try to make these subjects interesting, and they would soon cease to be looked upon as bogeys, bêtes noirs by the young. Addressing the students, Dr. Mackenzie said the certificates were meant to be acknowledgments of so much satisfactory work done in the past, also as incentives to good work to be accomplished in the near future. He would urge them to remember that they were only landmarks, mere milestones on the road of progress, and that they by no means had arrived at the end of their journey yet. The present was their grand chance, their true season for acquiring knowledge. Do not let it pass unused. He would, for their benefit, quote the words of a, to be sure, not very reputable character, and repeat the words of old Eccles, though in a different spirit, "Work is good for the young" (laughter and applause), and he was particularly happy when he congratulated that society upon the result of its work in connection with these examinations. The field of work was large enough to admit of—nay, even to demand—the exertions of many. It was by concerted action and mutual goodwill only that they might hope to increase the quantity and improve the quality of the "blades of grass" in the field of music in Great Britain (loud applause).

At a banquet given on the evening of the same day by the Mayor, Dr. Mackenzie, who was the principal guest, was presented with an illuminated address. The presentation was made by Mr. George Riseley.

Correspondence.

STUDENTS AS PERFORMERS.

To the Editor of the "Musical World."

Sir,—Obliged though I am by "Scholar's" reply to my letter on this subject, I must confess to a feeling of disappointment. I did hope your correspondent would have been able to say that, at the Royal College at any rate, something more than an attitude of complacent helplessness was held towards past students who may deliberately mislead the public in the manner I have specified. Moreover, if the authorities are content to allow this serious matter to remain in the region of "vexed questions," it is clear that all the blame for these malpractices must not be thrown on the actual offenders.

If the letters R.C.M., etc., are at present "no authentic title," would not something be gained by at once converting them into such? If this were done, it would be, I apprehend, within the power of the governing bodies of the various musical schools to prevent their unauthorised use. Exception could not be taken, perhaps, to a mere statement on a programme that a performer was "from the Royal College" or el the initials aft academic disti who had receiv

one occasion, l
she was to take name, indigna
so unworthy, herself and h
by the dissemi
ments much ca
say the adopti offence in ques

October 29, 188

ST. AND

TAE

SUR,—Are
Coort for lettin'
vestures wi' his Dhu's famed ta whom it hath d things, when th that o' Naaman'
yea, as the skin

It's quite tru exeminashuns,
formed tae the e degrees. He a mither, withoot bred i' the bane Scots proverb.
sity; like laurea

We hae, fur
—thus destitute degrees. Oor p
the faithfu' in ti
ken the meanin'.
wi' a' their boast
Gainsay this wh

October 27, 1888

A. E. DYST

What with th
Gladstone, the C excellent concert of it. To choos
and from such an has selected a su
that is the opera provinces, with al talent, and above
Theatre Royal las the ardent amate management and the lessee of the mounted with exc operas was in kee
Royal seems to e

produced was Halévy's "La Juive," heard for the first time in Birmingham. Although so well known on the continent, where it has held its own for the last half a century, it is new to our inhabitants. The cast could not have been better. Miss Fanny Moody, who has so much endeared herself to Birmingham audiences, was cast for the unhappy Rachel, a part well suited to her. Her sympathetic voice and perfect vocalisation simply charmed the crowded house, and the reception accorded to her was enthusiastic and genuine. Not only as a singer, but also as an actress, Miss Moody showed signs of wonderful natural gifts. Her every movement, her facial expression, were studies in themselves. A new débutante, Miss Anna Fabr's (an American lady) made a charming and picturesque Princess Eudocia. She may be likened to one of those wonderful female portraits by Palma Vecchio, so well known by their roseate tint and fairylike chevelure. Graceful in all her movements, possessing a pleasing and sympathetic voice, she also has had the advantage of excellent schooling and sings with remarkable ease and wonderful brilliancy. Mr. Barton McGuckin in the part of "Eleazar" displayed unusual fire and emotional power, and sang the difficult music with entrancing effect. The "Cardinal" was in the able hands of Mr. Charles Manners. His sonorous voice, fine presence, and perfect enunciation gave all due effect to the part. Mr. Manners also assumed the part of Bertram in "Robert le Diable," with an equally gratifying effect. The other characters were most ably sustained. Miss Julia Gaylord appeared as Mignon, a part quite her own. Her powerful portrayal of the unhappy heroine deeply touched old and young. Mr Celli's "Laertes" was one of the finest ever seen. Those excellent artists, Madame Georgina Burns and Mr. Leslie Crotty appeared respectively in "Robert," "Carmen," and "Le Nozze di Figaro." In these columns we have so often commented upon the excellent results constantly attained by this gifted pair, that we hardly need repeat our former opinions. The orchestra, under M. Goossens' admirable direction, was the best ever brought to us.

An excellent chamber concert was given by Madame Agnes Miller and the well-known Shinner Ladies' String Quartet. The programme, devoted to strictly classical music, was rendered in such a manner as to satisfy the most hypercritical. Most admirably played was the Schumann Pianoforte and String Quartet in E flat Op. 47. Madame Miller, a pianist of considerable ability, played Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 78, with great character and faultless technique. Miss Shinner, the gifted violinist, played most exquisitely during the evening.

MANCHESTER, October 29.

The last Thursday in October is always a day to be looked forward to in Manchester, for it is upon this date that Sir Charles Hallé has now for many years commenced his winter season. Considering the honours that have fallen to him during his summer recess, it was quite safe to predict that the enthusiasm which always marks his first appearance would receive a more emphatic expression than usual. So, indeed, it proved. The enormous audience which assembled at his first concert on October 25 rose unanimously as Sir Charles came on to the platform; and by the vociferous cheers with which they greeted him, they left him in no possible doubt as to the sincerity of their congratulations. When the great enthusiasm had subsided somewhat Mr. Bartley, the librarian of the orchestra, stepped forward, and in a suitable address expressed what was probably in the minds of most of those present; he concluded by wishing him, in the name of all the members of the orchestra, a long life wherein to enjoy the happiness that had come to him. Sir Charles, replying briefly, alluded with manifest emotion to the perfectly good understanding that had always existed between himself and his orchestra, and thanked these gentlemen and all his well-wishers in the warmest terms. Yet another sensation was produced later on, when Lady Hallé (Madame Neruda), as the solo violinist of the evening, made her first appearance; here Mr. Bartley's services were again in request and he presented her with a magnificent bouquet, which was gracefully acknowledged. Lady Hallé was evidently resolved that the emotions aroused by the occasion should have no unnerving effect on her playing. It is only rarely that one hears so fine a rendering of Mendelssohn's Concerto as was then given; its technical difficulties were completely mastered and the artistic interpretation of it was almost perfect. Only once do we remember her to have surpassed her performance on this occasion, and then Joachim was present. In the second part of the concert she was hardly less successful in two well-known pieces of Wieniawski, and in Schubert's excellent if somewhat too prolonged Rondo Brillante (B minor). The orchestral selections, though containing no novelty, were delightful; they included the overture to "Der Freischutz," Beethoven's C minor Symphony, and Liszt's fourth "Rhapsodie Hongroise." Sir Charles Hallé has devoted such unwearying attention to the training of his orchestra that we expect the highest things from it; and certainly we never heard Beethoven's Symphony so finely given as it was on Thursday last. We may here mention that the leadership of the first violins, which Herr Straus was unfortunately compelled to resign owing to ill-health, has been assumed by Mr. Willy Hess, who comes, we believe, from Aix-la-Chapelle. The vocalist should have been Miss Macintyre, but this lady being unable to appear Miss Alice Whitacre sang in her place. Her voice, which is of sufficient volume and has been carefully trained, is at the same time somewhat deficient in refinement. Mozart's "Mia Speranza adorata" was carefully given and fully merited the applause which it received; but the Polonaise from "Mignon," though commendable enough, sounded too much like an exercise.

GLASGOW, October 30.

After an absence of two years, Mr. Frederic Lamond has returned to this, his native city, and gave, last Thursday, a Pianoforte Recital in St. Andrews Hall's. The audience was not so large as was anticipated, but what was lacking in number was made up in enthusiasm. The programme included Beethoven's Sonata in E flat major, op. 31, No. 3; Schubert's Fantasie (Wanderer), op. 15; two compositions of his own (a) capriccio (b) Etude (Quasi presto), the last being rapturously encored; and Rubinstein's Valse and Galop from "Le Bal." At the conclusion of the last mentioned, the young virtuoso was recalled three times, and in response to an irresistible demand for an encore played Rubinstein's "Staccato Etude."

THE TALK OF THE CITY.

(From The Birmingham Saturday Night.)

The sudden restoration to health of Mr Thomas Edwards, of Birmingham, who has been an invalid for many years, is now quite the talk of the city. It seems that for a number of years he has been a great sufferer from rheumatic gout, sometimes being bedridden for six months at a time. He has tried various doctors, and used many so-called rheumatic remedies, in his effort to obtain relief, without avail. Finally Mr. George Bellhouse, Chief of the Birmingham Fire Brigade, gave him a bottle of St. Jacob's Oil, and from the very first application he experienced great relief from pain. Mr. Edwards is sixty-two years of age, and says that never during his life has he found anything to equal the Oil for removing pain.

Dr. R. Butler, Master of Arts, Cambridge University, was a great sufferer from rheumatism. He used St. Jacob's Oil He says the effect was simply marvellous. Mr. Wm. Howes, civil engineer, 68, Red Lion Street, Holborn, London, suffered over twenty years with rheumatism. Nothing relieved him. Then he tried St. Jacob's Oil. It acted like magic It cured him.

Rev. Edward Singleton, M.A., 30, Bournevue Road, Streatham, says: "St. Jacob's Oil removed all pain directly."

Thomas Collins, 41, Thomaston-street, Kirkdale, Liverpool, Inspector of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, after using two bottles of St. Jacob's Oil was completely cured of six months' suffering from severe rheumatism in the ancles.

James Mackenzie, corporal, Royal Engineers, stationed at Chatham, was nearly crazy with neuralgia in his face and head, when a bottle of St. Jacob's Oil was procured, and applied to the afflicted parts. The pain ceased at once as if by magic.

Mr. J. Wilkinson, 88, Bentham-road, South Hackney, London, suffered from rheumatism in his feet and legs for twenty years. One bottle of St. Jacob's Oil drove away all pain and brought about an effectual cure.

The above statements are certainly entitled to the most serious consideration of every thinking man and woman. The names given are those of living witnesses. The statements are facts. They can be easily verified. Let the public make the investigation. Everyone will find, not only that these testimonials are genuine, but that St. Jacob's Oil cures rheumatism, just as surely as the sun shines in the heavens. It acts like magic. It is simple. It is safe. It is sure. After the most thorough practical tests, it received six Gold Medals at recent International Expositions for its marvellous power to conquer pain. It cures when everything else has failed. It has cured people who have been lame and crippled with pain for over twenty years. It is an external remedy. It goes right to the spot.

ADVANCES
ARRANGED on LIFE POLICIES, REVERSIONS, ANNUITIES, SETTLED INCOMES, and every kind of negotiable SECURITY.
BILLS DISCOUNTED.
W. AUSTIN & CO., BANK CHAMBERS, 44, HAMMERSMITH ROAD, KENSINGTON, W.

NICHOLSON & CO.,
Organ Builders,
PALACE YARD, WORCESTER.
ESTABLISHED 50 YEARS SPECIFICATIONS AND ESTIMATES SENT FREE.

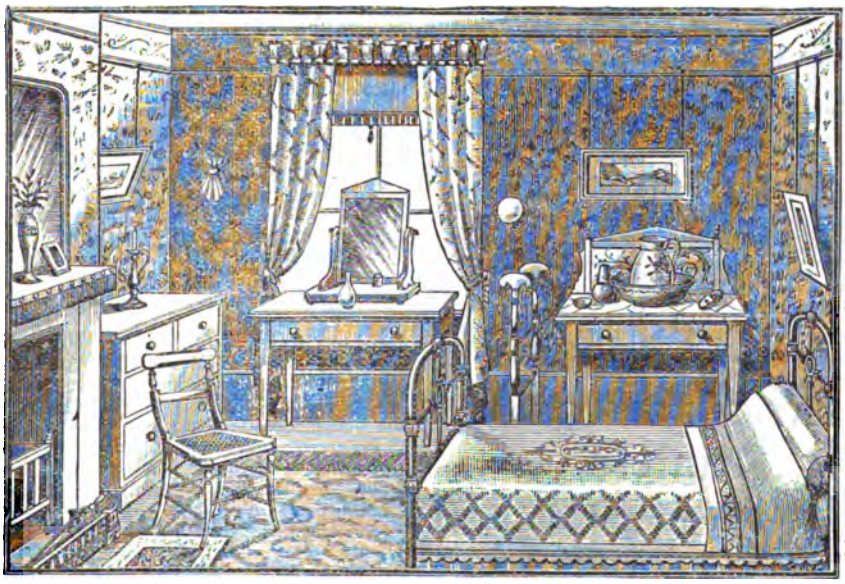
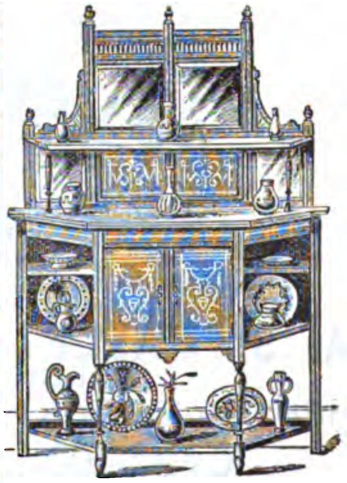
THE TRINIDAD
Cocoa and Chocolate Company,
Offices and Show Rooms: 35, Walbrook, London. E.C.
Works: Queen's Road, Battersea London, S.W.
Manufacturers of all kinds of COCOA and CHOCOLATE for the Wholesale and Retail Trades
PRICE LISTS ON APPLICATION.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT (REGD.)
OETZMANN & CO.,
67, 69, 71, 73, 75, 77 & 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (Near Tottenham Court Road)
Carpets, Furniture, Bedding, Drapery, Furnishing Ironmongery, China, Glass, &c.
Orders per Post receive prompt and faithful attention.

INEXPENSIVE ART TAPESTRY CURTAINS.
The BURMESE. 7s. 6d. per pair, in all colours.
The IMPERIAL. 38s. 6d. per pair, in all shades.



BEDROOM FURNISHED COMPLETE FOR FIVE GUINEAS.



EBONISED CABINET.
Four bevelled silvered plates at back, 4 feet wide.
75s.

Consisting of Chest of Drawers, Toilet Table, Washstand with marble Top and tiled back, Toilet Glass, Towel Airer, in plain art colours or in imitation of variuos woods, Strong Iron French Bedstead, Palliasse, Top Mattress, Bolster, Pillow, Toilet Set, Water Bottle and Tumbler, Fender, Fire Irons, Carpet (9 ft. by 6 ft.), & Rug. Five Guineas complete.
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, THE BEST PUBLISHING GUIDE EXTANT POST FREE.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice.

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

Without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes. 1s. 1½d. and 2s, 9d ; also in bottles for abroad.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings

FOR

VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,
ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,

Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

Vins de Champagne

ARTHUR ROEDERER, Reims.

MAISON FONDEE 1876

SODEN MINERAL PASTILLES.

TRADE MARK

FOR THROAT
IRRITATION
COUGHS
& COLDS.

SPECIALLY RECOMMENDED BY

"9, HARLEY STREET,
"I regard them as extremely valuable in obstinate Catarrhal affections of the Throat."
MORELL MACKENZIE, M.D.
[illegible] 1s 1½d, or 15 Stamps from [illegible], Holborn

Sir Morell Mackenzie

TRADE MARK

FOR BRONCHITIS
ASTHMA
& CATARRHAL AFFECTIONS.

WHOSE TESTIMONIAL
IS WITH EACH BOX

The Advertiser who wants to spend £1, or the Advertiser who is willing to invest £1,000, will find every information in SELL'S WORLD'S PRESS for

ADVERTISERS

Year 1888, which includes the Advertisers' Reference Book, 1,350 pages, 2s. The ABC Directory, and Philosophy of Advertising, post free, price Sixpence. ADDRESS:—"SELL, LONDON."

ESTABLISHED THREE QUARTERS OF A CENTURY.

A. S. MALLETT, ALLEN & CO.,

CONTRACTORS TO

HER MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE,

Type Music Printers,

LITHOGRAPHERS, &c.

PORTRAITS. (Speciality.) POSTERS.
WINDOW BILLS. BOOKS. CATALOGUES
STATIONERY. SHOW CARDS. PLANS, &c., &c.

68 & 70, WARDOUR ST., LONDON, W.

TELEGRAPHIC ADDRESS—"ASMAL, LONDON."

CASSON'S

PATENT

Organ-Building System.

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c., See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart.
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The Late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A.
Mr. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—

CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN COMPANY, LIMITED,

DENBIGH.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Stndio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO.

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had but little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me, or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

To Mr. Ainsworth. BURNHAM-HORNER, F.R. Hist. S.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and Organ student who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music or organ arrangement, with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is, as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours, I. B. THORNTON,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them ; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly, HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.
To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilitate the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number), each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS,

BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

Ascherberg Piano Depot,

211, REGENT STREET, W.

"Strength and Staying Power."

CADBURY'S

COCOA

IS ABSOLUTELY PURE.

Sustains against fatigue.
Increases muscular strength.
Gives Physical endurance and staying power.

CADBURY'S COCOA is ABSOLUTELY PURE, and is a refined concentration of the strength-sustaining and flesh-forming constituents of the Cocoa Nib. Delicious, nutritious, easily digested, and of great economy, a Sixpenny Packing yielding fourteen large breakfast cups of perfect Cocoa.

Strand, W.C., to which address

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1836.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 67.—No. 45. SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1888. PRICE {3d. Unstamped. 4d. Post Free.

THE
KARN AMERICAN ORGANS

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,
WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs, equal to, if not surpassing all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

New Illustrated Catalogue and Price Lists Free of the
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:
THE SCHREIBER PIANO COMPANY,
3, NEWMAN MANSIONS, NEWMAN ST., LONDON, W.

W. G. THOMAS'S PIANOS!!

ARE the BEST and cheapest in the market. Professors and others will find an advantage by sending for the Free Illustrated lists. Splendid Iron-framed PIANOS, full-compass trichord, in Walnut Wood Cases, at popular prices. Packed FREE. Contracts taken for large quantities. Old Pianos bought for Cash, or taken in exchange.

W. G. THOMAS, Pianoforte Manufacturer,
Gospel Oak Grove, Malden Road, Kentish Town, London, N.W

PIANOS, PIANOS
Harmoniums, and American Organs,
ON THE THREE YEARS' SYSTEM
Pianos .. ... from 10s. 6d. per month.
Harmoniums ... ,, 5s. 0d. ,,
American Organs ,, 7s. 0d. ,,

Any Instrument sent home on receipt of first Instalment.

OUR UPRIGHT IRON GRAND, Trichord, Double Check Repeater Action, Celeste Pedal, 15s. per month.

This is a thoroughly sound and elegant Instrument, warranted in every respect.

Other Classes equally cheap.

Write for Catalogue to
SHENSTONE, SHENSTONE & CO.,
Steam Works: GRANGE ROAD, LEYTON, E.
Show Rooms: 70, Hackney Rd.; 37, St. Peter's St., Islington; & 29, Kennington Pk. Rd

Special Notices.

CONCERT MANAGEMENT. Mr. Basil Tree (Successor to Mr. Ambrose Austin), St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, is open to undertake the management of Concerts.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—FIFTH SATURDAY C CERT.—November 10. Vocalists, Mr. and Mrs. Henschel. Violin, ster Harold Bauer. Pianoforte, Miss Ethel Bauer. Harp, Mr. Lockwood. ductor, Mr. August Manns. Programme will include Symphony in B flat (Ha); Concerto for Pianoforte and Orchestra (Saint-Saens); Romance for Sopr and Harp (Beethoven); Aria, "Mit Mädeln sich vetragen" (Beethoven); Song, "Feuerzauber" (Wagner), Overture, "Tannhäuser" (Wagner); and Fantasia Appassionata for Violin and Orchestra (Vieuxtemps); Vorspiel to "Parsifal" (Wagner). Seats 6d. to 2s. 6d.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL. Madame ADELINA PATTI'S only two appearances in London previous to her Continental and American Tour, at Two Grand Evening Concerts, Tuesday No. 20, and Tuesday, Dec. 11, at Eight o'clock. Artists: Madame Adelina Patti, Madame Antoinette Sterling, and Madame Trebelli, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Santley, and Signor Foli. Solo Violin, Miss Nettie Carpenter and Miss Marianne Eissler. Full Orchestra. Conductor, Mr. Ganz. Tickets (for both Concerts) now ready; 12/6 10/6, 5/-, 3/-, and 2/-. Boxes, Two to Five Guineas, at the Royal Albert Hall, usual Agents, and Basil Tree's Ticket Office, St. James's Hall, N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

HERR WALDEMAR MEYER has the honour to announce TWO GRAND ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS, which will take place at ST. JAMES'S HALL, on Thursday Evening, November 22, and Wednesday Evening, December 12, to commence at 8 o'clock.—Orchestra of 70 performers.—Conductor, Prof. C. Villiers Stanford.—Admission 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 3s., & 1s.; Tickets at all the libraries and musicsellers, and Ticket Office. St. James's Hall.—The concerts under the management of Mr. W. B. Healey.—A FEW OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.—BRUSSELS—Herr Waldemar Meyer, the hero of the evening, was a young German violinist, pupil of Joachim. In addition to the purest feeling and an incisive style, this artist possesses a magnificent tone, an irreproachable intonation, and a great command of the bow, as also an intimate understanding of the style of certain composers with whom he is more particularly in sympathy.—LE TEMPS (Paris), Popular Concerts—M. W. Meyer is a violinist of the grand school. He played the first movement of Raff's Concerto in the style of an artist for whom his art presents no difficulties; in the adagio his broad tone revealed the great school of which he is a disciple, while the finale showed his talent in a third aspect. To sum up, the artist is complete. The public accorded him the warmest of receptions; he was recalled three times, and with justice.—LEIPZIGER NACHRICHEEN—Herr Waldemar Meyer made a most favourable appearance as violinist, and earned universal applause. Not only does Herr Meyer possess a very considerable technique, but his tone is distinguished by robust power and a noble fulness, which render him better qualified than many other players for the performance of Spohr's Adagios, and which affect the listener most agreeably.—THE DAILY NEWS—Speaking of Herr Waldemar Meyer's performances at the Crystal Palace, says: "'Vieuxtemps' Concerto in D minor revels in difficulties which once taxed even his own powers, but Herr Meyer made light work of them, and fairly won the applause of his audience."

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.—Mr. Henschel, conductor.—The series of the Third Season, 1888-89, will comprise 10 EVENING CONCERTS, to take place at ST. JAMES'S HALL, on the following TUESDAYS, Nov. 20, 27, Dec. 4, 11, Jan. 15, 22, 29, Feb. 5, 12, 19, and in addition (not included in the subscription) two Afternoon concerts on Wednesdays, Dec. 19 and Feb. 27. Subscription, Reserved seats for the series of 10 concerts, £2 15s. and £1 10s.; single tickets, 7s. 6d. and 4s.; unreserved seats, single ticket, 2s.; admission, 1s., at the usual agents, and Basil Tree's Ticket Office. St. James's Hall. N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

MISS AMY FLORENCE (late Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, has the honour to announce that she will give a GRAND EVENING CONCERT at Steinway Hall (Lower Seymour Street, W.), on Saturday, Nov. 17, commencing at 8 precisely carriages at 10.30 o'clock; when she will be assisted by the following eminent artists:—Mr. Iver McKay, Mr. Walter Wells, Mr. R. Henri Goddard, and Mr. George Gear; Miss Eliza Thomas, Miss Clarice Willats, Miss Mabel M. Smith, and Miss Kittie Claremont. Conductor, Signor Gennaro Bisacia, of Covent Garden. Manager, Mr. Edwin Barlow, 14, Bessborough Street, St. George's Square, S.W.

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, or £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the Manager of The Musical World, 138a, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, Hamilton Terrace,
St. John's Wood, N. W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.,
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, Finsbury Park Villas,
Green Lanes, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI,
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
12, Westbourne Park Terrace, W.

Mr. F. St. JOHN LACY,
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist (Baritone),
Fitzroy Mansion, Charlotte Street,
Fitzroy Square, W.

Mr. H. MARTIN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
Address—7, Wimpole Sireet,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mr. LOUIS N. PARKER, A.R.A.M.
(Composer, Conductor, Lecturer),
Sherborne, Dorset.

Mr. G. W. L. MARSHALL-HALL
Gives lessons in Composition and Dramatic Singing,
151, Rucklidge Avenue,
Willesden Junction, N.W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts)
Bosworth House, Husband's Bosworth,
Rugby.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o Nolan & Jackson.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorio),
41, Welbeck Street,
Cavendish Square, W

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, Portsdown Road, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concerts and Oratorio),
29, Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio)
2, Sedgmoor Villas,
Private Lessons given. Camberwell, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
(Ballad, Oratorio, etc.)
31, Monmouth Road,
Bayswater, London, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, Norfolk Square, Hyde Park, W.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts),
56, Duchess Road,
Edgbaston, Birmingham.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 36, Albion Place, Hyde Park W.; or to Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul,
26, Old Bond Street, W.,
Or, 270, Elgin Avenue, Maida Vale, W.

Mr. IVER McKAY
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concerts),
1, Milner Square, London, N.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Old Trafford, Manchester.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio),
28, Devonshire Street, Islington, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
Gothic Lodge,
Lordship Lane, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, St. Stephen's Afenue,
Shepherd's Bush, W.

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
40, Stanley Gardens, Belsize Park, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Villa D'Este, Lake Como, Italy.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, Upper Mount Street, Dublin.

Mr. RAPHAEL GORDON
(Operas, Concerts, and At Homes).
c/o Signor Odoardo Barri,
60, Margaret Street, W.,
Or, 97, Talbot Road, Bayswater, W.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street.

Mr. FREDERICK KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, Canfield Gardens, S. Hampstead.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
Egremont, Croxted Road,
West Dulwich, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert),
63, Stafford Place,
Buckingham Gate, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, etc.),
30, Lancaster Road, Notting Hill, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorios, and Operas),
70, Portsdown Road, Maida Vale, W.

Harp.

Mr. W. T. BARKER
(Concerts, At Homes, Receptions),
49, Ebury Street, Belgravia, S.W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22a, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified." 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
"Yelbana," 99, Anerley Road,
Pupils visited and received. Anerley, S.E.

Miss FREDA MARSDEN,
Solo Violinist (Concerts, At Homes, etc.),
Address. c/o Mr. Charles Woolhouse,
81, Regent Street,
London, W.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul (sole agent),
26, Old Bond Street, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella (Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST,

Telegraphic Address: "Healey's Agency," London

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Madame WILSON-OSMAN (A.R.A.M.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert), (Soprano)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss FLORENCE EMERSON (Soprano)
(Concerts, Oratorio, At Homes, Etc.)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey.
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W, B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss FALCONAR (Contralto),
(Oratorio Concerts Etc.)
24, Oppidans Rd, Primrose Hill, N.W
or Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor),
28, Belsize Road, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. HENRY PHILLIPS (Tenor),
Sole agent, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio)
Business Manager, W, B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone),
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W, B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Herr WALDEMAR MEYER (Solo Vlnst)
Concerts, At Homes, Etc.)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street,
Regent Street, W.

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Tenterden Street, W.—NEXT FORTNIGHTLY CONCERT, Nov. 17, at 8.

For Syllabus of Metropolitan and Local Examinations, 1889, and other information apply to he Secretary.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, Kensington Gore, London. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.

President—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director—SIR GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL.D.

NEXT COLLEGE CONCERT will be on NOVEMBER 15.

Regulations and all information may be obtained of the Registrar, Mr. GEORGE WATSON, at the College. CHARLES MORLEY, Hon. Sec.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and EXAMINATION, etc., and the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music. Instituted 1872.

President, THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.

LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN INSTRUMENTAL AND VOCAL MUSIC.

Arrangements are being made for holding Examinations in Vocal and Instrumental Music at the following, amongst other, centres:—Nov. 5-10—Portsmouth, Herne Bay, St. Ives, Southampton, Dover; Nov. 12-17—Bristol, Taunton, Exeter. Chippenham, Ilminster, Cheltenham, Brecon; Nov. 19-24—Southport, Preston, Bolton, Salisbury, Bath, Hastings, Brighton, London, S.E.; Nov. 26—Dec. 1—Birmingham, Leicester, Northampton, Wolverhampton, Shrewsbury, Colchester, Yarmouth, King's Lynn, Reading; Dec. 3-8—Liverpool, Carnarvon, Manchester, Chesterfield, Weymouth, Plymouth, Maidstone; Dec. 10-15—London, Croydon, Surbiton, Rochester, Aldershot, Guildford; Dec. 17-22—Leeds, Newcastle, Stockton, Carlisle, Newark, Bedford, Hull, York, Keighley, Halifax, Swindon, Stroud. These dates are subject to alteration.

Applications for particulars and regulations should be made to the Secretary, Trinity College, London, or to the local Secretary of the centre. A complete list ofthe latter can be had from the College. By order of the Academical Board.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C. PATRON—THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.

Established to advance the cause of Church Music and the truest interests of its Professors.

Members of the Church of England and Ireland and the Episcopal Church of Scotland are eligible for Election.

Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates), 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members), 15s, per annum; Life Subscription, 5 guineas.

Prospectus and further particulars may be abtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

MUSIC SCHOOL.—CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL for Girls (Limited), 6, Upper Baker Street, Regent's Park.—Head Music Mistress, Miss Macirone, late Professor of Royal Academy of Music. Fee, three guineas per term. Children from 8 to 13 allowed to begin and continue for two guineas per term. Pupils not in the School may pay an entrance fee of one guinea. The fees payable in advance. Pupils wishing to join Violin Class under Mdlle. Gabrielle Vaillant, to send in their names to Miss Macirone. F. J. HOLLAND, Chairman.

ANGLO-FRENCH SCHOOL, FOR DAUGHTERS OF GENTLEMEN, Granville House, Hornsey Rise, London, N.—Miss NASH and Madlle. RAYMOND, assisted by a staff of efficient Professors and Teachers, receive Pupils to board and educate. Special attention given to Music. Healthy and pleasant locality. Terms moderate. References kindly permitted to parents of pupils and to the Editor of "The Musical World."

SOUTHSEA. St. Bees' College for Girls and Kindergarten, conducted by Miss Nelson, M.C.P., healthily and pleasantly situated, with good playground, offers every educational advantage with the comforts of a home, and careful supervision. Pupils prepared for all higher examinations. Special attention to Music and preparation for the R.A.M. Class-singing, languages, physiology, drawing, dancing, swimming, musical drill, combined with a thorough English education. Terms, moderate and inclusive.

TO PROFESSORS OF MUSIC.

TEACHERS in Colleges and Schools, &c., wishing to learn the Tonic Sol-fa system. A Course of Nine Lessons will be given at 9, Warwick Lane, London, E.C., from Thursday, Dec. 27 to Saturday, Jan. 5, from 3.30 to 5 p.m. Teacher, Mr. L. C. VENABLES. Attention will be directed to the Art of Teaching, and a class of children will be present on one or more days. Fee, 10/-; single lesson, 1/6.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

PARENTS seeking ENGLISH or FOREIGN SCHOOLS, TUTORS, or GOVERNESSES for their children, are invited to write fully to

J. F. MOON, M.C.P.,
85, NEWMAN STREET, LONDON, W.,

Who will forward prospectuses and every requisite information, free of charge.

Particulars required are: age and sex of pupil, locality preferred (if any), and about what terms will be paid. Housekeepers, Nursery Governesses, and Companions are also recommended. Hours 11 till 3. Saturdays closed.

(Royal It
Engagements
Promenade Co
3, Sudbourne R

BERTINA,
Rome, an
the method and
17, Tavistock S

MELLOW

DRURY

By H

MORNING
consequen numerous reque
SATURDAY.

THE AR
Edith Bru
Luigi Lablache,
S. Dawson, Me
West, W. Uridg
F. Thomas, F.

THE ARM
historical nightly endorsed performance.

THE ARM
Winchilsea
the most intere persons booking occupying place eleven p.m., inc

LOND

 MSS. be env

 Advert sho
PE
the 188

The frie that, accordi
Australian great colony than to pro performed seems to ha
the compose
Mr. Cowen
most excell highest orde and ability t potent witn attained bef Concert, an contained w Rhapsodies,
"Tannhäus
that Mr. Co

and his expedition must certainly yield results of the highest value to the cause of which he is so worthy a representative.

"L. E.," writing in The World of the 31st ult., expresses his opinion that "Die Feen," Wagner's first opera, notwithstanding a fabulous mise en scène, has made an outrageous fiasco at Munich. On the other hand, we learn from the Musikalisches Wochenblatt that "Die Feen," produced on the 29th of June, had, at the end of September, survived its twenty-first performance. Considering that the management of the Munich Theatre, in spite of its large subvention, has to a great extend to consider the wishes of the public in framing its repertoire, this does not look like an "outrageous fiasco."

As a sequel to the announcement that Zola's novel, "La Faute de l'Abbé Mouret" had inspired M. Massenet to the composition of an opera, comes the news that the same author's latest work, "Le Rêve," is to be made the subject of an opera by M. Bruneau, a young composer of Massenet's school. The libretto will be written by M. Gallet. There certainly appear to be elements in M. Zola's new book which would lend themselves fittingly enough to musical treatment, for the novelist has avowedly set himself the task of composing a novel unstained by the "realism," falsely so-called, of his former writing. We can scarcely agree with the contemporary French critics who hold that the author of "La Terre" cannot write anything pure and artistically sane. But it may be noticed that M. Zola has been guilty of a curious inconsistency; his doctrine has been always that in the ultimate analyses of human life vice is the only product, and that, therefore, the portrayal of vice in the crudest form is the sole duty of the novelist. A book which, according to all accounts, is so poetic as "Le Rêve," is surely a singular contradiction of this doctrine. We could wish that it might be taken as a sign that M. Zola has awakened to the fact that life has elements other than vice, and that to ignore these purer elements is the one unpardonable blasphemy against Art.

It is interesting to learn that the honoured name of Tietjens is not yet wholly of the past. Miss Marie Tietjens, a niece of the great singer, will, we understand, shortly make her début in the musical world. Miss Tietjens, who is at present studying with Mr. Caravoglia, is but seventeen years of age, and bears a singular facial resemblance to her aunt. The young lady's name alone would ensure for her a sympathetic reception; and it is to be hoped that her artistic qualities may prove worthy of that name, than which the annals of modern art contains few more distinguished.

Mr. Henry Irving, in a recent address, to which reference was at the time made in these columns, spoke of the drama as having existed for upwards of two thousand years. It would perhaps have been nearer the truth to say that it dated back to the very dawn of humanity, seeing that the dramatic sentiment is instinctive in man. "The first child," writes P. Ferrari in his historical preface to Rosmini's "Legislazione e Giurisprudenza Teatrale," "was the first dramatic poet; poet and actor like Æschylus. Its first drama is the family; the boy impersonates his father, the girl her mother; ingenuous simplicity of dialogue, overflowing with affection and—strange to say—with thought; then they personate themselves, representing themselves with burlesque modesty in their dolls; spontaneous blending of satire and sentiment. The second drama of the child is society; before a little altar it personates the priest, with a little sword it personates the captain, the emperor. One may say the same regarding music; the first musician is a child who hears a nightingale in the wood; then it wishes to imitate a nightingale, and it trills primæval music."

We need offer no apology in reprinting from the daily papers the following letter, which may be commended to all those of our readers who are able to make response to the appeal therein made:—

SIR,—Will you allow us, a few working men of South London, to ask for further help in our attempt to keep before ourselves and our fellow-workmen and their families an ideal of a higher life than even technical education? Many generous friends have lent us many pictures and helped towards our expenses; and within the last twelvemonth more than a hundred thousand people, nearly all genuine artisans, have visited our art gallery. We spend less than £300 yearly for every expense, including heavy rent, and towards this we have this year but £200. We ask for donations towards our expenses, and for the loan of pictures for such times as their owners can spare them, however short. All letters should be sent to our secretary, Miss Olver, and cheques should be crossed, "Robarts, Lubbock, and Co., account of South London Fine Art Gallery."—Signed by

J. BISS, Cigar Maker. N. BROOKS, Carpenter.
R. BOUNDS, Mason, R. BUTCHART, Polisher.
W. BRAGG, Carpenter. W. CLARK, Shunter.

Fine Art Gallery, 207, Camberwell Road, Nov 2.

By a somewhat singular coincidence, it appears that three French composers are at work on operas dealing more or less directly, with Zoroaster and the Persian Fire-Worshippers. M. Massenet, M. Lenepven, and Madame Marguerite Olagnier are the composers in question. M. Massenet's work will be founded on a poem by Jean Richepin, and will have, provisionally, the title of "Le Mage." The principal characters will be Zoroaster, King Hystaspes, and a priestess of the Goddess Jahi, and there will be a grand ballet in the third act. M. Lenepveu's libretto is taken from Marion Crawfurd's clever novel, "Zoroaster," and in this, not less than in the composition of Madame Olagnier, which will be called "Le Persan," the fire-worshippers will play an important part, while each act of the lady's opera will contain a ballet relative to the particular cult in question.

"Contentment in Art" is a text that has been the subject of more than one eloquent discourse by Mr. Ruskin. It may be presumed that the musical public of Berne would find favour in the eyes of the brilliantly paradoxical professor, for they listened a few days since with the utmost contentment to a "grand" performance of "Der Freischütz" given with the accompaniment of a—piano. Contentment, however, in such art as this seems scarcely desirable.

"There is a law of nature which brings periodically into contact the large with the small, the supremely great with the supremely diminutive."

These are doubtless the opening words of some crushing reply to Mr. J. S Rowbotham's "attack" on Wagner, the casual reader will say. By no means; they are the words with which that gentleman commences an article on the "Music of Ancient Rome" in a contemporary. "Out of the mouth of"—but we need not finish the quotation. Which is the great, and which the small in this conjunction, does any say? That is a matter of opinion.

Not without a deeply pathetic interest was the ceremony which took place last week at Buda-Pesth in the Metropolitan Cemetery, where a monument was unveiled in memory of Lajos Berkes, a famous gipsy musician, who had been known as "Zigeuner Primas," or Gipsy Primate. Four hundred gipsies assembled, and after an eloquent speech in praise of the dead had been spoken by a well-known actor, and compositions of the musician had been played, they threw themselves on the ground around the monument, and "broke out into mournful wailing." The ensuing incidents are thus described by a foreign correspondent:—

"Subsequently they visited the grave of Raczy Pali, another great Zigeuner musician, where they prostrated themselves, shedding copious tears over the wreaths and flowers on the tombstone and kissing the earth around it. They then played several melodies composed by Raczy Pali, after which, going back to the obelisk, they danced round it, and went through various wild antics. On returning to town they held a banquet, at which they drank till a late hour on the following day to the memory of the deceased and to his eternal welfare in the Zigeuner Paradise. The son of the deceased Primate has succeeded to the control of his father's band. It was he who, during the recent visit of the Prince of Wales to Görgeny, in Transylvania, was engaged with his musicians by Crown-Prince Rudolph to entertain his Imperial Highness's guests."

It seems to be so generally agreed to day that any display of deep emotion is unworthy of our advanced civilisation, that such an incident as this appeals with singular directness to our feelings. It strikes the note of nature's protest against repression and conventionality. Students of Browning will scarcely fail to be reminded of the stringent pathos of that section of "The Flight of the Duchess," which describes how the Duchess, in noble revolt against the tyranny of petty conventions, seeks escape from her life of chilled emotion and unregarded sympathy in flight with the Gipsy Queen.

It has been decided by the Senate of Cambridge to confer the honorary degree of Doctor of Music upon Mr. A. C. Mackenzie, Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, and Professor C. Villiers Stanford, M.A.

We are asked to state that the next annual festival in aid of the Dramatic and Musical Sick Fund (benevolent branch) will take place on Wednesday, March 20, 1889, at the Whitehall Rooms, Hotel Metropole, when the chair will be taken by Mr. Thomas Thorne.

Miss Amy Florence who, as Mdlle. Fiorenze, has sung for the past two seasons at Covent Garden under the management of Signor Lago, and Mr. Harris, announces a concert to take place at the Steinway Hall on the 17th inst.

The fifth series of the Hampstead Popular Concerts will begin on the 16th instant, and the prospectus, which has just been issued, is of considerable interest. The leading violinists will be Mr. Gompertz and Mr. Ludwig, except at the second concert on November 30, when Herr Heckmann will appear with the other members of his famous quartet party. Among the pianists engaged are Madame Mehlig, Miss Fanny Davies, Mr. E. Dannreuther, and Professor C. Villiers Stanford; the last named will lead his pianoforte quintet in D minor. The practice in vogue at these entertainments of providing gratis programmes containing the words of the songs, is deserving of commendation and worthy of imitation.

SOME THOUGHTS ON THE DAY-MACFARREN THEORY OF HARMONY.

By Oliveria Prescott.

Many and great have been the objections raised to this theory by musicians, at the Musical Association and elsewhere; many also have been the alterations suggested by those who would accept it up to a certain point, but not entirely. No one has, as yet, come forward to point out the beauty and fitness (harmony) of the system as it is, when compared with the music that is. It may be, that having failed to understand other systems with lonely study, I surrendered too unconditionally to this when it was explained to me day after day by the clearest and most liberal of minds. But, as it now stands, in the second edition of Day's book, with the additions made by the editor, Macfarren, after his 40 years experience of it, it seems to me to harmonise in a remarkable way with the best in music.

The great point in the Day-Macfarren system, that which raises it above all others, is the frank recognition of two styles, and the bold way in which they are taught at once separately and together. Other systems will either wipe out the past, or ignore the artistry of the present. You will hear those who have learnt entirely from one system say, we must not use any chromatic intervals or chords, we must not do this, or that, and if we do, we do it at our peril, just as

Bach did in hi amazement.
that any coml pended or not,
common chor
music, because music altogeth

However, t admits both in are to show th softer modern both equally lo
it gives us the
This is what material men o
their wonderful Mozart, Beeth
paper which St
a composer to study. The we music want m packed up in b
to their titles ei or perpendicula traced.

There are music contradic certain places,
rest, the new is somewhere, the

One discus recollected by t possible, even harmony. How throughout the
the two, the me control exciteme
the other; how,
friend, many a s
anon a gentle p

One of thes ment of simple ness of the succ tonic in certain
Sixteen years a familiarity with thoughts on th great promoter member my ma
music thing."
chords in (b) ma

In the case itself, its presenc dominant note h
the ancient feelin now, no one can chord is good in

I have heard
but if a pupil use and why blink suspended (a) or has softened it wi

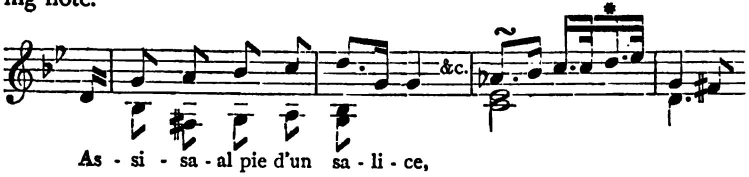
On the same occasion Mr. Stephens objected to the inclusion of chromatic chords in the key, maintaining that they were transient modulations, or glances at keys for the duration of the one chord. The Neapolitan 6th of a given example in C, he maintained, was a modulation into D flat. In the case of this particular chord we may surely go to Italy for its treatment. I don't think Rossini felt himself to be in the key of A flat during the A flat chord of the following example in G minor, else why did he not put a flat to the D passing note.*



I have a strong suspicion that some people are so taken with the beauty of the natural phenomenon of the harmonic string, and of a mathematical solution to the discoveries of music—the dominant 7th discovered by Mouton, and the major scale, so beloved by old popular tune writers, that they endeavour to draw the whole of music into this series, and overlook the truth of the more artificial parts, wherein is contained the minor scale, the sub-dominant chord so beloved of Mr. Stephens, and many other beauties. By this they rouse antagonism to the whole. But there is neither need nor use to look for a natural solution to an artificial beauty. Artificial preparation is enough to beautify the diatonic discords. We are satisfied with a suspended discord (a), or an essential discord (b), belonging to the diatonic scale.

But when we come to diminished sevenths of several different kinds in one key, or to the following in the key of C, we want another solution, and are delighted to find some of its history in the fundamental string.

At this meeting Mr. Prout made a beautiful and natural simile of the relations of important notes of the key. The tonic, he said, is the father, the dominant the eldest son, the supertonic the little grandson, eldest son of the dominant. Will he let me go back a little? There is old Gaffer in the chimney-corner; he has resigned the conduct of the household into more able hands, and sits smoking his long pipe, which he now and then takes from his lips to utter words of wisdom and experience. This is the sub-dominant and whilom founder of the tonic. He is somewhat old-fashioned, but by no means obsolete; and his expressions have a tendency to clinch the argument and make it final, as all know who have ever tried to write a coda to a long movement.

But all efforts to solve the mysteries of any art by purely natural means must fail at some point, just as purely artificial solutions must fail at another point. An occasion will be remembered when at this same Musical Association, Mr. Cobb endeavoured to demolish the Day-Macfarren system, when the learned and amiable promulgator of the system remained by the lecturer, and submitted to be demolished along with his system, in undisturbed good humour and confidence in the goodness of his cause. Later, Dr. Pearce made objection on the same main ground—namely, the want of agreement between nature's and art's chord. A few days after Mr. Cobb's paper I remarked to the old Professor, "But we must admit that the natural foundation for the system will not carry through everything, because Nature's discords are never resolved." (The same remark has lately been made by the inventor of a new system which has the advantage of being at least as difficult as Day's.) He only answered me out of my own mouth, "Did you not remind me a few days ago that the old Greeks decreed that Art is Nature seen through the human mind? You must draw the line somewhere." So we say that Nature is not Art, nor Art Nature, but Nature looked at with our mind. In pictorial Art, see Nature drawing on the flat. A reflection has no perspective. Look at the loveliest, clearest reflection of a sunny scene in a beautiful lake, Thirlmere, for instance, noted for its reflections, or Ulleswater at the Patterdale end. Though you may think for a moment that you cannot see where real ends and reflection begins, you find when you look closer that the water picture has no roundness, no distance in it. But look upwards with your own two eyes to the real, and you see distance and roundness. The painter must do what nature did not; he must make up that want of roundness and distance, and must put on the flat canvas or paper what your two eyes see, and not the one eye of Nature's looking-glass. So with the natural discords, you might stand for hours under the telegraph wires and never hear a resolution. But the artist must put that in, must give our ears the rest that they require, and must also select from nature's chord such notes as our human, artistic ears will feel to be satisfying to it.

PROVINCIAL.

LEEDS, November 6, 1888.

"It no sooner rains but it pours," is a proverb applying to musical affairs in Leeds, for after the usual period of inactivity, we have begun with a short season of the Carl Rosa Opera Company at the Grand Theatre, and, during the same week, a couple of concerts of importance. Mr. Rosa's quasi-novelties, "Robert the Devil," and Halévy's "La Juive," under the title of "The Jew's Revenge," proved very successful, and were well received, the former work attracting at its second performance one of the largest audiences of the week. The principal artists in each opera were Miss Fanny Moody, who enhanced her reputation by her fine performance of "Alice," and still more by her "Rachel," which was both historically and vocally a remarkably fine impersonation; Miss Amanda Fabris, a light soprano whose brilliant vocalisation and graceful carriage fitted her for the parts of the two Princesses; Mr. Barton McGuckin, whose "Eleazar" was one of the finest creations of this admirable artist, being both dignified and highly dramatic; and Mr. Charles Manners, who was hardly fiendish enough as "Bertram," but both in that part and that of the Cardinal in "The Jew's Revenge" charmed his audiences by his powerful yet deliciously mellow bass voice and perfect intonation. Both operas were adequately mounted, "The Jew's Revenge" being, as regards dresses and mise en scène generally, one of the most admirable of any of Mr. Rosa's provincial productions. The other performances were of such familiar works as "Carmen," "Figaro," "Mignon," and "The Bohemian Girl," all of which attracted good houses, and were performed with that all-round excellence which one is accustomed to associate with this company.

The "Leeds Subscription Concerts," which are the legitimate successors of the "Leeds Popular Concerts" carried on for several seasons by the enterprise of a private gentleman, Mr. Rawlinson Ford, and which are to consist of six concerts, two of orchestral music, two of chamber music, and two "miscellaneous" (alias ballad concerts), began on Wednesday with a concert of the last named type, of which Mr. Santley was undoubtedly the hero, being in better voice than we have known him for many years, and throwing himself heart and soul into such old familiar songs as Hatton's "To Anthea," Sullivan's "Thou'rt passing hence, my brother," "Here's a health unto His Majesty," and "Simon the Cellarer." Madame Clara Samuell sang some ballads with that perfect refinement which characterises her, Miss Florence Hoskins was a pleasing contralto, or rather mezzo-soprano, soloist, and Mr. Orlando Harley was the tenor; the instrumental element, always rather at a discount on such occasions, being represented by Miss Anna Lang, who played violin solos by Papini & Saint-Saëns, in an almost faultless manner, and Mr. Sidney Naylor, who in addition to giving a couple of rather commonplace pianoforte solos, was the accompanist of the evening.

Mr. Edgar Haddock, a local violinist, began his annual series of musical evenings, which are this season to be on a somewhat more ambitious scale, on the 29th October, when he had the assistance of M. Emil Bach in a programme of great interest.

BIRMINGHAM, November 5.

Our thoroughfares are thronged with thousands of people awaiting the arrival of Mr. Gladstone. There is much heart-burning in some quarters and rejoicing in others, yet the visit of Mr. Gladstone to Birmingham is the talk of the hour, and business, art, and music must give way to the one absorbing theme of the moment. But a great treat was afforded to organists and lovers of the organ on Saturday afternoon, when Mr. C. W. Perkins, the newly-appointed organist of the Town Hall, gave his first recital. Although the weather at the time was anything but pleasant, incessant rain coming down in torrents, the Town Hall was filled in every part by a highly appreciative audience, including a large number of professional musicians and amateurs, &c. The recital opened with Bach's famous prelude and fugue on the notes B-A-C-H, followed by an exquisite "Andante espressivo" and "Allegro moderato" (canon) by Salomé. The clever young organist at once showed his mastery over the instrument, by his artistic skill and clever manipulation of the long array of stops. His style is decidedly clear and distinct, he is never noisy in his playing, and on Saturday he brought out the beautiful qualities of the noble instrument, which, by the way, was in splendid tune. We have never before heard a more delicious pianissimo. His excellent and faultless technique and wonderful command over the pedals rank him as a first-class organist and musician. His repertoire included Henry Smart's "Air with variations" and "Finale fugato," Dr. Heap's "Fantasia in A" and W. T. Best's "Fantasia on a Welsh march." In order to give variety to the recital the services of our clever young violinist, Mr. F. Ward, and of Mr. H. Peacock (baritone) were requisitioned, both artists contributing items of interest given in a faultless manner. These organ recitals will be continued every Saturday afternoon. Madame Oscar Pollack (contralto) and Mr. Swingler (tenor) will be the vocalists on Saturday next. Mr. Gilmer's enjoyable military band concerts continue to draw crowded houses, irrespective of bad weather. The hall on Saturday night was again crowded, and Mr. Gilmer with his usual taste had provided a capital programme, including soli for his principal instrument. Madame Oscar Pollack and Mr. Fredericks, who were the vocalists, were enthusiastically received and recalled. several times after each song. The Midland Musical Society announces a performance of the "Elijah" for Saturday evening next at popular prices. The principal vocalists, as usual, are selected from our local artists. The cast will be Miss Lilian Mills, Miss Florence Bourne, Mr. J. L. Robinson, Mr. Frank Mott, and Mr. Percy Taunton. The hon. con ductor, Mr. Stevenson, will wield the baton and Mr. C. W. Perkins will preside at the organ.

MANCHESTER, November 6.

Those people in Manchester to whom music is more than a casual pastime have reason to be deeply grateful to the society under whose organisation the Gentlemen's Concerts have for so many years been conducted. Before the existence of Sir Charles Hallé's Concerts it was to this society almost exclusively that we had to look for the introduction of works which possessed any higher merit than that of tickling the ear. This is thirty years ago. Since that time great efforts have been made, chiefly by Sir Charles Hallé, towards bringing the finest compositions within the reach of the general public. Owing to the thoroughly conscientious and worthy manner in which these attempts were carried out, the sphere of their attraction widened very considerably, and they drew a large number of supporters from the select and somewhat limited class to which the Gentlemen's Concerts appeal. Hence it has happened that of late years the career of this society has been to some extent chequered; and this not through any avoidable fault of its own, for its concerts have usually maintained a high standard of excellence. Quite recently, however, it has been decided to make a vigorous attempt to restore to the Society its old prestige; and it is to this that are due one or two innovations in the programme for the present season. The first of these is the substitution of a conversazione for the opening and the closing concert of the series. This, which, on the face of it, seemed to many a retrogade step, proved otherwise, so far at least as the first conversazione was concerned, for it was nothing more or less than an informal concert, an excellent programme being supplied. What appeared to be another novelty is the introduction of three or four "Drawing Room" Concerts. The first of these took place on Tuesday evening, Oct. 30, and here again the innovation was found to be nominal rather than actual. The concert was of chamber music, and the artists occupied the centre of the pretty little hall, instead of the platform as heretofore. The arrangement justified the use of the term Drawing Room Concert, and, in the absence of an orchestra, presented no acoustical disadvantages. The artists were Sir Charles and Lady Hallé, Signor Risegari (2nd violin), Herr Hess (viola), and Herr Fuchs (violoncello). Beethoven's string quartet in E flat (No. 10) was the first on the programme, and with the exception of a slight hitch or two was very finely played. Sir Charles Hallé and Herr Fuchs gave Mendelssohn's beautiful Sonata in D for pianoforte and violoncello. Herr Fuchs, who played much better than when we last heard him, acquitted himself admirably, and it need hardly be said that the support he received from Sir Charles was entirely adequate. Lady Hallé's violin sang divinely in a Reverie of Vieuxtemps, and a Tarantella by the same composer was given with marvellous fire and precision. A most enjoyable concert was concluded with a pianoforte quartet by Brahms in G minor, a work which has many interesting features about it, though the opening "Allegro" and the concluding "Rondo alla Zingarese" appeared at a first hearing to be unduly laboured.

The prominent feature in Sir Charles Hallé's second concert (Nov. 1) was Dvorak's Third Symphony in F. It is in many respects widely different from the same composer's Second Symphony which created such an impression here last year. The latter has been well called the "National" Symphony—the former would almost seem to suggest for itself the title of "Popular," for its subjects are such as are at once grasped, and tend to linger in the memory, and the manner in which they are developed is for the most part readily comprehended. The first theme of the "Allegro" is simple and beautiful, and at the same time is admirably worked out; the movement as a whole has a distinctly pastoral flavour. The "Andante con moto" opens with a lovely melody given out by the violoncello, and almost suggestive of Mendelssohn; beauty succeeds beauty, and one regrets when the movement passes into the sprightly "Allegro scherzando" It is not until we reach the Finale, "Allegro molto," that we definitely recognise Dvorak as we have known him hitherto; there is a wildness about this and a national imprint upon it which could hardly come from any other pen. The Symphony contains some magnificent orchestral effects; and though as a whole it hardly impressed us so deeply as did the Second Symphony, it is undoubtedly an important work. Sir Charles Hallé played Schumann's Concerto very finely; later on he gave Grieg's "Aus dem Volksleben," not to our mind the finest specimen of this composer's work, and hardly the class of music which exhibits Sir Charles at his best. Mr. and Mrs. Henschel were the vocalists. Mrs. Henschel sang most tastefully two pretty songs ("Spinning-Wheel Song" and "Jamie or Robin?"), by Mr. Henschel, who himself gave a spirited rendering of Beethoven's buffo aria, from "Claudine von Villa Bella."

BIRMINGHAM FLUTE SOCIETY.

The thirty-second annual meeting of the above society was held on Saturday last. By the courtesy of Mr. F. E. Huxley, of Waterloo Street, the members and friends assembled at his rooms for tea at 5. 30. In addition to the members of the society there were present, his Worship the Mayor (Alderman Pollack), Mr. R. Richard (of the Midland Institute), Dr. Brown (of Bath Row), and several other friends. Letters of apology for non-attendance were read from Mr. Henry Nicholson (of Leicester), the President of the society, Mr. W. L. Barrett (of the Promenade Concerts, Covent Garden), Mr. Henry W. Carte (of London), and Dr. Allis Smith (Bournemouth). After tea the following programme of music was performed:—Grand quartet, four flutes, E minor, Andante Maestoso Allegro Assai Rondo, Ruhlau; trio, flute, flauto, d'amour, and piano, Andante Grazioso, Rossini, Boehm; solo flute, Resignation et Polonaise, Andersen; grand quartet, four flutes, Adagio, National Austrian Melody, with variations, Fürstenau; solo pianoforte, "Devotion," Schumann, Liszt; grand quartet, four flutes, F sharp minor, Andante ma non troppo, Walckiers; song, "The Better Land," Jude; trio, two flutes and flauto d'amour, "Am Meer," Schubert; grand quartet, four flutes, "Scherzo Finale," Walckiers; song, "The City of Rest," Pinsuti; double quartet, eight flutes, "Judex," Mors et Vita, Gounod, arranged by Mr. W. Langston. Through the liberality of Messrs. Rudall, Carte, and Co., of London, the society were enabled to introduce a novelty in the programme, several items being inserted for the latest form of flute made by this firm, the bass flute, or, as it is called by the makers, the flauto d'amour. The compass of this instrument is three octaves from G below the line to G in alt; the quality of the lower notes is rich and sonorous, and in combination with other flutes it has the effect of giving great breadth to the harmony. In the trio by Beethoven, originally written for two oboes and horn, transcribed for two flutes and the flauto d'amour, of which only the adagio, menuetto, and trio were played, the new instrument was heard to the greatest advantage. The society were indebted to Miss Johnson for contributing two songs to the programme, her musicianly rendering of which greatly delighted the audience. Miss Tester kindly undertook the pianoforte accompaniments, and played her solo with much refinement and technical skill.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Advertisements of Concerts, &c., will be received up to 4 p.m. on Thursdays, if addressed to the Manager, 138a, Strand, W.C. "The Musical World" is the recognised medium for advertising London, Suburban, and Provincial Concerts, and has no other address whatever for the reception of communications.

Knighthood of the Legion of Honour, 1878. Knight Commander of Villa Viraga, 1883. Gold Medals at the Principal International Exhibitions.

JOHN BRINSMEAD & SONS'

PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS RETURNED FROM HIRE, may be purchased at GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

JOHN BRINSMEAD AND SONS, Pianoforte Manufacturers, 18, 20, 22, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W. Lists free.

THE "EMPRESS" PIANOS

ARE the best value in the market. Workmanship cannot be surpassed. Touch and tone unequalled. Professors and others are invited to inspect these beautiful instruments. Prices from 20 guineas. Ten years' guarantee with every instrument. Messrs. Chudleigh Bros., 140, Strand, London.

DRESSMAKING MADE EASY for 2/6, by using the SYMMETRICAL DRESS PATTERN. Lessons in Dress Cutting till perfect, £2 2s. inclusive.—Write, Miss HEMMENS, 19, Queen Street, Bryanston Square, London, W.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE, and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be of the greatest efficacy in every form of disease. Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.

Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT, 78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 3, or by letter

---

THE RIGHT HON. LORD KNUTSFORD, G.C.M.G. Engravings from the original Portrait of Lord Knutsford, by J. F. Acret, are now being issued. Steel Line Engraving, by Harold Bourne. Artist's proof, £1 1s., Enfield House Studio, Windmill Hill, Hampstead.

Musical World Portraits.

NOVEMBER 17 - - -	MADAME WILSON OSMAN.
NOVEMBER 24 - - - - -	MR. EBENEZER PROUT.

Publishers' Announcements.

NEW PART SONGS FOR S.A.T.B.

By W. W. PEARSON.

'Tis Morn ! (Edwin Oxenford)	3d.
The Oyster Dredgers	2d.
Welcome, young Spring	2d.
Off to Sea (Edward Oxenford)	4d.
HUMOROUS PART SONGS.
Three Doughtie Men (30th thousand)	3d.
Three Children Sliding (6th thousand)	3d.
A Ryghte Merrie Geste	4d.
The Snow-white Doe (just published)	4d.
Ben Bowlegs (Edward Oxenford)	3d.
The Carrion Crow	3d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO., 1, Berners Street, W.

NEW LEGITIMATE TEACHING METHOD.

GILHAM'S KEYBOARD INSTRUCTOR.

Patented througheut the World. Price 2/6. Post Free 2/9.

HOW TO PLAY THE

PIANO, ORGAN, OR HARMONIUM,

In the shortest time and easiest and simplest manner.

WALTER SCOTT, 24, WARWICK LANE, LONDON,
AND FELLING, NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, ENGLAND.

Publishers' Announcements—continued.

SIMS REEVES: HIS LIFE. By Himself.

Ready Oct. 8, at all Libraries and Bookstalls,

SIMS REEVES: HIS LIFE. By Himself. 1 Vol., demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

London: Simpkin, Marshall, and Co., and London Music Publishi Company (Limited), 54, Great Marlborough Street, W

Positively Ready Oct. 8,

SIMS REEVES: HIS LIFE. By Himself. 1 Vol., demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

London Music Publishing Company (Limited), 54, Great Marlborough Street, W.

VIOLIN TUTOR.

PRACTICAL VIOLIN SCHOOL, for Home Students. A Practical Book of Instructions and Exercises in Violin Playing, for the use of Amateurs, Self-learners, Teachers and others. By J. M. FLEMING. 1 vol., demy 4to, cloth gilt, price 7s. 6d.; also in monthly parts, 7d. "Can be heartily recommended to students who wish to lay a solid foundation for good and artistic playing."—Musical Standard.

London: L. UPCOTT GILL, 170, Strand, W.C.

TO COMPOSERS,—RIDGEWAY and CO., Music Publishers, 10, Argyll Street, W. undertake the REVISING, PRINTING, and PUBLISHING of Musical Works upon exceptionally low terms. The finest work in the trade. Estimates upon receipt of MSS. IMPORTANT.—Composers' Works included in Catalogue and introduced without extra charge.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR THE VOICE,

By T. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 27, Harley Street, W.

THE VOICE.

A Complete Explanation of the Throat and its Functions in Breathing and in the Production of Voice, will be found in

"ELOCUTION, VOICE, & GESTURE."

By RUPERT GARRY.

Remedies for Clearing and Strengthening the Voice, and for the Cure of Hoarseness, Sore Throat, and other derangements of the Breathing Tubes.

"The section on the Voice is well considered and trustworthy, based as it is on the writings of authorities on the question of the Hygiene of the Vocal Organs."—STAGE.

"The Book contains many valuable hints in regard to Voice and Gesture."—VOICE (New York).

POST FREE, 1s. 2d.

London: Bemrose, 23, Old Bailey, E.C., and of the Author, at his residence, 49, Torrington Square, W.C.

IN SIX GRADES,

Price Two Shillings each.

Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:

A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,

By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWANN SONNENCHEIN and CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE;
And all Book and Music Sellers.

The Organ World.

"THE PHYSIOLOGY OF PIANOFORTE PLAYING, WITH A PRACTICAL APPLICATION OF MR. W. MACDONALD SMITH'S APPARATUS."

A PAPER READ BEFORE THE MEMBERS OF THE COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS, BY T. L. SOUTHGATE.

(Concluded from page 182.)

Some object to any exercise of the fingers away from the piano, because, they say, the effect produced by each finger should be heard. It is true that in order to ensure equality of finger, the effect should always be noticed, and this, I venture to hope, is one of the advantages of this finger apparatus, for by its means the power of the fingers can be perfectly equalised, the weaker ones being practised more than the strong ones, until all have attained the same rapidity and strength. One of the chief objections to most systems of finger exercises at the piano is that the weak fingers always remain weaker than the others; the injurious, unsatisfactory result of practising scales, using the two weak fingers less than half as often as the thumb and two stronger ones, is very evident. By the intelligent use of the apparatus this natural defect is repaired, valuable time is saved, and an equal touch, with evenness for playing rapid passages can be attained.

There are two other movements necessary, but which can be more readily practised without a set apparatus, as long as the importance of rapidity of movement has been properly grasped by the student. One of these refers to the turning the thumb under, and another to the movement required for tremolo and some shakes. There are several special exercises written for being performed at the piano for the turning under of the thumb, but in common with many others the movement is not sufficiently rapid to be a gymnastic exercise, and therefore such practice has to be continued for a long time before any improvement is noticed. But if we take the movement in itself, and perform it very rapidly half-a-dozen times, the effect is soon perceptible, and the turning under in playing becomes easy. It is quite sufficient to do the following six times each way; Draw the thumb across the palm till it touches the base of the little finger, then very suddenly open the whole hand, then as suddenly bring the thumb across the palm again. This will combine exercise for another movement, which is seldom taken into account—viz., the "hollowing of the hand," a position sometimes wanted when a group of notes, all very close together, has to be played.

For the tremolo, a rotary motion must be given to the arm and hand; this is what is called "supination" and "pronation" in anatomy. If a roll of half-a-dozen pieces of music is held in the hand, and a rapid movement backwards and forwards made, such as is used in tremolo passages, a marked increase of facility in such passages will soon be noticed, and also a greater facility in playing shakes, probably owing to the mechanical loosening of certain ligaments more than to the real exercise of muscles.

In concluding with a few remarks connected with the question of pianoforte practice, I may offer some observations as to the instrument upon which the student, especially the beginner, practises. If we bear in mind what Schumann says about a dumb piano being of no value, I am afraid we must agree that an old, worn-out instrument, such as is often given to children to practise on, no doubt from force of circumstances, is even worse than a dumb piano. How can nice gradations of touch, either of finger or wrist, be acquired when the notes will not answer to anything less than a "forte" blow, when endeavours to play with expression are useless, or a legato run out of the question. The injurious nervous effect of such work should alone be enough to condemn it utterly for any pupil.

The use of scales is another question which is nowadays of great importance. If we look carefully at the essential difficulties to be overcome in playing, they will be found to be of two kinds, mental and mechanical The mental advantage to be derived from scale playing is the acquisition of the habit of using the correct fingering, so that when a portion of a scale occurs in a piece which is being played, there may be no sort of hesitation as to what fingers are to be employed. And this is the only great advantage to be gained, Scale playing is still supposed by many to give evenness in playing, but it is certain that an exercise of the strong fingers at the expense of the weak cannot possibly conduce to equality of finger and evenness of playing.

"Locality," that is the habit of the fingers at once striking the notes which the mind directs them to strike, may be practised as well in playing any piece as in playing studies or exercises. Shakes in thirds must be acquired automatically, and although an instantaneous control over each muscle will give increased facility in the particular movement required for shakes in thirds, still the physiological facts connected with the "rate of finger movement" prevent anyone being able to play a rapid shake in thirds, except by perfect automatism. It may be remarked that the rarity of a perfect "legato" scale does not generally arise from a want of 'ear" on the part of the student, but owing to a weakness of the tensor muscles, which do not execute the "up" movement as rapidly as the mind wills them to act. Who has not noticed the wonderful runs a mechanical piano plays? However unenviable its performance in other respects, I always envy its "runs." As far as the "legatoness" is concerned, a short time spent over strengthening the extensor muscles will enable a performer to do this well.

Pianists sometimes adopt what seems to be a peculiar "action" of the hand, and which needs explanation. Sometimes the hand may with advantage be thrown down on the keyboard, but in thus using the weight of the hand, as the expression is, the result produced is not really the effect of allowing the hand to fall, thus utilising its weight, which is really small The object of this action, which some employ, is really to relieve the extensor muscles of their slight contraction, and thus to enable the flexor or striking muscle to act in a perfectly free manner. By lifting the hand bodily to the height of three inches or so above the keyboard, a downward stroke is obtained, during which the fingers have, so to speak, no weight. The exaggeration of this action is, of course, bad, but if judiciously done, it affords the player considerable facility in playing certain passages when great rapidity and decision is necessary. Natural awkwardness of the left hand and arm present a difficulty—it is of course the result of the very little use made of the left arm in ordinary avocations. Quick passages and forte playing with it are impracticable unless it is made "dexterous" to a degree approaching that of the right hand.

Thalberg says that in playing, the hand should be as if "desossée"—without bones, meaning of course that there must be no stiffness anywhere. Few players attain this, as either weakness of some one muscle or another, or fear of being unable to accomplish a difficult passage, constantly introduces a stiffness somewhere, and so spoils the naturalness of playing.

The apparatus brought before you has been invented too recently to quote results of the exact amount of time saved by its employment, but it has been used enough to feel confidence in saying that with twelve minutes a day proper exercise with Parts I. II. and IV. of the apparatus, anyone may soon acquire and maintain a light and strong touch, a perfect freedom and command of the wrist, and a very considerable degree of rapidity. And that with twenty minutes' exercise with the whole apparatus the most advanced player may derive the advantage of the best gymnastic exercise of all the muscles brought into play in his art, and this at a very great saving of time as compared with the usual mode of proceeding.

I needly hardly stay to point out that the employment of this apparatus is of great use to the violinist. By means of it he can economise his time by stretching and thoroughly exercising the fingers of his left hand, besides making the right wrist supple for bowing. I may also mention it has been found that, as a result of the exercises described, a very noticeable advantage has been derived in another way. In the action of drawing, muscles are employed for forming lines in certain directions, which are not made use of at any other time; the consequence is that those who are not drawing or painting constantly find some lines very difficult to draw steadily; but when once the muscles in question are kept strong, firmness of stroke in every direction and rapidity of movement are easily maintained. Again, an increase of rapidity in ordinary writing, and also with the type-writer, is very marked when these finger exercises are madeuse of.

I will close with a word or two of Kalkbrenner's, showing the proper sphere of technical proficiency, to which I hope I have not been understood to attribute a higher importance than is due to it.

"The pianist who can only execute passages of difficulty, notwithstanding all the perfection he may have acquired, soon finishes by becoming tedious. We must soar higher, and aim at expression, soul, and grandeur of effect. Passages of execution must appear merely as accessories, serving as shadows in a picture. Above all, let the hands be perfectly independent, and not always playing together in the same tone of colouring. . . . We must not rest till we have succeeded in acquiring fire without violence, power without harshness, and sweetness without languor."

Pregnant words these, and especially noticeable as coming from one remarkable in his day as having great mechanical ability. But it is not necessary to point out to the members of this association that the possessor of these powers alone is not a musician, as we understand the term. If proof of this view were wanted, it would only be requisite to remark how often we meet with pianists who essay some enormously difficult virtuoso piece, which possibly may be effective and expressive enough when delivered by the artist-composer himself. But when this same piece is played by one who possesses strong free fingers, but no soul, and plays merely the notes, as we say, then the intent of the piece is unperceived, and it becomes a noisy and meaningless example of music, so wearisome that one may regret it was not a little more difficult, so as to be quite impossible. Thoughts of this nature must have passed through many of our minds when we have heard some of Liszt's terribly difficult pieces delivered without a trace of the charm with which he himself clothed them. Undoubtedly the average human mind likes to be astonished, and so there exists an inherent tendency to delight in digital dexterity, and to render homage to those who display great execution. But cultured musicians rarely fall into this error. They are aware that execution is only a means to an end, not the end itself. We know that execution may, and exist without its possessor having an atom of expression or feeling. In that case the worshippers of execution are like those who are satisfied with the mere narration of a parable, and fail to perceive the hidden meaning which underlies its diction. They are satisfied with the husk, as it were, and do not recognise that it is only the outer case holding the kernel.

At the same time, while lamenting that some think more of the outward manifestation than of the inner spirituality of music, it must be pointed out that until a fair amount of technique has been attained, the composer's ideas cannot be adequately represented. However good be the intention, however intelligent the desire to set forth the author's thoughts, all is useless unless the fingers have acquired sufficient strength independence, and rapidity to execute what has been written. By all means let us exalt the artistic player far above the mere executant, but let us also insist on technique. The possession of execution cannot interfere with expression ; but it is certain that complete expression cannot be manifest without technique, and no amount of artistic discernment will supply its place. In order, therefore, for the artist-executant completely to reoresent the perfected ideas of the artist-creator, technique and feeling, those indispensable faculties, must exist, and be employed together for the production of a finished work of art.

Mr. T. Turpin, T. Wingham, T. Matthey, and others took part in a discussion, which followed the reading of this able paper.

PURPOSE IN CHURCH MUSIC.

A writer in Church Life, an American paper, makes the following observations:

The participation in the worship of the Episcopal Church must, sooner or later, reveal to all earnest members the definite purpose of that worship, and what is now written must be echoed in the hearts of all those who through their earnestness have realised the purpose of all worship, but especially that belonging to the Liturgy of the Church. Purpose, as we know, signifies intention. Everything we have in any way connected with us is then bound up with purpose. It matters not whether we are indifferent to ourselves indivinually or collectively, we are in every way dominated by purpose. Now we, knowing the great danger of forgetting, even in our Holy Church, the purpose of her most glorious worship, certainly are justified in inquiring into that which has such a mighty result upon us Churchmen and Churchwomen, viz.: Worship—consisting as it does of two elements, prayer and praise, the latter being the most important, for we read these important and forcible words of Klopstock (1724-1803), "Worship is the most essential in sacred service, and singing is the most important part of worshiy, because it is the loud prayer of the congregation, which is moved by it with greater power and upheld in longer devotion than by the silent prayer, which is only quietly thought or softly repeated." It would seem that even in this advanced and remarkable nineteenth century, that at times the purpose of worship is lost sight of to a considerable extent by those who have the unfortunate opportunity to express themselves upon it, in a manner as if the almighty dollar was demanded at the door of the church, and the usual investment had been made to secure that dollar its value by preparation for an hour's amusement, which has the usual machinery to aid it, that the opera or concert work possesses; forgetting that hospitality has a right to be appreciated, as in our churches, where they are thrown open to all, irrespective of creed or nationality. This is indeed true of those whose criticism is expressed in such a manner as not only evinces knowledge of worship and its purpose, but who are unintentionally dealing with the matter under circumstances similar to work temporal, instead of work spiritual; even showing want of appreciation for hospitality extended to all by the Church's services, and thus incurring the awful responsibility of endeavouring to retard the proper signs of progress in that worship, by disseminating opinions upon it, not only in a wrong spirit, but in every way calculated to suppress the right undertaking of it and its purpose ; dealing with the matter in a secular manner, whereas it is well-known in what a great measure it is sufficiently undervalued by the world, owing in a great part to the proper understanding of its purpose and conditions. The worship of God is for the glory of God, and certainly not for the apotheosis of anyone. The latter part of Lessing's words on criticism signifies that it is necessary for the "true critic to form his taste upon the rules necessary to the subject of his inquiry;" therefore it is necessary to know thoroughly your subject before one can in any way express themselves in a manner that shall call for the sympathy necessary to the

RECITAL NEWS.

Esher Parish Church.—Mr. J. E. Adkins, F.C.O., Organist, is giving a series of six Recitals on successive Monday evenings, beginning Monday, November 5. The following are the programmes of two which have taken pace already. No. 1: Finale, 1st Sonata, Guilmant; Allegretto Scherzoso, Schumann; Minuet in C, Smart; O Sanctissima, with variation, Chipp; Fugue in E major, Bach; Allegretto Symphony in C, Haydn; Abendlied, Mendelsson; Fixed in his everlasting Seat (Samson), Handel. Mr. D. Pyke Evans, Scholar of the Royal College of Music, gave "Comfort ye" and "Every Valley," and also "If with all your Hearts," Mendelssohn. No. 2: Sonata in A (3), Mendelssohn; Caprice in B flat, Guilmant; Fantasia and Fugue in D minor, J. E. Adkins; "Return O God," "To dust his Glory," Samson, Handel; Introduction and Fugue, Ruick; Offertoire on two Christmas Carols, Guilmant; March Triomphale, Lemmens. Mr. F. B. Eastwood of Esher Lodge, Esher, gave "There is a Green Hill" and "For ever with the Lord," both by Gounod. The fine organ is by Walker & Sons.

Congregational Church, Worple Road, Wimbledon.—The new Organ was opened by Mr. Henry J. B. Dart, A.C.O., (Organist of St. John's Waterloo Road, London), November 14th. Programme: Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Chorus, "The Heavens are Telling," (Creation), Choir, Haydn; Adagio, E. J. Hopkins; Introduction - air and variations—A Hesse; Andante in E minor, Batiste; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Barcarole 4th concerto, Sterndale Bennett; Chorus, "All Men all Things" (Hymn of Praise), Mendelssohn; Allegretto in B minor, Grand Choreur in D, Guilmant.

St. John's Waterloo Road, S.E.—The Monthly Oratorio Service was held on Sunday, November 18, at 3 p.m., when Mendelssohn's St. Paul was given, with Master Warren, Miss Louie Lancaster, Mr. A. Davey and Mr. F. Winton as soloists, and with Mr. Henry J. B. Dart at the organ. These services, which are held the third Sunday in each month, are attracting a congregation from all parts of the Metropolis Spohr's "Last Judgment" is selected for performance on Sunday, December 16.

Birmingham.—A Recital was given by Mr. C. W. Perkins, in the Town Hall, on November 10. Vocalists: Mme. Oscar Pollalk and Mr. J. M. Swingler. Programme: Sonata in D minor (on the Chorale ("Vater unser"), Mendelssohn. Air and Variations, from Symphony in D, Haydn. Choral Song and Fugue in C major, Wesley. Allegro Cantabile and Toccata, from Organ Symphony, No. 5, Widor's. Bourée in B minor, Bach, Triumphal March, List.

Crystal Palace.—The following pieces were played by Mr. H. W. Weston, F.C.O, on November 5:—Toccata in C, Bach; Capriccio alla Sonata, Op. 230, Fumagalli; Selection, "Die Miestersinger," Wagner; Adagio from the 3rd Symphony, Mendelssohn; Allegro Moderato in A, Smart? Grand March, "Aida," Verdi; Organ Sonata in B flat, No. 4, Mendelssohn: Allegretto in A flat, from a Fantasia, Capochi; Fugue in A flat, Op. 27, Rheinberger; Allegro in D, Wesley; "Funeral March of a Marionette," Gounod; Marche Nuptiale and Fugue in D, Guilmant; "Chœur des Anges," Berger; Tempo di Minuetto, Weston; Overture, "Tancredi," Rossini.

Liverpool.—Mr. W. T. Best performed at St. George's Hall on November 3:—Rhapsodie sur Cantiques Bretons, Saint-Saëns: Romanxa, "Rose, softly blooming," Spohr; Toccata and Fugue in C major, Bach; Adagio, from the "Septuor," Beethoven; Overture, "Sofia Catarina," Flotow; Overture, "The Puritan's Daughter," Balfe; Duet, "Ah perdonna," Mozart; Concert Fantasia on Old English Airs, Best; Bourrée and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Andante for the Organ in F major, Wesley; Birthday March, Schumann.

SPECIFICATIONS.

Christ Church, Ealing.—On November 4 the above organ was reopened, after having received important alterations and additions at the hands of Messrs. Gray and Davison, and by whom the work has been very successfully carried out.

The instrument has been thoroughly overhauled, and amongst the additions the following may be mentioned:—

Choir Organ.—A Keraulophon 8 ft; Gemshorn, 4 ft.; and a Vox Humana, 8 ft.; spotted metal front in a swell box by tubular pnematic.

Swell Organ.—A Clarion, 4 ft., spotted metal, and a Tremulant and three Compositions.

Pedal Organ.—A Violoncello, 8 ft.

Mr. A J. Kelway Toms, the organist of the church, presided, and after service gave a recital on the instrument.

Congregational Church, Wimbledon.—Specification of Organ erected by Messrs. Conaeher & Co., of Huddersfield:—

Great.—Open Diapason, 8 ft.; Stop Diapason, 8 ft.; Dulciana, 8 ft.; Principal, 4 ft.; Harmonic Flute, 4 ft.; Fifteenth, 2 ft.

Pedal.—Open Diapason, 16 ft.; Bourdon and Violoncello prepared for.

Swell.—Double Diapason, 16 ft.; Violin, 8 ft.; Rohr Gedact, 8 ft.; Salecinal, 8 ft.; Voix Celestes, 8 ft.; Gemshorn, 4 ft.; Piccolo, 2 ft.; Mixture, 3 ranks; Cornopean, 8 ft., Oboe, 8 ft.

Usual Couplers.

NOTES.

A recent issue of a Church paper has the following advertisement:—

> AS COACHMAN, Footman, or Valet. Drive a pair; teach music, play organ, train choir if requiried. Excellent character and references.

The Rev. Sydney Smith said every man thought he could manage a farm and drive a gig, there seems to be a new belief in the world. that every man can play the organ.

In speaking of St. Clement's East Cheap, the "Echo" says:—"The church has an interast greater than many of those aronnd it, for the famous Dr. Pearson, 'On the Creed,' held the living once, as did the worthy old Fuller, of 'Church History,' while it is all linked to the name of the great English musician—Purcell—from the fact that he was once its organist, a post held later by Battishill." It will be remembered that Dr. C. W. Pearce, F.C.A., is the present worthy organist of St. Clement's.

On Oct. 26th, Miss Mc Knight, T.C.O., Organist and Ghoir-trainer of the Parish Church, Algerton, was presented witn a handsome metronome by the members of the choir as a token of their esteem.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS CALENDAR.

The following are leading officers:—Patrons: His Grace the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury; The Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of London; President (for the Collegiate year, 1888-9): Sir John Stainer, M.A., Mus. Doc.; Vice-Presidents: Professor the Rev. Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., Sir George Grove, L.L.D., D.C.L., Professor Sir R. P. Stewart, Mus. Doc., Sir G. J. Elvey, Mus. Doc., Sir Arthur Sullivan, Mus. Doc., E. J. Hopkins, Esq., Mus. Doc., J. F. Bridge, Esq., Mus. Doc., G. C. Martin, Esq., Mus. Doc., A. C. Mackenzie, Esq., Mus. Doc., Professor C. Villers Stanford, M.A., Mus. Doc.; Trustees: H. C. Wesley, Esq., E. J Hopkins, Esq., C. H. Turpin, Esq.

On Tuesday next the Library will be open from 7 to 9.

The dates given of following arrangements must be regarded as preliminary and may be subject to slight alterations:

December 4. Dr. C. W. Pearce, F.C.O. will read a paper on "Modern treatment of Ancient Ecclesiastical Melodies" at the College at 8 o'clock. Musical Illustrations will be given. The chair will be taken by Dr. E. J. Hopkins. January 8. F.C.O. Examination (Paper work). January 9. F.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). January 10. F.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). January 11. Diploma Distribution. January 15. A.C.O. Examination (Paper work). January 16. A.C.O. Examination Organ Playing). January 17. A.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). January 18. Diploma Distribution. February 5. Dr. F. J. Sawyer, F.C.O., will read a paper on "The History of the Theory of Harmony." March 5. Lecture. April 2. Lecture. April 29. Annual College Dinner. May 7. Lecture. June 4. Lecture. July 16. F.C.O. Examination (Paper work). July 17-18. F.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). July 19. Diploma Distribution. July 23. A.C.O. Examination (Paper work). July 24, 25. A.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). July 26. Diploma Distribution. July 30. Annual General Meeting.

Candidates for the forthcoming Examination should send in their names before January 1.

Further arrangements and particulars will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Secretary.

95, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury.

Google

(From a Photograph by Whitlock, Birmingham)

MR. EBENEZER PROUT.

MR. EBENEZER PROUT was born at Oundle, Northamptonshire, on the 1st of March, 1835. In 1854 he graduated B.A. at London University, studied the pianoforte under Mr. Charles K. Salaman, and was organist of Union Chapel, Islington, from 1861 to 1873. Editor of the "Monthly Musical Record" from its commencement in 1871 to 1874, he then became musical critic to the "Academy," and, subsequently to the "Athenæum." He was professor of Harmony and Composition at the National Training School for Music, and holds a similar position now at the Royal Academy and Guildhall School Mr. Prout's compositions are too numerous for tabulation here. His earliest successes were a string quartet, which gained the first prize of the Society of British Musicians, in 1862, and a pianoforte quartet to which a similar honour was awarded in 1865. Among his later works may be mentioned Concertos for organ and orchestra, the cantatas "Hereward" and "Alfred," 'The Red Cross Knight," "Queen Aimée" (for female voices—in the press); four Symphonies, three of which are still in MS.; an Orchestral Suite in D; "Love and Taxation," a comic opera in three acts; an overture to "Twelfth Night," and a number of quartets, trios, duets, and solos for various instruments, and for voices. In 1876, Mr. Prout contributed a primer on Instrumentation to the excellent series issued by Messrs. Novello. This has been translated and published in Germany. As conductor of the Borough of Hackney Choral Society, Mr. Prout is a prominent figure of London musical life, to the health and activity of which he has largely contributed.

Concerts.

HACKNEY CHORAL SOCIETY.

Handel's "Joshua," given on Monday evening at the Shoreditch Town Hall, under the direction of Mr. Prout, had not been heard in London since 1847. But the causes which have led to the neglect of this fine work are not far to seek. All good music is a compound of two elements—a form which is transient, and an indwelling spirit which is practically, though not literally, "eternal;" and the longevity of a work depends entirely upon the proportion which these elements of its constitution bear to one another. Now the forms of Handel's day are dead, and those of his works in which these preponderate are in consequence dead also. But the pathos and sublimity of the "Messiah," the dramatic intensity of "Samson,' the wealth of picturesque suggestion in "Acis and Galatea,' the tuneful beauty of "Judas Maccabæus" have easily succeeded in keeping these works alive in spite of much that is in them that is antiquated and formal. To these has been confided the task of revealing to posterity the splendours of Handel's genius. "Joshua" too contains many a mighty—many a beautiful page, but it cannot be said to represent, in such marked degree as the masterpieces just named, any special characteristic of its giant author. And when we take into consideration the immense number of works which, for artistic or commercial reasons, are yearly brought to hearing, we cannot be surprised that, in the case of music more than a century old, the inexorable law which decrees that only the fittest shall survive should come into operation. The action of this pitiless condition has consigned many a noble work to the comparative oblivion of the shelf. "Joshua" has suffered in good company. This renascence will perhaps add nothing to Handel's fame, but it is welcome for all that, if only for the sake of choral societies, who will be thankful for something new from the pen of an old favourite. The composer is seen at his best in the splendid choruses "The Lord Commands," "The Nations Tremble," "How soon our towering hopes are crossed," "Hail Mighty Joshua," and of course the well-known "See the conquering hero comes," afterwards transferred to "Judas Maccabæus;" in the beautiful contralto air "Heroes when with Glory burning," certain phrases of which must certainly have been very familiar to Beethoven; in the airs for bass "See the raging flames arise," and "Shall I in Mamre's fertile plains," and in the popular "O had I Jubal's lyre," "O who can tell," and "Hark, hark! 'tis the linnet," for soprano. Many of these have long been familiar to amateurs, who will not, perhaps, be sorry to renew acquaintance with them under the conditions intended by the composer. The performance, to all concerned, was evidently a labour of love, made lighter still by the warm appreciation of an audience which crowded every part of the hall, and yearned, on more than one occasion, very audibly, for an encore. The salutary rule which here forbids such irregularities was not however infringed, and the concert finished in reasonable time. "Joshua," in addition to other qualities, has some very practical merits: it is not too long, its interest is cumulative, and each of the soloists is provided with admirable opportunities for vocal display. Full advantage was taken of these on Monday by Miss Annie Marriott, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Brereton, and Mr. James Gawthrop, who, as Joshua, showed considerable declamatory power, and was more than respectable in the florid and difficult music of which the part largely consists.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

There were a few empty seats in St. James's Hall on Tuesday, but it would not have been surprising had there been many, for Madame Patti's concert took place on the same evening. Crowds are still attracted rather by vocal than by instrumental performances, by great artists rather than by great works; and Mr. Henschel relied, for his opening concert, solely on the latter. He commenced with Wagner's "A Faust overture," that noble work which expresses with almost antique grandeur, power of concentration and restraint, the mood embodied in these lines from Goethe's poem prefixed to it as a "motto":—

> The God who in my breast abides,
> Through all its depths can stir my soul;
> Yet can he not, what lies without, control,
> And thus my life as by a load opprest,
> I long for death, existence I detest.*

Though originally intended as the first movement of a 'Faust' Symphony, this overture is the immediate outcome of Wagner's own despair in 1840 when, obscure and friendless in Paris, he began to realise the contrast between his own position and the hopes which animated him; between the actual and that ideal which, as his writings at that period prove, had already dimly presented itself to his imagination. It is much to be regretted that Wagner never completed his design, especially when success and the purifying influence of life's experience, placing him in accord with the calmer air that breathes through Goethe's "Second Faust," would have made an equally subjective embodiment of the ending easy. The work was finely played, more sympathetically than Beethoven's Symphony in A which followed. This was accorded a rendering in which, while gradations of tone were admirably cared for, those of speed were all but ignored. An almost military inflexibility robbed the work of that tenderness which in everything of Beethoven's is so conspicuous a feature. The wonderful Trio of the Scherzo suffered most from this rigid time-beating—the last movement, naturally, least. The performance of Schumann's beautiful "Overture Scherzo and Finale" was on the other hand capital; that of the delicious "Ballet Music" from "Rosamunde" was little inferior; and a veritable triumph was achieved in four charming pieces by Grieg from the music to "Peer Gynt." These dainty and expressive trifles, which will assuredly be often heard, are orchestrated with consummate skill and taste; and Mr. Henschel and his army entered heart and soul into the picturesque imaginings of the composer. Of these pieces we prefer the 2nd, an elegy, and the 4th, a highly-coloured and barbaric piece of writing entitled "In the Hall of the Mountain King." At the next concert on Tuesday, Miss Fanny Davies will play Mozart's D minor concerto; the Symphony will be Brahms in F, No. 3; and the music to a Ritterballet by Beethoven will be heard for the first time in England.

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

St. James's Hall was filled in every part last Saturday for the first morning concert of the series. Mendelssohn's posthumous quintet in B flat headed the programme, the performers being Madame Neruda (for this, it appears, is the name under which Lady Hallé intends to be recognised professionally), MM. Ries, Straus, Gibson and Piatti. The rendering, save for a slight lack of finish in the delicate Andante Scherzando, was all that could be desired, and each movement was warmly applauded.

Sir Charles Hallé chose for his solos Chopin's Nocturne in E major, and the Bacarolle.

The only comparative novelty of the scheme was Brahms's Piano and Violin Sonata in A major, Op. 100, played by Sir Charles Hallé and Madame Neruda, who introduced it last season. It is the gentlest, sweetest, most lovable of all Brahms's works. Possibly, in some moods, the hearer might find something approaching insipidity in the simple grace of the first movement, and a too strong flavour of Mendelssohn in the finale; but whatever fancies a passing mood may suggest, the musician will assuredly find a place in his heart for this sonata, which is as unpretentious as it is beautiful. At present, however, it does not seem to have caught the popular ear; for the applause (except perhaps after the middle movement) was of the enthusiastic, matter-of-course type. This highly original middle movement was played in the very spirit, one well may believe, in which its author conceived it; the absence of pointed phrasing in the vivace "alternative" being especially happy. Indeed a more sympathetic reading of the entire work can scarcely be imagined. The concert closed with Beethoven's Pianoforte Trio, Op. 70, No. 1. Miss Liza Lehmann sang with marked success, an encore for Schubert's "Who is Sylvia," being steadily resisted. Mr. Frantzen's accompaniments were, in themselves, a feature of interest to the musician.

MADAME PATTI'S FIRST CONCERT.

That the Albert Hall should be filled to the utmost capacity by a crowd eager to welcome Madame Patti back to London, was, in the nature of things a foregone conclusion; and it may safely be said that a larger or more enthusiastic audience than that which assembled on Tuesday last, has scarcely been seen. If it were not discourteous to speak of the flight of time in connection with a lady, it might be said that the great diva is one of those whom age cannot wither, and whose infinite variety of charm, custom is powerless to stale. Certainly the mass of her admirers were unable to find any evidence of lapsing years in her singing. The beauty of her pianissimo, the startling power of her sforzando, and the almost miraculous perfection of her art as a whole, were as obvious as ever. In "Qui la voce," from "I Puritani," and in Handel's air from "Samson," "Let the Bright Seraphim," Madame Patti evoked the customary enthusiasm, which—as is also customary—redoubled when, in answer to a vociferous encore for the latter air, she appeared to sing "Home, Sweet Home." Madame Patti also joined Madame Patey—who took the place of Madame Trebelli, not yet recovered from illness—in the duet "Quis est homo," from Rossini's "Stabat Mater." The rest of the concert was of a miscellanous nature, calling for little remark. Madame Patey sang Gluck's "Che faro" and Gounod's "Quando a te lieta." Mr. Lloyd gave, in his own consummate way, "Fra poco," from "Lucia," and Loder's "Wake from thy grave, Giselle;" and Signor Foli was heard in Gounod's air, "She alone charmeth my sadness." The orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Ganz, who also accompanied, performed various works, such as the "Euryanthe" overture and the Allegro from Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony.

---

* Theodore Martin's translation.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The most important items at the 77th "College Concert" were the Trio in C minor of Mendelssohn, and Beethoven's string quartet in the same key. Both works, so eminently typical of their composers' genius, need, for entirely satisfactory interpretations, artists of ripe experience. It is necessary to remember this in criticising the efforts of their youthful exponents on this occasion. From a purely technical standpoint, the performance left little to be desired, and this applies in a marked degree to Miss Osborn's rendering of the piano part of the Trio. She played with exemplary correctness, but seemed unable to realise the alternate passion and pathos of her beautiful theme. The violinist, Mr. Sutcliffe, distinguished himself as usual by pure intonation and graceful bowing (the latter specially remarkable in the difficult scherzo of the same work), but he, as yet, lacks warmth and breadth of style. His small tone, although of good quality, is probably due to an inferior instrument. The intelligent phrasing and the beautiful tone of the violoncellist, Mr. Squire, deserve high praise. In a selection from Schumann's Waldscenen, Master W. G. Spencer gave promise of the highest future excellence. His appreciation of the delicate humour of these charming trifles was, considering his extreme youth, quite phenomenal, and his technique all but irreproachable. Two songs composed by Thomas Chapman, a student, and sung by Miss E. Davies, are very pleasing and unconventional, and Miss Ruth Elvidge was more than acceptable in songs by Grieg and Dvorák. Miss Stella Chichester was heard in Mendelssohn's Third Organ Sonata. Miss F. B. Clarke recited with much taste and feeling, Adelaide Proctor's "The Faithful Soul," and Mr. William Stephenson played with refinement, Vieuxtemps "Voix intimes" No. 3.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

At the City of London School on Saturday last the students of the above institution gave an Orchestral Concert, directed by the principal, Mr. Weist Hill. The Right Hon. Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, and the Sheriffs of London of the Middlesex were present in state, and her Ladyship presented certificates to the successful students. The orchestral items comprised the first movement of Beethoven's C minor symphony; Meyerbeer's "Struensee," and Auber's "Fra Diavolo" overtures; and a Largo in D from a suite by one of the students, Miss Edith Swepstone, who, to a vein of graceful and expressive melody, unites a commendable absence of vagueness in the handling of her thematic material. Were the influence of Mendelssohn less apparent it would be still better. There are two composers of whom young students should beware—Mendelssohn and Wagner: antipodes of each other, no doubt, in most respects, but alike in this, that their mannerisms are easily caught, and by no means easily got rid of. The careful training of the orchestra was shown in the precision, balance of tone, and careful attention to gradations of speed and power which characterised the rendering of all these pieces, that of Meyerbeer's work in particular being marked by an appreciation for rhythmic subleties by no means common. Vieuxtemps' trashy Concerto in E for violin was so well played by Miss Jeanne Levine as to induce a wish to hear her in something better; Mr. F. Casano gave a 'cello solo with much taste, and the vocal efforts of Miss Annie Swinfen. Miss Amy Sargent, Miss Carrie Curnow and Mr. W. H. Wheeler gave evidence of ability and sound tuition.

MISS ROSA KENNEY'S RECITAL.

A large and appreciative audience was attracted to Steinway Hall, on Thursday afternoon, by Miss Rosa Kenney's dramatic and musical recital. Miss Kenny gave an intensely emotional performance of "Guinivere," a transcription from Tennyson's beautiful "Idyll," and has seldom been heard to truer effect than on the present occasion. Miss Rosa Kenney is to be congratulated upon having mastered the unquestionable difficulties attendant upon a subject calling forth so many varied feelings. Miss Kenney also shewed her versatility by reciting the somewhat uninteresting poem "John Burns of Gettysburg" by Bret Harte, and "Aunt Tabitha," the humour of O. W. Holme's recitation being very subtly displayed. Vociferous applause greeted the actress at the termination of her performances. Miss Kenny was supported by Mesdames Edith Wynne, Patrick Boucicault, Messrs George Adams, Aubrey Boucicault and Mowbray Morris. Miss Mary Kenney deserves special praise for her organ solos, and skilful accompanying.

SMOKING CONCERT.

The Criterion Smoking Concert Society gave their second concert on Monday last. With Mr. Richard Mackway as musical director Mr. M. S. Rubinstein as Secretary, Mr. C. Doherty as chairman, and Mr. W. Van Noorden as accompanist it is needless to say that an excellent programme was admirably carried out. Messrs. C Copland, A, Martin, Sennett, Varian, Reynolds, C. Collette, Ward, Ben Davies, Le Hay, Snazelle and Mr. Mackway's celebrated choir of boys appeared.

HALIFAX.

The Choral Society gave an excellent rendering of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," with full orchestra, on Thursday evening, the 15th inst. The principal soloists were Madame Clara West, Miss Lottie West, Mr. Herbert Haigh, and Mr. Frederic King. Leader, Mr. H. Sedgwick; Conductor, Mr. W. H. Garland, Mus. Bac. The performance throughout was of praiseworthy excellence, and there was a very large and appreciative audience.

MISCELLANEOUS CONCERTS.

Music Room, Royal Pavilion, Brighton.—Mr. W. M. Quirke's fifth annual concert was given here on Wednesday last, when the concert giver was assisted by Mrs. Quirke, Miss Winifred Thacker, and Mr. W. C. Hann, as instrumentalists; and Miss José Sherrington and Mr. Douglass Lott, as vocalists. Mr. Quirke gave an excellent reading of Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, and took part with his wife in Beethoven's Sonata for violin and piano in C minor (Op. 30, No. 2). Not the least interesting feature of the concert was the performance, for the first time in Brighton, of a Trio in C minor for piano, violin and violoncello, written by Mr. Ferdinand Praeger. The chief features of the work are its breadth of melody and boldness of harmony; and, though it belongs essentially, in conception, to the modern school, it is written in strictly classical form. Another noteworthy feature is the care bestowed upon each instrument concerned; while each is subordinated to its proper place, it has yet its due share of interesting and important work. The Trio, in short, is one which may properly be added to the repertoire of chamber music. It received admirable interpretation at the hands of Mr. and Mrs. Quirke and Mr. W. C. Hann.

Miss Amy Florence's Concert was given at Steinway Hall on Saturday last. The success which has attended Miss Florence on the operatic stage evidently follows her to the concert-room. She is the possessor of a well trained and agreeable soprano voice and fully deserved the favour with which her songs were received. Mr. Iver McKay, Mr. Walter Wells and Mr. George Gear, Miss Clarice Willats Miss Eliza Thomas and Miss Mabel Smith assisted, and some clever recitations were given by Mr. Henry Goddard and Miss Kittie Claremont.

Herr Emil Bach's Concert.—A concert was given on Wednesday last by Herr Emil Bach at his residence, 12, Kent Terrace, in aid of the funds of the parish of S. John's, Bethnal Green. The generous efforts of the concert-giver were well supported by such excellent artists as Miss Whitacre, Miss Marie Curran, Mr. Max Heinrich, and Mr. Grossmith. Herr Bach himself gave excellent performances of Chôpin's "Polonaise" in E flat, and a clever "Etude" from his own pen. Miss Marie Curran, the young vocalist who made so favourable an impression recently at the Crystal Palace, repeated that success, singing with much charm of style Moore's "I saw from the beach," and Cowen's "Because." It is pleasant also to welcome back so admirable a singer as Mr. Max Heinrich, who gave on this occasion the "Star Song" from "Tannhäuser."

Miss Lena Law's concert.—Miss Lena Law gave an interesting concert at the Lyric Hall, Ealing, on Wednesday, when she was assisted by, amongst others, Mdlle. Marie de Lido, Mr. Iver McKay, Signor Villa, and Mr. Robert Hilton. Miss Law gave a highly emotional rendering of Gounod's "Quando a te lieta" and Balfe's "The green trees whispered," in each of which her excellent voice and finished style won much appreciation. Mr. McKay was very successful in the other "Faust" air, "Salve Dimora," and the same is to be said of Mdlle. de Lido, who gave the scena, "Roberto, o tu che adoro," and Mary Traver's "Stars of the summer night." Signor Villa sang, in genuinely artistic style, Tosti's "Amore." Miss Isabel Archer also recited Clement Scott's poem, "The coming winter," with admirable grace and intelligence.

BRIXTON HALL.—It is not often that the denizens of South London have such a musical treat laid before them as that provided on Tuesday evening last at the above hall by Miss Charlotte Hanlon, a young Irish lady, of whose beautiful soprano voice and artistic singing visitors to Dublin will have pleasurable recollections. Place aux dames, and we give most hearty appreciation to the efforts of Madame Antoinette Sterling, who simply won all hearts by her exquisite rendering of her various songs. In striking contrast to Madame Sterling's homely but extremely effective style, Miss Hanlon's method is at times very florid, but, nevertheless, always artistic and pleasing. Mr. Dalgety Henderson was in excellent voice, his various songs being given in true artistic style, to which a full meed of appreciation was accorded, nor must omission be made of the duet "What will you do, love?" by this gentleman and Miss Hanlon. Mr. James Budd also did well; "Brother Ambrose" especially seeming to please the good folks of Brixton; Mr. George Gear did excellent service, both vocally and at the piano; Mr. Bold-Andrews gave a couple of solos on the pianoforte in brilliant style; whilst the members of the St. George's Glee Union, including some admirable and well-trained voices, sang Hatton's "Sailor's Song," Sir H. Bishop's "Oh, Bold Robin Hood," and "Comrades in Arms," in capital style. Miss Mary Chatterton's harp solos were also greatly admired.

GRESHAM HALL, BRIXTON.—On Friday evening, the second of the series of chamber concerts given by the well-known musical family, the Messrs. Hann, was held. As usual, the performances were notable for their completeness, as is only to be expected from such talented and well-tried artists. Beethoven's string quartet in F was rendered in perfect style; and Mr. Lewis Hann has rarely been heard to better advantage than when playing Saint-Saens's "Introduction et Rondo Capriccioso." Mrs. Trust most efficiently gave the vocal portion of the programme, her pure, sweet soprano voice forming a very pleasing feature of the evening's entertainment. The third and concluding concert will take place on Wednesday, December 12.

MR. TOBIAS MATTHAY gave a pianoforte recital at Princes' Hall, on the afternoon of last Thursday week. . . . Signor Bottesini made his farewell appearance in London, previous to his departure for Turin, at Mr. Emanuel Nelson's concert at Princes' Hall, on the evening of the 15th inst. . . . The soirée held by the Lyric Club, to celebrate the opening of its new premises, took place on the same day. . . . The first of the "Hampstead Popular Concerts" took place on the 16th inst., at the Vestry Hall, Haverstock Hill.

PROVINCIAL.

BIRMINGHAM, November 19.

The principal musical event of the past week has been Mr. Stockley's first orchestral concert, this opening the sixteenth series. A new débutante to Birmingham, Madame Belle Cole, the American contralto, made her appearance, in lieu of Madame Nordica, who had been lavishly announced for that concert, but had not yet arrived from America. Madame Cole's fame had preceded her, and the Birmingham public greeted the newcomer with their usual courtesy to strangers. She achieved a genuine success, and was several times recalled after each song. Her best effort by far was Weber's simple and beautiful air, "O Fatima" (from "Abu Hassan"), which she sang with much feeling. The range of her voice is quite phenomenal; but there is a distinct break between the contralto and soprano registers, and in the high notes the intonation is not always pure. Madame Cole sang for her last item an American song, "The Fisher's Song," by Pease, a trivial composition of the concert-hall stamp—out of place in a classical programme. The audience, however, did not think so; for she was loudly recalled, and had to repeat one song. The other vocalist was Mr. Robert Grice, who gave with much spirit Benedict's "Rage thou angry storm," which well displayed his excellent voice; also a new song by our talented townsman, Dr. Wareing, entitled "Phillida," the composer himself accompanying on the pianoforte. It is a clever and scholarly composition in classical form, and will be a valuable addition to the concert répertoire. A novelty in the shape of an organ concerto, by Rheinberger, accompanied by a full string band and three horns, proved to be the success of the evening. Mr. C. W. Perkins, the Town Hall organist, presided at the organ, and his playing was masterly in every way. The concerto consists of three movements, and in each movement the string instruments and the horns are largely employed. It opens with a maestoso in F major, common time, followed by an Andante in D flat major, six-eight time, and closes with a Finale con moto in F major, common time. Mr. Perkins met with a hearty reception, and at the close, was vociferously applauded. The principal orchestral items included Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night Overture," Beethoven's first "Symphony in C," and the ballet music from Ambroise Thomas's "Hamlet." Mr. Stockley's orchestra is now so well schooled, that no difficulties stood in the way of an excellent rendition of the above-named items, Mr Stockley conducted, as usual, with due attention, and in a highly judicious manner. Two interesting concerts are announced for this week—Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Pollack's annnual concert (for which a well-selected and artistic programme has been issued), and Madame Agnes Miller's second popular chamber concert. The celebrated Shinner Ladies' String Quartet, consisting of Miss Emily Shinner, Miss Lucy Stone, Miss Cecilia Gates, and Miss Florence Hemmings are again associated with the beneficiare, and the programme will include "Quartet in B flat," op. 18, No. 6 (strings), Beethoven; "Sonata in A," Brahms; "Variations Serieuses" "Pianoforte solo) Mendelssohn; "Trio in F major" of 80. Pianoforte and Strings (Schumann). On Monday next Mr. Augustus Harris opens with a short season of Italian Operas at the Theatre and no less than seven different operas are announced for the week, the repertoire for which will include the following works, "Aida," "Ernani," "Faust," "Trovatore," "Lohengrin," "Carmen" and "Les Huguenots."

———

GLASGOW, Tuesday, November 20.

The Carl Rosa Opera Company Limited opened a fortnight's engagement at the Royal last night, Meyerbeer's Opera, "Robert the Devil" being performed (for the first time in English in Glasgow). The house was well filled with a thoroughly appreciative audience. Mr. Barton McGuckin was admirable in the title rôle. The part of Bertram was carefully pourtrayed by Mr. Charles Manners. Miss Fanny Moody as Alice was a feature of the evening's performance, and in the first act received a perfect ovation. The part of Isabella was entrusted to Miss Amanda Fabris, a young American lady who has not been heard in this city before. Miss Fabris appeared somewhat nervous on her first entrance, but towards the finish she gained more confidence. The mounting of the piece was most excellent and Mr. Goossens conducted with his usual care, the orchestra working admirably under his bâton, and the other operas announced for performance this week are "Maritana" to-morrow; "The Jewess" (Thursday, first time in Glasgow); "Carmen" (Friday) and "The Bohemian Girl" (Saturday); a morning performance will be given of "Robert the Devil" on Saturday also.

———

MANCHESTER, November 20.

Bizet's orchestral suite "Roma" was the most important feature of Sir Charles Hallé's fourth concert (November 15). How far the work is intended as a record of the impressions received by the composer while holding the "Prix de Rome," we are unable to say: certainly the local colouring which the title would lead us to look for is not very obvious save in the two last movements. This may or may not be a disadvantage; and it is more to the point to say that the suite as a whole is an exceedingly fine one. From the beautiful opening passage for the horns, so deliciously relieved by the violins in alt, the attention never flags until we are reminded by the conclusion of the allegro vivacissimo, that yet another delightful experience has added itself to our store of musical memories. No doubt there is a certain immaturity perceptible in it; the genius which created it seems to have been still in the plastic stage, and in spite of much that is original we do not feel the pervading influence of a personality that has struck out definite paths for itself. Also it may be said that the various movements are not all of equal merit. But these and other criticisms which might suggest themselves to the carping mind become insignificant when we consider the beauty of the work as a whole, and the great skill with which the composer has delineated and developed his inspirations. It need only be added that the performance of the suite was magnificent and fully repaid Sir Charles for the great care he had bestowed upon its rehearsal. The remaining orchestral selections were Sterndale Bennett's "Parisina" overture, Liszt's Fourth "Rhapsodie Hongroise," the ever-welcome overture to "Ruy Blas," and Wagner's orchestral study "Traüme,' a work whose murmur-

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice.

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

Without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings

FOR

VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,

ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,

Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

Vins de Champagne

ARTHUR ROEDERER, Reims.

MAISON FONDEE 1876

SODEN MINERAL PASTILLES.

TRADE MARK

FOR THROAT IRRITATION COUGHS & COLDS.

SPECIALLY RECOMMENDED BY

"9, HARLEY STREET,

"I regard them as extremely valuable in obstinate Catarrhal affections of the Throat."

MORELL MACKENZIE, M.D.

[illegible]

Sir Morell Mackenzie

FOR BRONCHITIS ASTHMA & CATARRHAL AFFECTIONS.

WHOSE TESTIMONIAL IS WITH EACH BOX

The Advertiser who wants to spend £1. or the Advertiser who is willing to invest £1,000, will find every information in SELL'S WORLD'S PRESS for

ADVERTISERS

Year 1888, which includes the Advertisers' Reference Book, 1,350 pages, 2s. The ABC Directory, and Philosophy of Advertising, post free, price Sixpence. ADDRESS:—"SELL, LONDON."

ESTABLISHED THREE QUARTERS OF A CENTURY.

A. S. MALLETT, ALLEN & CO.,

CONTRACTORS TO

HER MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE,

Type Music Printers,

LITHOGRAPHERS, &c.

PORTRAITS.	WINDOW BILLS.	STATIONERY.
(Speciality.)	BOOKS.	SHOW CARDS
POSTERS.	CATALOGUES	PLANS, &c., &c.

68 & 70, WARDOUR ST., LONDON, W.

TELEGRAPHIC ADDRESS—"ASMAL, LONDON."

CASSON'S PATENT

Organ-Building System.

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c., See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The Late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A
Mr. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—

CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN COMPANY, LIMITED,

DENBIGH.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Stndio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO.

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had but little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me, or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

To Mr. Ainsworth. BURNHAM-HORNER, F.R. Hist. S.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and Organ student who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music or organ arrangement, with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is, as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours, I. B. THORNTON,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly, HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.
To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilitate the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number), each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS,

BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

"THE SHAVER'S DELIGHT."

12 MONTHS LUXURY FOR 12 PENCE

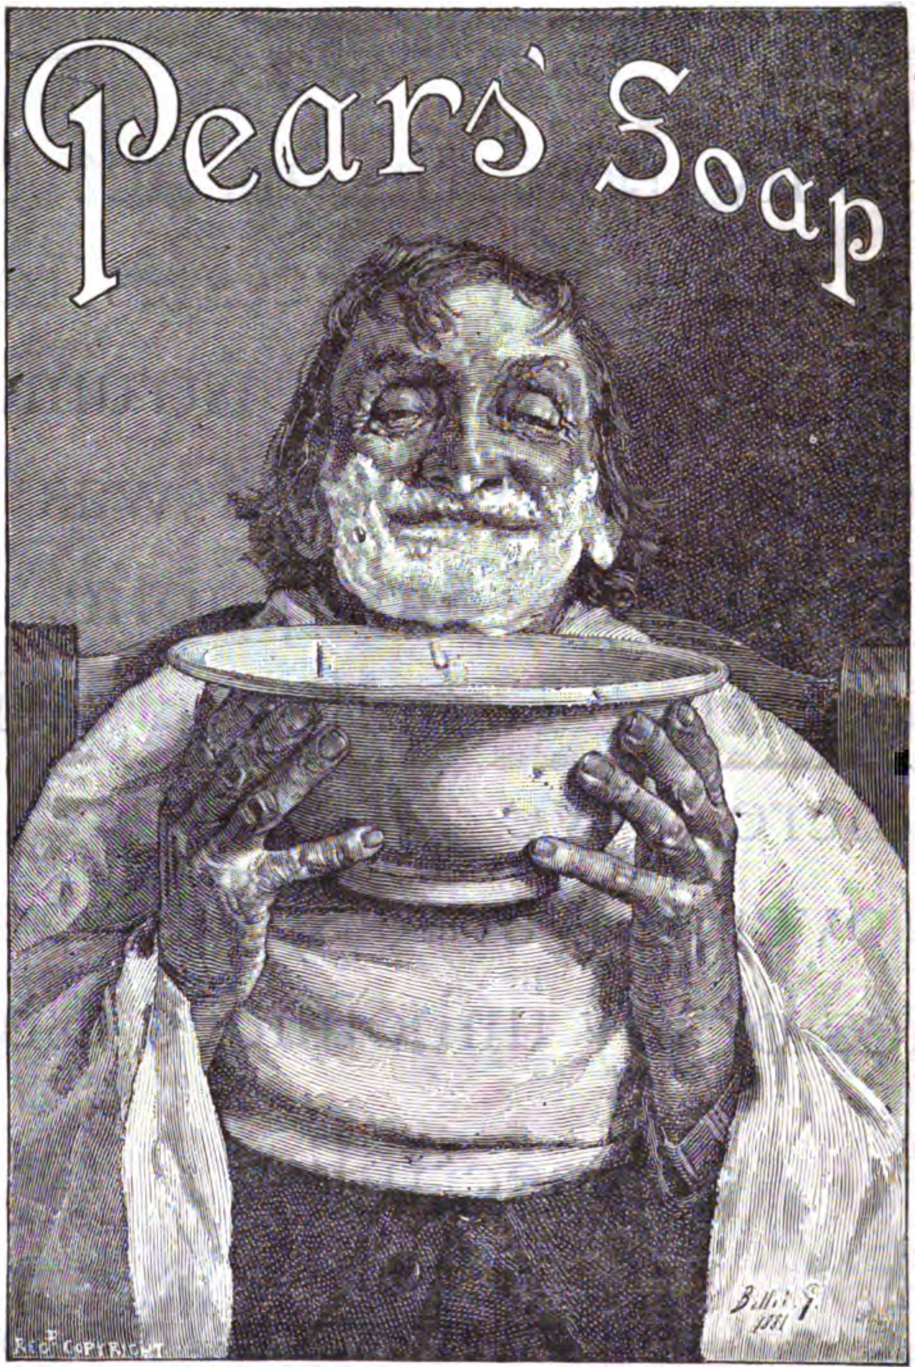
[illegible]

[illegible] Mallett, Allen & Co., London, and Published by WILLIAM PEARCE, at 138a, Strand, W.C., to which address all communications must be sent.



"THE SHAVER'S DELIGHT."

12 MONTHS LUXURY FOR 12 PENCE

(a shilling shaving stick lasts a year.)

Printed by A. S. Mallett, Allen & Co., London, and Published by William Pearce, at 138a, Strand, W.C., to which address all communications must be sent.

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, or £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the Manager of THE MUSICAL WORLD, 138a, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, Hamilton Terrace,
St. John's Wood, N. W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.,
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, Finsbury Park Villas,
Green Lanes, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI,
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor).
12, Westbourne Park Terrace, W.

Mr. F. St. JOHN LACY,
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist (Baritone),
Fitzroy Mansion, Charlotte Street,
Fitzroy Square, W.

Mr. H. MARTIN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor).
Address—7, Wimpole Street,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mr. LOUIS N. PARKER, A.R.A.M.
(Composer, Conductor, Lecturer),
Sherborne, Dorset.

Mr. G. W. L. MARSHALL-HALL
Gives lessons in Composition and Dramatic Singing,
151, Rucklidge Avenue,
Willesden Junction, N.W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts)
Bosworth House, Husband's Bosworth,
Rugby.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o Nolan & Jackson.

Miss JULIA JONES (Soprano) begs that all communications respecting Oratorios, Concerts, &c., will be addressed to 4, St. Thomas's Road, Finsbury Park, London, N.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorio),
41, Welbeck Street,
Cavendish Square, W

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, Portsdown Road, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concerts and Oratorio),
29, Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio)
2, Sedgmoor Villas,
Private Lessons given. Camberwell, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
(Ballad, Oratorio, etc.)
31, Monmouth Road,
Bayswater, London, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, Norfolk Square, Hyde Park, W.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts),
56, Duchess Road,
Edgbaston, Birmingham.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 36, Albion Place, Hyde Park W.; or to Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul,
26, Old Bond Street, W.,
Or, 270, Elgin Avenue, Maida Vale, W.

Mr. IVER McKAY
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concerts),
1, Milner Square, London, N.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Old Trafford, Manchester.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio),
28, Devonshire Street, Islington, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
Gothic Lodge,
Lordship Lane, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, St. Stephen's Afenue,
Shepherd's Bush, W

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
40, Stanley Gardens, Belsize Park, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. Roosevelt Schuyler,
55, Beaver St., New York City.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, Upper Mount Street, Dublin.

Mr. RAPHAEL GORDON
(Operas, Concerts, and At Homes).
c/o Signor Odoardo Barri,
60, Margaret Street, W.,
Or, 97, Talbot Road, Bayswater, W.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. Vert, Esq., 6, Cork Street.

Mr. FREDERICK KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, Canfield Gardens, S. Hampstead.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
Egremont, Croxted Road,
West Dulwich, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert),
63, Stafford Place,
Buckingham Gate, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, etc.),
30, Lancaster Road, Notting Hill, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorios, and Operas),
70, Portsdown Road, Maida Vale, W.

Harp.

Mr. W. T. BARKER
(Concerts, At Homes, Receptions),
49, Ebury Street, Belgravia, S.W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22a, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified." 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
"Yelbana," 99, Anerley Road,
Pupils visited and received. Anerley, S.E.

Miss FREDA MARSDEN,
Solo Violinist (Concerts, At Homes, etc.),
Address. c/o Mr. Charles Woolhouse,
81, Regent Street,
London, W.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul (sole agent),
26, Old Bond Street, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella (Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST,

Telegraphic Address: "Healey's Agency," London

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Madame WILSON-OSMAN (A.R.A.M.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert), (Soprano)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss FLORENCE EMERSON (Soprano)
(Concerts, Oratorio, At Homes, Etc.)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey.
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss FALCONAR (Contralto),
(Oratorio Concerts Etc.)
24, Oppidans Rd, Primrose Hill, N.W
or Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor),
28, Belsize Road, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W

Mr. HENRY PHILLIPS (Tenor),
Sole agent, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio)
Business Manager, W, B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone),
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W, B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Herr WALDEMAR MEYER (Solo Vlnst)
Concerts, At Homes, Etc.)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street,
Regent Street, W

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Tenterden Street, W.—NEXT FORTNIGHTLY CONCERT, THIS DAY, at 8.
For Syllabus of Local Examinations, 1889, and other information, apply to the Secretary.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, Kensington Gore, London.
Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.
President—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director—SIR GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL.D.
NEXT COLLEGE CONCERT will be on WEDNESDAY, DEC. 5.
FIFTEEN OPEN FREE SCHOLARSHIPS will be competed for in March. Last day for receiving applications January 20.
Forms of application and particulars may be obtained of the Registrar, Mr. GEORGE WATSON, at the College. CHARLES MORLEY, Hon. Sec.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and EXAMINATION, etc., and the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music Instituted 1872.
President, THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.
The next HALF-YEARLY EXAMINATIONS FOR THE DIPLOMAS OF L. MUS. T.C.L. and A. MUS. T.C.L., the positions of Associate-Pianist, Organ-Associate, Associate-Vocalist, Special Certificates for Harmony and other separate subjects, will be held during the week commencing January 7, 1889. These Examinations are open to all Candidates, whether Students of the College or not, and without restriction as to age, sex, or creed. LAST DAY OF ENTRY, DECEMBER 15.
Regulations and all particulars can be obtained from the Secretary, Trinity College, London, W. By order of the Academical Board.
Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C. PATRON—THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.
Established to advance the cause of Church Music and the truest interests of its Professors.
Members of the Church of England and Ireland and the Episcopal Church of Scotland are eligible for Election.
Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates), 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members), 15s, per annum; Life Subscription, 5 guineas.
Prospectus and further particulars may be abtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

MUSIC SCHOOL.—CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL for Girls (Limited), 6, Upper Baker Street, Regent's Park.—Head Music Mistress, Miss Macirone, late Professor of Royal Academy of Music. Fee, three guineas per term. Children from 8 to 13 allowed to begin and continue for two guineas per term. Pupils not in the School may pay an entrance fee of one guinea. The fees payable in advance. Pupils wishing to join Violin Class under Mdlle. Gabrielle Vaillant, to send in their names to Miss Macirone. F. J. HOLLAND, Chairman.

ANGLO-FRENCH SCHOOL, FOR DAUGHTERS OF GENTLEMEN, Granville House, Hornsey Rise, London, N.—Miss NASH and Madlle. RAYMOND, assisted by a staff of efficient Professors and Teachers, receive Pupils to board and educate. Special attention given to Music. Healthy and pleasant locality. Terms moderate. References kindly permitted to parents of pupils and to the Editor of "The Musical World."

SOUTHSEA. St. Bees' College for Girls and Kindergarten, conducted by Miss Nelson, M.C.P., healthily and pleasantly situated, with good playground, offers every educational advantage with the comforts of a home, and careful supervision. Pupils prepared for all higher examinations. Special attention to Music and preparation for the R.A.M. Class-singing, languages, physiology, drawing, dancing, swimming, musical drill, combined with a thorough English education. Terms, moderate and inclusive.

SIGNOR NICOLA COVIELLO, the popular Cornet Soloist (Royal Italian Opera, Promenade Concerts, &c.), now booking Concert Engagements (London, suburbs, and provinces). Immensely successful at Promenade Concerts with "The Lost Chord," Levy's "Whirlwind," &c.—3, Sudbourne Road, Brixton.

MR. JOHN GREIG, M.A., Mus. Bac., F.C.O. (passed Exam. for Mus. Doc. Oxon., 1887), teaches HARMONY, COUNTERPOINT, and FUGUE by CORRESPONDENCE. Coached successfully for final Mus. Bac. Oxon., 1886.—Address, 7, Scotland Street, Edinburgh.

WANTED some Young Lady Instrumentalists (strings only) for small Ladies' Orchestra. Apply by letter first, Mr. PEARCE, 27, Alexandra Road, N.W.

COMPANION or GOVERNESS.—Engagement required, thorough English, arithmetic, music, singing, painting (oil and water), French (abroad), elementary Latin and German. Salary proportionate to duties. Would travel.—"M.," Branstone Lodge, Richmond, Surrey.

TYROLEAN VOCALIST. (SPECIALITY!)

MR. JOSEPH HOFFMANN

(Own Compositions, Author of "De Schweizer Girl," "De Organ Girl," "De Schneiderline," "Mine Flute," "The Disappointed Lover," etc., etc.)

38, MILDMAY ROAD, N.

"THE MEISTER."

The Quarterly Journal of London Branch of the Wagner Society.

Annual Subscription (post free), 4s.
Payable to Mr. J. Cyriax, 33, Douglas Road, N.

No. IV., completing Vol. I., now ready, price 1s.

CONTENTS.

"Parsifal," Part III, (conclusion).
"Art and Revolution," by Richard Wagner, Part III. (conclusion).
Two Studies of the Overture to the "FLYING DUTCHMAN."
Notes, &c.

GEO. REDWAY. LONDON.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

PARENTS seeking ENGLISH or FOREIGN SCHOOLS, TUTORS, or GOVERNESSES for their children, are invited to write fully to

J. F. MOON, M.C.P.,
85, NEWMAN STREET, LONDON, W.,

Who will forward prospectuses and every requisite information, free of charge.
Particulars required are: age and sex of pupil, locality preferred (if any), and about what terms will be paid. Housekeepers, Nursery Governesses, and Companions are also recommended. Hours 11 till 3. Saturdays closed.

SPECIAL TINNED TUBES.

FOR
TUBULAR PNEUMATIC ORGANS.

MELLOWES & CO., LEAD PIPE WORKS, SHEFFIELD

DRURY LANE.—AUGUSTUS HARRIS,
Lessee and Manager.
EVERY EVENING, at 7.30, concluding at 11.15.
A New Grand Spectacular Drama entitled,
THE ARMADA, a Romance of 1588.
By HENRY HAMILTON and AUGUSTUS HARRIS.
Box-office open daily from ten till six.

THE ARMADA at DRURY LANE.—Winifred Emery, Edith Bruce, Kate James, Ada Neilson, and Maud Milton; Leonard Boyne, Luigi Lablache, Edward Gardiner, Victor Stevens, A. Beaumont, Henry Loraine, S. Dawson, Mervin Dallas, Stanislaus Calhaem, B. Robbins, F. Dobel, Basil West, W. Uridge, F. Harrison, U. Winter, Fitz-Davis, W. S. Parkes, H. Denvil, F. Thomas, F. Collins, and Harry Nicholls.

THE ARMADA.—The unanimous praise bestowed upon this historical drama and grand spectacle by the leading Press of the country is nightly endorsed by the crowded audience which fills Drury Lane Theatre at each performance.

THE ARMADA EXHIBITION.—Inaugurated by the Earl of Winchilsea and Nottingham.—Unanimously pronounced by the press to be the most interesting and varied historical exhibition now open. Open to all persons booking seats, from eleven a.m. till five p.m. Open to all persons occupying places entitling them to access to the saloon from seven p.m. till eleven p.m., including the 3s. balcony.

LAST WEEKS of the ARMADA, in consequence of the unprecedented preparations for the Grand Christmas Pantomime, "The Babes in the Wood.

BABES IN THE WOOD, BOXING NIGHT, Dec. 26.—Box-office now open.

JODRELL THEATRE, Queen-street, W.C. Sole Lessee, Mrs. Churchill-Jodrell. Manager, Colonel H. J. Sargent.—Every Evening at 8.45, a new modern comedy, in three acts (founded on the French of Barriere and Capendu), entitled THE ALDERMAN, written by James Mortimer. Preceded by, at eight, a new comedy in one act, entitled A WHITE LIE, by the same author. Supported by Messrs. H. Ashley, W. H. Pennington, Mark Kinghorne, E. M. Robson, Sidney Harcourt, Bindloss, J. Tresahar, and Royce Carlton; Mesdames Gabrielle Goldney, Edmund Phelps, Lilan Millward, Annie Whyte, Nita Wynn, and Nellie Lingard. The comedy produced under the personal direction of the author and M. Pau Berton. Places may now be secured at the Box-office of the theatre and all Libraries. No fees of any description.

Special Notices—Continued.

EYRE ARMS ASSEMBLY ROOMS, St. John's Wood.—Thursday, December 13, at 8.—Miss Amy Florence, Miss Fanny Joyce, Miss Theodora Wilson, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. William Nicholl, Mr. Charles Copland, and Herr Raynar Grevillius. Signor Nicola Coviello (Cornet), Herr von Czeke (Violin), Madame Sophie Tueski (Pianoforte), and Mr. Charles L. Carson (Recitation). Tickets, 5s., 3s. 2s. and 1s., at Basil Tree's, St. James's Hall; Chappell's, New Bond Street; Rogers and Son, Circus Road, N.W.; and Boone's Library, Swiss Cottage, N.W.

MR. CLAUDE TREVOR'S MATINÉE, STEINWAY HALL, December 10, at 3.30.—Artists: Mesdames Alphonsine Douilly, Beata Frances, Helen D'Alton. Violin, Miss Marie Douglas, Mr. Claude Trevor, and Signor Mhanes. Conductors, Mrs. Watson, Mr. Trevor. Floral decorations by Gerard, 84, Regent Street.

MISS EUGENIE CAVERHILL-SHIELS' EVENING CONCERT, at STEINWAY HALL, Lower Seymour Street, Portman Square, on Tuesday, December 4, commencing at 8 o'clock.—Vocalists: Miss Eleanor Rees, Miss Ethel Winn, Miss Emmie Low, Mr. Claud Ravenhill, Mr. Gabeir-Thorp. Violin, Mr. Herbert W. Hunt. Pianoforte, Miss Eugénie Caverhilll Shiels. Recitations, Mrs. Albert Barker. Conductors, Mr. William Carter and Mr. G. F. Huntley. Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., and 1s., to be obtained at Steinway Hall; from Messrs. Cramer and Co., 145, High Street, Notting Hill; Miss Shaw, Cumberland House, Fellows Road, Hampstead, N.W., and Miss E. Cavershill-Shiels, 2, Campden Hill Gardens, Kensington, W.

MISS DORA BARNARD'S MORNING CONCERT will be given at STEINWAY HALL, on Thursday, December 6, at 3 o'clock. Artists: Miss Bayley, Miss Dora Barnard, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Frank May. Solo Violin, Miss Cecilia Gates; Solo Violoncello, Mr. C. H. Allen Gill; Clarionet, Mr. Beddome; Mustel Organ, Mr. King Hall; Pianoforte, Mr. Septimus Webbe. Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., 1s., can be obtained at Messrs. Chappell and Co., New Bond Street; Messrs. Agate and Co., Regent Street, and Church Street, Stoke Newington; Messrs. Keith, Prowse and Co., Cheapside; and Miss Dora Barnard, 9, Lordship Park, Stoke Newington, N. The programme will include Mozart's Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello Trio in E; Osborne's Introduction and Rondo for clarionet "Villageoise" by Guilmont, for Mustel Organ, and Godefroid's Instrumental Quintet "Priere des Bardes."

MR. and MRS. ARTHUR C. HADEN'S VOCAL and VIOLIN RECITAL, at 45, RUTLAND GATE, S.W. (by kind permission of Mrs. Robb, Monday, December 3, at 3 o'clock. Tickets, 10s. 6d., to be obtained of Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond Street, W.; or from Mr. Arthur C. Haden, 429, Fulham Road, S.W.

HERR VON CZEKE'S VOCAL AND INSTRUMENTAL CONCERT, at Addison Hall, Addison Road, W., on Saturday, December 8, at Three o'clock, assisted by eminent artists. Vocalists: Misses Zukie, Flower, Petherick and Paton; Messrs. Connery and Koch. Pianoforte, Miss Kosminsky. Violoncello, Mr. Langey. Violin, Herr von Czeke. Conductor, Miss Mathilde Wolff and Mr. Laurence. Tickets, 5s., 3s., 2s. and 1s., at the Addison Hall Office, and of Herr von Czeke, 51, Edith Road, West Kensington.

WESTMINSTER ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.—Fourth Season, The Eleventh Grand ORCHESTRAL CONCERT will take place at WESTMINSTER TOWN HALL, on Wednesday, December 5 next. Vocalists, Madame Clara Samuell and Mr. Gretton. Tickets and all particulars of the Secretary, ALGERNON S. ROSE, Esq., 28, Page Street, Westminster.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1888.

⁂ MSS. and Letters intended for publication must be addressed to "The Editor." Rejected MSS. cannot be returned unless accompanied by stamped directed envelope.

⁂ Advertisements and business communications generally should be addressed to the Manager (Mr. WILLIAM PEARCE), whose receipt—with the sole exception of the Proprietor's—for amounts due since August 1, 1888, will alone be recognised. Advertising, Publishing, and General Offices: 138*a*, Strand, London.

Facts and Comments.

Mr. Cowen recently wrote from Melbourne:—"Wagner is the great attraction here. We do a second Wagner concert to-morrow." The Paris correspondent of the "Daily Telegraph" has on three occasions lately testified to the enthusiasm with which numerous Wagner selections at the concerts of M. Lamoureux and M. Edouard Colonne have been received—this, too, by a public hostile to Wagner's personality; and in America "the music of the future" has "caught on" in the most unmistakable manner, as everyone knows.

Popularity, of course, is not a test of merit. "The few are wise; the many otherwise"; but we are disposed to make an exception in the case of Wagner. For many years his works were spoken of as only to be understood, and consequently appreciated, by those in whom a taste for "scientific" combinations and abstruse philosophical theories had usurped the love for simplicity and charm which every healthy mind is supposed to feel. And this view appeared to be borne out by the fact that the Bayreuth master's disciples consisted at first only of a few musical transcendentalists and enthusiasts, forming but a small band even among the "inner circle" of those regarded as the leaders of European taste. Yet, strange to say, wherever Wagner's music has been played, the most demonstrative appreciation has emanated, not from the few, but from the many. Les extrêmes se touchent, we know; but an appeal to history will also tell us that there must be something in that which appeals alike to to the past masters of the craft and to the "most naive layman."

We understand that, owing to unexpected circumstances, M. Guilmant, the distinguished French organist and composer, is necessarily compelled to postpone his organ recital at the Parish Church, Hampstead, advertised for December 11, until February next. Particulars will be duly announced.

It seems that there is but one professional lady violoncellist in America—Mrs. Laura Webster. Hail, Columbia!

Relic-hunters may be interested to hear that the desk used by Karl Wilhelm whilst composing "Die Wacht am Rhein," was recently sold by auction at Krefeld for 379 marks. According to the direction contained in the composer's will, the money was distributed amongst the poor of the town.

Turin would scarcely seem to be an earthly paradise for instrumentalists. The principal musical organisation there has lately been advertising for four executants—players, namely, on the bombardon, the horn, the ophecleide, and the trombone. The manipulator of the bombardon will receive the princely salary of 515 francs 30 cent.; the horn-player and ophicleide are reckoned a little more important, receiving each 543 francs; while the trombone-player is actually to receive 899 francs 50 cent. It is to be hoped that these tempting salaries will not allure our leading orchestral performers from London. But why this curious exactitude in the matter of centimes?

It would be idle to hope that so young a country as New Zealand should yet possess a music of its own, since that is the fruit of ages of civilisation. This, however, in no degree argues a lack of musical vitality, and it is pleasant to know there is a very widely-spread interest in the art, which is taking a practical form in the institution of a musical festival which is to be held at Wellington during the last week in November or the first in December. The programme is excellently varied, including the "Elijah," "Israel in Egypt," "The Golden Legend," Beethoven's Symphony in C, and Pianoforte Concerto in G major, Cowen's Orchestral Suite "The Language of Flowers," and a comprehensive selection from Wagner's works. The chorus will consist of 160 voices, and the orchestra will number about 50. The musical direction will be in the hands of Mr. Robert Parker, organist of the Cathedral, and conductor of the Wellington Harmonic Society. English amateurs will await with sympathy and interest the issue of so commendable an undertaking.

The "Scottish Art Review," a publication which, although it has reached its seventh issue only, has already established for itself a high position in the class to which it belongs, contains, in its December number, three articles of interest to musicians; "Wagner and Liszt," by "An Old Wagnerian"; "The Place of Poetry in the Music-Drama," by James Oliphant, and Nottebohm's "Beethoveniana," by Mrs. Young The scheme for the ensuing year promises to be not less attractive; for the purely Scottish reader will be provided essays on Scottish art, history, and literature, while amongst the general articles will be included a series upon living English men of letters, one upon those of America, one upon those of foreign novelists; further we are promised a series of "études" upon Wagner, Brahms, and other great composers.

We regret to learn of the death of Signor Cesare Lisei, the London manager of the firm of Messrs. P. Ricordi & Co., which took place on his fortieth birthday, November 24. The funeral took place at the Catholic Cemetary, Kensal Green, on Thursday last, when a number of the deceased gentleman's friends, including many well known in the musical world, attended.

The recently circulated report of the destitution and mental derangement of Ilma de Murska is, we are assured, without foundation. It is true that Madame de Murska has been very ill and in straitened circumstances; but the rumour has been exaggerated. We are indeed glad to learn that this is the case. Madame de Murska will probably return at once to her native country, as the American climate acts very injuriously upon her.

Herr von Czeke, the Hungarian violinist, will give a concert in the new Addison Hall on Saturday, December 8, at three o'clock. An interesting programme is promised.

The Fraser Quintett will give a concert at the Portman Rooms on the 6th inst., in aid of the Railway Guards' Benevolent Fund.

Has the pianoforte recital had its day? It certainly fails to attract as once it did, except when the soloist is of the very first rank, and not always even then, as was proved by the lamentably small attendance at Von Bülow's recitals last May. This has, not altogether without reason, been ascribed to monotony both in the character of the entertainment and the repertoires of the pianists, and we have had so called "pianoforte recitals" at which violinists, 'cellists, and vocalists, sometimes singly and sometimes together, have "assisted." Miss Marian Bateman and Miss Esther Mowbray have hit upon yet another idea. On the evening of Friday, December 7, at Steinway Hall, they will give a performance, the instrumental portion of which will be entirely devoted to pianoforte duets, or works for two pianofortes. At this moment, when there is an outcry at the neglect of the public performance of such compositions, the enterprise of these young ladies should receive practical approbation in the shape of a large audience. The programme, an attractive one, is made up of works by Mozart, Schumann, Gade, Dvórák, Volkmann, Brahms, &c., and vocal solos by Miss Farmer.

"HERE IS MY END."

Much has been written concerning the words wherein the great men of various ages have taken their farewell of life; and the imaginative are not easily wearied in the discovery of some allegorical significance in those recorded phrases. It is needless to point out the danger that waits on such attempts; to a just mind dogmatic interpretations are impossible, since their correctness is incapable of proof. But, so long as dogmatism of the more rigid sort is avoided, it is neither uninteresting nor profitless to think, with fitting reverence, of those latest whispers from lips now set in eternal silence. The most spontaneous and unconsidered as well as the most deliberate, utterance of a great artist, is charged with an over-meaning of which he himself was unaware. That

"He builded better than he knew

is true of many others than the great Tuscan; and it is scarcely unnatural that in the final sayings of such an one we should listen for something more than the expression of physical weariness, or that we should expect those sayings to gather up the sum of human and artistic experience, of hopes unfulfilled, or of things awaited for. And, in this temper, it is not difficult to see in the last recorded utterance of Schubert the expression of a feeling more than personal, the mordant bitterness of an experience too wide to be individual.

How often has the story of the death-scene of that "marvellous boy" been told! He lived unrecognised and unheeded by the world for which he had toiled so well, and he died in the poverty and neglect reserved carefully for that world's noblest children. Fancying that he was in a strange room, he implored his brother to take him back to the familiar chamber. It was in vain to assure him that he was in his own bed. "No, no," he said, "that is not true; Beethoven is not here." Where his king was not, could be no home for him. And when the doctor afterwards strove to re-assure him, he gave no immediate answer; but turning his face to the wall, said only, with piteous emphasis, "Here, here is my end."

Recent events in Vienna have served to recall this scene to memory. What might, with fitting irony, be called the march of civilisation has made it necessary to remove the remains of Beethoven and Schubert from their resting place at Währing to the Central Cemetery at Vienna, where they were re-interred with pomp and show.

It is idle to quarrel with necessity, but the proceeding is one which perforce suggests reflections of an accusing kind. They are not new, for the story itself has been told of well-nigh every man whose mission it was to lift his fellows to a higher plane of living. But, old as they are, it is inevitable that they should recur when we are fronted with the spectacle of a nation honouring thus tardily the ashes of those for whom in life it cared not at all. We are something too fond of that Scythian custom, which, when the head of a house had died, decked the corpse in his most gorgeous raiment, and set it at the banquet-table, where homage was offered to sightless eyes, and praises chanted to ears that listened to other strains. The modern method is perhaps wiser. We wait until time has assured us that our homage is not misplaced. Sixty years of darkness and corruption have left but little for our honouring, but at least we may be declared guiltless of hasty and ill-based admiration.

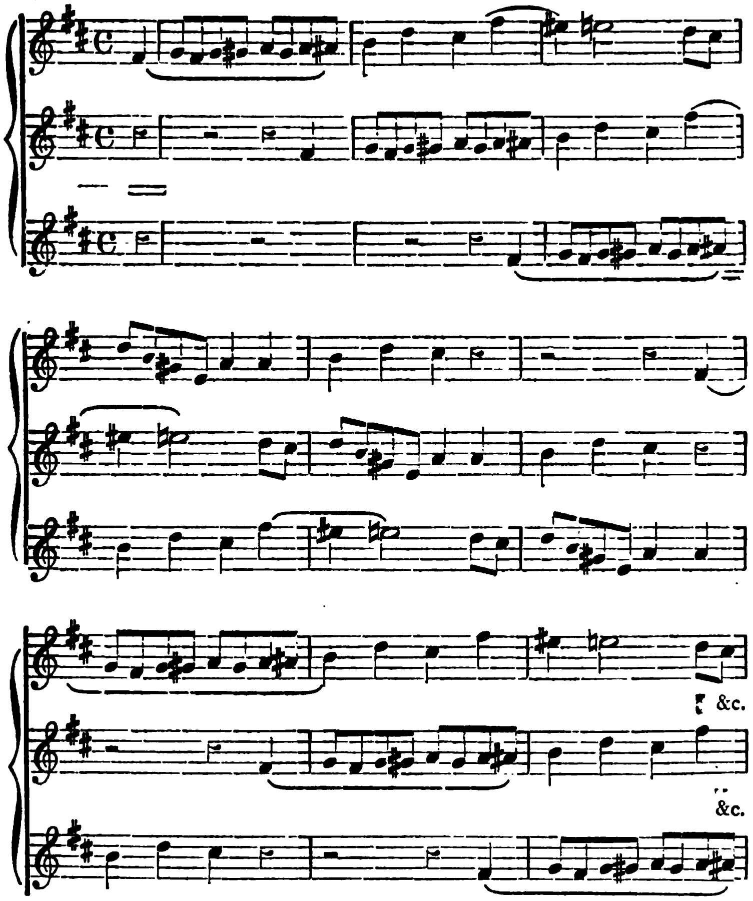
"Here is my end." The words are not Schubert's alone. They are pronounced in accents of varying pathos, scorn, or indignant entreaty, by many a noble soul of that great army of Art's martyrs, who from beneath the altar bear eternal witness to the world's cruelty. The name only need be changed to tell Schubert's story concerning many another. They, too, have poured out their souls like water for the thirsty lips of their fellows; some unregarded, all unthanked. They gave the best they had—song and passionate love which had the power to make of the wilderness an ordered garden, flowerful and fair, asking for nothing in return save a little bread of the spirits, sympathy and love. But we, with an economy somewhat too straitened, say "Not so; break your hearts in singing for us; give us your all; to sing for us is sufficient recompense; yet it may be, when the grave has held you for fifty years, we will give your ashes a gorgeous monument; not bread, but a stone."

It would be madness to hope that this temper of cruel apathy is to be shaken off from our spirits at once. It has become too habitual for that, but, if we here repeat once more the oft-told story, it is that signs are not wanting that in some degree the world's heart is softer, its ear more sensitive than of old. The carping sneer, the Michal-like derision, are still in our nature; but there is indeed a readier inclination to give indulgent hearing to strange sayings than was exhibited by our fathers. How far this is genuine, or how far it is only the result of that shallow enthusiasm which too often abounds, it would be useless to enquire. But at least, it affords some excuse to those who would fain believe in the progress of their fellows, rather than sit down in the despair of others who assert that a great artist, by reason of his greatness, can never hope to win sympathy in his own lifetime. The propounder of a new gospel must, it is true, be often content with its enunciation, leaving others to witness its acceptance; but in this utter pessimism there surely seems some touch of blasphemy against the highest things of life. The heart of humanity is not so hard as we sometimes think, forgetting that others than artists are fellows with sorrow. There is more than one Sisyphus; and this apathy we decry is too often the result of bitterness and care, which may well deafen the ear to the pleadings of another. The lessons of such stories as this of Schubert, then, should be the need of individual sympathy and tolerance in every sphere; the broad passion of humanity, rather than the proud isolation of genius; a quicker receptiveness, rather than a blind faith in the past. To undo the wrongs of bygone times is not ours, but ours it may be to so live that such wrongs shall be done no more.

S.R.T.

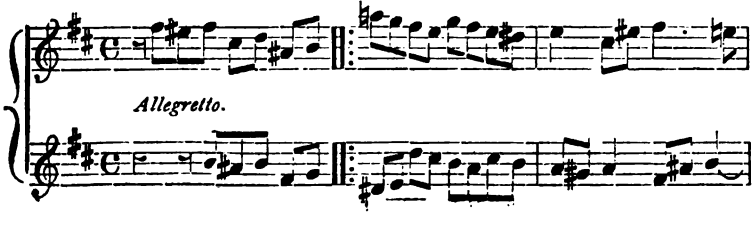
CANON BY MENDELSSOHN.

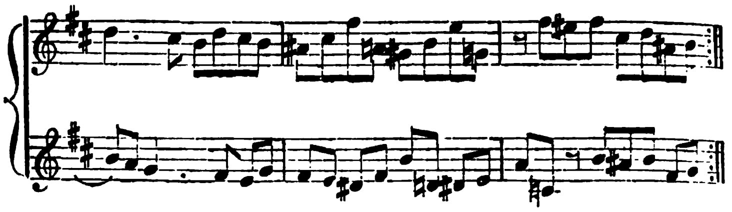
The following canon by Mendelssohn is given in facsimile in the volume of his Letters to Ignaz and Charlotte Moscheles, just published.



It is dated "London, July 11, 1842," and is inscribed "Zu freundliche Erinnerung beim Durchblicken dieses Buches."

Canons have always been favourite toys with the great composers, Beethoven often slips one into his letters to his most familiar friends, generally with a pun or a turn on their names, such as "O, Tobias Dominus Haslinger," or "Schwencke, ohne Schwanken" or "Hoffmann! sei ja kein Hofmann! Mendelssohn too was fond of Canons. The lovely Part-song, "The Lark," is well-known to all singers and choral societies. The second movement of the String Quintet in A was originally a Minuet with a Trio in double canon, but was changed at Paris in 1831 for the present Andante, as a "Nachraf" or Elegy on his friend Edward Rietz. Two exist by him, written for two violins. One was inscribed in Mr. Parry's Concert-book, at the Birmingham Festival, 1846.





The other, still more ingenious, answering at one quaver's distance only, and therefore altering the accent throughout,—was written for Joachim, and is printed by Sir George Grove in his memoir of the composer in his "Dictionary of Music and Musicians," vol. ii. p. 300.

Dr. Bridge, in the appendix to his "Primer of Double Counterpoint," has given a beauty in E flat for two violas, the first marked "Sir G. Smart," the second "F.M.B." It ends with these words—"You see in this manner it goes to eternity, and perhaps you would like to have the duet somewhat shorter." Sir George received the Canon July 11, 1831; and it must therefore have been sent off somewhere on the road between Rome and Milan, on Mendelssohn's return from his Italian journey.

PROVINCIAL.

Leeds, November 26, 1888.

The second of the subscription concerts took place on the 14th, when Sir Charles Hallé and his "augmented" band prescribed an excellent programme of which Schumann's first Symphony in B flat was the chief item. It was finely played, as was Beethoven's "Egmont" overture. In Mendelssohn's pianoforte Concerto in G minor Sir Charles Hallé shewed that years do not rob him of that crisp, delicate, correct execution which has always been his characteristic. As far as the soloist was concerned, it was really an admirable performance, but the orchestral accompaniment lacked neatness. Wagner was well represented in the programme, which included not only two purely orchestral items, the 'Parsifal" prelude and the "Walkurenritt" (which was encored), but two vocal solos from "Die Meistersinger," Hans Sachs' Monologue, "Wahn, Wahn," and Fogner's address, "Das Schöne Fest," which were finely declaimed by Mr. Henschel, who also gave Beethoven's amusing song, "Mit Mädelen sich vertragen," which he has recently unearthed. Some of Schubert's "Rosamunde" music, and Gounod's "Polyeucte" ballet music formed an agreeable relief to the more serious portions of the programme.

On the 21st the Philharmonic Society gave a fine performance of "Elijah" to a crowded audience. Miss Annie Marriott, Madame Patey, Messrs. Lloyd and Santley were the principals, and when we say that all were in good voice, Mr. Santley being especially vigorous, it will be understood that their share in the performance lacked little or nothing. The choruses were capitally sung, and Mr. Alfred Broughton conducted with care and ability, though we cannot but agree with a local paper in thinking that his reading of the passage, "Onward came the Lord," in the chorus "Behold, God the Lord," was open to objection.

The second of Mr. Edgar Haddock's "musical evenings," on the 12th, introduced Madame Essipoff, who has been too long absent from us, as pianist, in an interesting programme of compositions for violin and pianoforte.

On the 27th Mr. Fred Dawson, a youthful local pianist of no small technical ability gave the first of a series of concerts, in which he was assisted by the gifted violinist Mr. John Dunn, who gave a highly artistic rendering of Spohr's Concerto, and other solos by Paganini and Sarasate.

Manchester, November 26.

A highly interesting pianoforte recital was given by Sir Charles Hallé on Monday, November 19, in connection with the Gentlemen's Concerts. The programme, though short, was agreeably varied; in fact, we may say en passant that one of the most admirable features of these recitals is the wide range of composers whom Sir Charles lays under contribution. On the present occasion he chiefly confined himself to works which were, no doubt, familiar to most of his audience. But, for our own part, we shall be content to listen over and over again to so poetical an interpretation of the "Moonlight" Sonata as the one we heard on Monday last; its wonderful beauty was never more impressed upon us, and the moderation which Sir Charles showed in his playing of it would have proved an instructive lesson to some of the bravura virtuosi of to day. Weber's Sonata in C (Op. 24), though appearing much less frequently in the concert-room, is full of charm, and certainly ranks amongst its composer's finest pianoforte works. In the well-known rondo Sir Charle's fingers got the better of his discretion, and the great rate at which he took it slightly interfered with the clearness of the phrasing. The best work of Moscheles is perhaps represented by his pianoforte studies; and three of these, which were included in the programme, were very acceptable, though they showed no great originality, save from the technical point of view. The remainder of the programme consisted of Mozart's "Rondo alla Turca," two preludes and fugues by Bach, and Grieg's "Aus dem Volksleben."

The orchestral selections at Sir Charles Hallé's fifth concert (November 22) were not very important. The only novelty was Mackenzie's ballad, "La Belle dame Sans Merci," a musical translation of Keats' well-known little poem. The subject is one which readily lends itself to dramatic treatment, and the composer has availed himself to a considerable degree of the opportunities presented, though our impression from a first hearing is that he has approached, rather than actually grasped, the weird hopelessness of the original. Still, the ballad undoubtedly indicates that the composer is not only a scholarly musician, but also that he is possessed of true poetic instinct; and it will, we believe, rank amongst the works which give ground for hoping that a bright day for music is beginning to dawn in England. Haydn's Symphony in B flat (No. 12 of the Salaman set), Brahms's academical Festival Overture—less worthy of Brahms than of the occasion for which it was composed—and Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" were the remaining orchestral items. The central figure of the concert was Madame Essipoff. In Chopin's E minor concerto this lady soon made it evident that her great reputation as a pianist is one which has been conscientiously earned, and which she is quite able to sustain. There are few pianists who can rival her technique; in every branch she seems to have obtained an equally complete mastery. One hardly knows whether most to admire the feathery lightness with which she played the Chopinesque fioriture, the perfect evenness of her scale passages, or the masculine vigour of her octave playing; and it must be added that her precision is something remarkable. But, so far as we could tell on Thursday last, Madame Essipoff has not grasped the art, or perhaps has not received the gift, of playing a melody perfectly; and this is due to a defect which was the only serious one we noticed. She is not an inspired player—in popular language she plays from the "head," rather than from the "heart"—and though the taste she displays is both original and refined, we miss that subtle sympathy, or whatever it may be called, which quickens the pulse as we listen, and directs the attention to the beauty of the composition rather than to the skill of the artist. In the second half of the concert Madame Essipoff gave a well-known prelude to a still better known waltz by Chopin, and a minuet by Paderewski, the latter an indifferent production for so skilful a composer. In response to a very enthusiastic encore she played, most beautifully, Tausig's arrangement of a Capriccio by Scarlatti. Mr. Max Heinrich was the vocalist. His voice is deficient in its upper register, and this we fear will prove a stumbling block which unthinking hearers will not get over. If this be so it will be a great pity, for Mr. Heinrich is much too thorough an artist to deserve indifference from the public. His singing of the "Star Song," from "Tannhauser," was nearly the most enjoyable feature of a very enjoyable concert.

[We thank your Manchester reader for his correction of a lapsus memoriae in your last issue.]

BIRMINGHAM, November 26.

The principal musical event of the past week has been Mr. and Madame Oscar Pollack's annual concert, which was well attended. Madame Pollack sang a charming MS. song entitled "Schlummerlied," composed for her by the emiment musician and littérateur, Mr. Ferdinand Praeger. The "Birmingham Daily Gazette," in an article on the concert, says:—"Madame Pollack may be justly proud of having received from Herr Praeger an offering so expressive as the Slumber Song, and Herr Praeger may be congratulated upon having so conscientious an artist as Madame Pollack to introduce his song to public notice. The composition itself is beautiful, and, like all that Madame Pollack sets before the audience, it was beautifully and sympathetically rendered."

Madame Agnes Miller's second popular chamber concert came off with great éclat, and was the best yet attended. The Shinner Ladies' String Quartet again won golden opinions by their superb ensemble playing, their purity of tone and artistic finish. Madame Miller played for her solo Mendelssohn's "Variations Sérieuses" with wonderful breadth of tone and technical mastery. A brilliant performance of Schumann's pianoforte and string trio, Op. 80, brought the concert to a conclusion.

GLASGOW, Tuesday, November 27, 1888.

At the eighth Concert of the series (of the thirty-fifth season) given by the Abstainers' Union the following artists appeared:—Mesdames May Hallam, Marie Graham, Annie Emslie (in lieu of Miss Marian Burton, indisposed), Messrs. J. Dalgety Henderson, and W. Bradford Mons. Jules Guitton (solo violinist), and Mr. F. W. Bridgman, accompanist. Miss May Hallam, who made her first appearance in Glasgow achieved marked success in her songs, "Esmeralda" (Levey), "The Banks of Loch Lomond," "Rent Free" (H. Klein), and "When the heart is young" (Buck). Miss Annie Emslie at the last moment made a favourable impression with Wallace's "Alas those Chimes" ("Maritana"), "The Flowers of the Forest" and Gluck's "Che Faro." Mr. Henderson confirmed the favourable opinion formed when he was last here (two years since), by his expressive renderings of "The Soldier's Tear" (A. Lee), Reichart's "Thou art so near," and "The Brier Bush." The other artists named were not less successful in performances which call for no detailed comment.

The Carl Rosa Opera opened a short series of performances on the 22nd inst., with Halévy's "La Juive;" "Carmen," "The Bohemian Girl," and "Esmeralda" have also been produced. The excellence of such artists as Madame Georgina Burns, Miss Fanny Moody, Miss Amanda Fabris, Mr. McGuckin and Mr. Crotty, need not be here insisted on, as other of your provincial correspondents have already borne testimony in your columns to the performances of this Company.

ENNISKILLEN, November, 1888.

The musical doings here for the season have been inaugurated by the reopening of the organ in the Parish Church by Mr. Arnold. The organ has been enlarged and improved at the sole cost of a parishioner, the Rev. J. B. Frith, J.P. Subsequently the Church Choir gave, by request, a repetition of Mrs. Robinson's Cantata, "God is Love." Selections from the "Messiah" will be given during Advent in the form of an Oratorio Service. The Harvest Thanksgiving Services just held (fully choral) included Stainer's fine Cathedral Service in A; Ebdon's Service in C, and Barnby's Anthem, "O Lord how manifold." The Philharmonic Society propose to give Promenade Concerts early in the new year under the conductorship of Mr. Arnold. The other concerts pending being the Foot Hall Smoking Concert, and Mr. Polson's Concert for the poor. Mr. Collisson, Mus. Bac., also intends to give a concert here shortly. Mr. Arnold's talented son (referred to before in these columns as the youngest Cathedral Organist in the three kingdoms) is engaged as solo pianist during the coming season of the Dublin Popular Concerts. This young gentleman appeared in Limerick quite recently, leading the orchestra as first violin, besides playing excellent solos.

LEAMINGTON, November 24, 1888.

The Philharmonic Society gave a performance of "Elijah" on Thursday last. The principals were Miss Julia Jones, Miss Allersby, Mr. Morgan, and Mr. Warlock. The burden of the evening fell on Mr. Warlock, and his fine bass voice was heard to great advantage. The clear soprano voice of Miss Jones did full justice to all the numbers allotted to her. The choruses were admirably rendered, and the band efficient.

BRISTOL, November 26, 1888.

The Colston Hall was crowded with an appreciative audience on Saturday last. The vocalists were Miss Julia Jones and Dr. Roxburgh. Miss Jones, who met with a hearty reception, was in good form and sang well, her clear youthful voice aided by a distinct enunciation making every word audible in the most remote part of the building. Mr. Howard Reynolds, the eminent cornet player, proved a most acceptable acquisition.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Advertisements of Concerts, &c., will be received up to 4 p.m. on Thursdays, if addressed to the Manager, 138a, Strand, W.C. "The Musical World" is the recognised medium for advertising London, Suburban, and Provincial Concerts, and has no other address whatever for the reception of communications.

Knighthood of the Legion of Honour, 1878. Knight Commander of Villa Viraga, 1883. Gold Medals at the Principal International Exhibitions.

JOHN BRINSMEAD & SONS'

PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS RETURNED FROM HIRE, may be purchased at GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

JOHN BRINSMEAD AND SONS, Pianoforte Manufacturers, 18, 20, 22, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W. Lists free.

THE "EMPRESS" PIANOS

ARE the best value in the market. Workmanship cannot be surpassed. Touch and tone unequalled. Professors and others are invited to inspect these beautiful instruments. Prices from 20 guineas. Ten years' guarantee with every instrument. Messrs. Chudleigh Bros., 140, Strand, London.

DRESSMAKING MADE EASY for 2/6, by using the SYMMETRICAL DRESS PATTERN. Lessons in Dress Cutting till perfect, £2 2s. inclusive.—Write, Miss HEMMENS, 19, Queen Street, Bryanston Square, London, W.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE, and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be of the greatest efficacy in every form of disease. Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.

Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT,
78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 3, or by letter

---

THE RIGHT HON. LORD KNUTSFORD, G.C.M.G. Engravings from the original Portrait of Lord Knutsford, by J. F. Acret, are now being issued. Steel Line Engraving, by Harold Bourne. Artist's proof, £1 1s., Enfield House Studio, Windmill Hill, Hampstead.

Musical World Portraits.

DECEMBER 8 HERR A. POLLITZER.

Publishers' Announcements.

NEW PART SONGS FOR S.A.T.B.
By W. W. PEARSON.

'Tis Morn! (Edwin Oxenford)	3d.
The Oyster Dredgers	2d.
Welcome, young Spring	2d.
Off to Sea (Edward Oxenford)	4d.
HUMOROUS PART SONGS.
Three Doughtie Men (30th thousand)	3d.
Three Children Sliding (6th thousand)	3d.
A Ryghte Merrie Geste	4d.
The Snow-white Doe (just published)	4d.
Ben Bowlegs (Edward Oxenford)	3d.
The Carrion Crow	3d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO., 1, Berners Street, W.

NEW LEGITIMATE TEACHING METHOD.

GILHAM'S KEYBOARD INSTRUCTOR.

Patented throughout the World. Price 2/6. Post Free 2/9.

HOW TO PLAY THE
PIANO, ORGAN, OR HARMONIUM,
In the shortest time and easiest and simplest manner.

WALTER SCOTT, 24, WARWICK LANE, LONDON.
AND FELLING, NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, ENGLAND.

Publishers Announcements—continued.

LOVE'S GOLDEN DREAM. Lindsay Lennox.

LOVE'S GOLDEN DREAM (Lindsay Lennox).—This charming song will be SUNG by Mr. SIMS REEVES, during the coming season. 2s. net. "A charming new waltz-song, sure to become popular, and will most probably become a rage this season. It is one of those pretty little morsels of which one does not tire in a hurry."—Northamptonshire Guardian.—London Music Publishing Company (Limited). 54, Great Marlborough-street, W.

£10 10s. PIANOS. PIANOFORTES (High-class) for the Million, £10 10s. Full compas, 7 octaves. Warranted. THE LONDON MUSIC PUBLISHING COMPANY (Limited) Originators of the "Ten Guinea" Pianoforte.
54, Great Marlborough Street, W.

VIOLIN TUTOR.

PRACTICAL VIOLIN SCHOOL, for Home Students. A Practical Book of Instructions and Exercises in Violin Playing, for the use of Amateurs, Self-learners, Teachers and others. By J. M. FLEMING. 1 vol., demy 4to, cloth gilt, price 7s. 6d.; also in monthly parts, 7d. "Can be heartily recommended to students who wish to lay a solid foundation for good and artistic playing."—Musical Standard.

London: L. UPCOTT GILL, 170, Strand, W.C.

TO COMPOSERS,—RIDGEWAY and CO., Music Publishers 10, Argyll Street, W. undertake the REVISING. PRINTING, and PUBLISHING of Musical Works upon exceptionally low terms. The finest work in the trade. Estimates upon receipt of MSS. IMPORTANT.—Composers' Works included in Catalogue and introduced without extra charge.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of
A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE,

By T. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 27, Harley Street, W.

THE VOICE.

A Complete Explanation of the Throat and its Functions in Breathing and in the Production of Voice, will be found in

"ELOCUTION, VOICE, & GESTURE."

By RUPERT GARRY.

Remedies for Clearing and Strengthening the Voice, and for the Cure of Hoarseness, Sore Throat, and other derangements of the Breathing Tubes.

"The section on the Voice is well considered and trustworthy, based as is on the writings of authorities on the question of the Hygiene of the Vocal Organs."—STAGE.

"The Book contains many valuable hints in regard to Voice and Gesture."—VOICE (New York).

POST FREE, 1s. 2d.

London: Bemrose, 23, Old Bailey, E.C., and of the Author, at his residence, 49, Torrington Square, W C.

IN SIX GRADES,
Price Two Shillings each.
Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc, and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:

A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,
By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, bu we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWANN SONNENSCHEIN and CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE;
And all Book and Music Sellers.

The Organ World.

SOME SUGGESTED MODIFICATIONS OF DAY'S HARMONY, TO MEET THE VARIOUS OBJECTIONS RAISED AGAINST HIS THEORY.

PAPER READ BY DR. C. W. PEARCE, F.C.O., BEORE THE COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.—June 26.

The well-known Treatise on Harmony, by Alfred Day, M.D., has from time to time been prominently brought under the notice of the musical world, chiefly, perhaps, on account of its having been adopted as one of the Text Books for musical examinations in the University of Cambridge and elsewhere.

The high position thus given to it has evoked much criticism from many other eminent theorists, and rightly so; for it is manifest that a book compulsorily placed before students, and invested by high authority with an importance denied to all other books dealing with the same subject, must necessarily have a great influence upon the musical thought, feeling, and education of the age. Much credit is due, therefore, to any institution, educational or otherwise, which affords the means of discussing a matter which may fairly be described as one of the burning musical questions of the age. This is not the first time, nor, let us hope, will it be the last, that the College of Organists has opened its hospitable doors for such a purpose; but as, unfortunately, it so happens that the proceedings of this College are but, comparatively, little known to the great bulk of its members, it will be more convenient to me to refer to the better known and more widely circulated proceedings of the Musical Association for the history of what may perhaps in future years be known as the "Day Controversy."

Day's Harmony has been discussed by the Musical Association at least four times—first by Mr. Charles E. Stephens, in his paper entitled "The Fallacies of Dr. Day's Theory of Harmony, with a brief outline of the Elements of a New System," read during the first Session, 1875; secondly, by Mr. Gerard F. Cobb, M.A., whose paper on "Certain Principles of Musical Exposition, considered educationally, and with special reference to current systems of Musical Theory," occupied the attention of the Association for two consecutive meetings of the Tenth Session, 1883-4; thirdly, by Mr. Ebenezer Prout, B.A., whose paper on "Some suggested Modifications of Day's Theory of Harmony," read as recently as the fifth meeting of the present (Fourteenth) Session, led to a fourth paper on "Some further Modifications of the same book, suggested from an educational point of view," which paper it is my privilege to present to you in a rather more amplified form this evening.

The first two of these papers, together with an article by Mr. James Lecky, "On Modern Systems of Harmony," which appeared in the Musical Times of February 1, 1880, may be fairly said to contain the various objections which have been raised from time to time against Day's book. On the other hand, we have in its favour the strong and earnest approval of Sir George Macfarren, exhibited in all his writings, and the more or less qualified support of Mr. Ebenezer Prout (in the paper just referred to), of Dr. C. Hubert Parry (in his article "Day" in Sir George Grove's Dictionary), of Dr. Bridge (in the discussion which followed the reading of Mr. Prout's paper on March 5 last), and even of Mr. Lecky, who concludes his Musical Times article by acknowledging that "Day appears to advantage beside many of his rival theorists." These are, perhaps, the most important of the opinions which have been expressed on both sides, and we will now proceed to consider the objection

Day's book n
(I.) The
ider
(II.) The so-c (III.) The
and natu
obse

The first
Charles Steph man deserve teachers of h
what can o educationally

I cannot in the "Music
the force of h

"By selec
as notes in th
position of thi
13th from th different pitch
three different me, utterly co
further, it als pitches for the which is the t
these is disall
of which is co
note for which

"Moreove governing pow of the 11th on of the subdomi triad is part o gives all three

"So profo vocates of this that, to carry always to be t
for the time b to the harmon

"I here su system in the

"And I now in here appear in in accordance

"The true figures; in the tonic harmony

collapse for that on the dominant. I do not think that anyone will require auricular test of these differences. The figures alone are quite conclusive."

Here then is one of the evils arising from the practice of building up a system of harmony from the so-called products of the natural harmonic series resulting from three arbitrarily-selected roots in a key. In the discussion which followed my Musical Association paper of June 4, Mr. Prout ingeniously suggested the rejection of all harmonies above the 9th of any root, and obtaining the necessary notes of Day's chromatic scale from an intermingling of roots, similar to that suggested by Day himself for the derivation of the chords of the augmented 6th. As a last resource, as a forlorn hope of squaring the circle, of untying the Gordian knot, or of reconciling physics with psychics, this suggestion is, as I said just now, ingenious, but is it educationally sound, is it true? These are questions I hope to answer later on. For the present I content myself with asking, is it not easier for the uninitiated? is it not in truer accord with those principles of æsthetic taste and selection which have guided all real artist-minds from the earliest ages, to reject at once as useless and misleading all attempts to build up a system of modern music upon purely natural and entirely mathematical phenomena? But more of this presently.

(To be continued.)

THE ORGAN ANCIENT AND MODERN.

"The American Musician" has the following:—

We have just received from Belgium a very interesting work treating of the history, theory and practice of the king of instruments. It is entitled "L'Orgue Ancien et Moderne," and is the fruit of the investigation and experience of a learned ecclesiastic, the Canon H. V. Couwenbergh, of the order of Prémontré, organist of the Abbey of Averbode, Belgium.

"The Organ Ancient and Modern" is a magnificent volume of 360 pages in 8vo, published by Joseph Van In, Lierre, Belgium. The text is concise and comprehensive, and profusely illustrated.

The author declares that the aim of his work is to acquaint the reader with the organ, its origin and its successive developments from the rudimentary form to its present state of almost absolute perfection. He eloquently and truthfully avers that this knowledge, added to that of its mechanical construction, is indispensable to every organist who wishes to render his instrument a docile and faithful interpreter of his ideas. "Without this knowledge the organist will always find his instrument a rebellious servant, struggling against his will, enervating his genius and paralysing his inspiration.

The work is divided into two parts. The first part treats of the humble origin and subsequent evolution of the organ, with an historical account of the discoveries, improvements, etc., which have gradually and almost insensibly enriched the art of organmaking from its birth to the present day; biographical notes of the important organmakers of ancient and modern times with a list of their most remarkable constructions, as well as descriptions of the largest instruments built during the nineteenth century conclude this part. The second part is devoted to a succinct though exhaustive description of the numerous component parts of the modern organ, its mechanical construction and the different systems and improvements introduced by inventors and makers in all parts of the world. Canon Couwenberg concludes the introduction to his work with the following words, which resume the insuperable difficulties antagonizing the researches of the most earnest investigators of the origin and genealogy of the organ. "Even its name is an enigma, its birth is enveloped in darkness, its very existence is a history which begins with a fable." The uggab mentioned in Gen. IV. 21, was the precursor of the syrinx of seven pipes which was perfected until it became the maschrokitha of the Babylonians, an instrument consisting of a box on which were placed the seven pipes, each having a separate valve operated by a key (Kircher). The machrokihta may be considered as the primitive germ of the organ, though the Chinese Tscheng, which perhaps preceded it, is supposed to have consisted of a series of twenty or twenty-five bamboo pipes, which probably contained free tongues similar to the actual free reed pipes. The hydraulic organ is also a primitive type of the organ, and seems to have been invented by Destibus (about 124 B. C.) and perfected by Heron the mechanic, his pupil. Various authors speak of the hydraulic organ which was by the Romans introduced into the countries they conquered; many writers suppose that the pneumatic existed before the hydraulic organ, while organs played by steam are referred to in the chronicles of the first centuries of the Christian Era.

In the eighth century we find the first authentic account of the organ, and from that time on it gradually came into general use, though it was only in the thirteenth century that attempts were made to improve it. Pedals were added in the fifteenth century, though some historians affirm that they were known as early as the twelfth century. From these data we may conclude with Canon Couwenbergh that the organ of the fifteenth century is the first complete prototype of the monster orchestral organ of the present day.

Canon Couwenbergh assigns a special chapter to "The Organ in America." He specifies wherein our organmakers differ from European systems, and concludes in the following terms: "The art of organ building in America is developing considerably from day to day. To all the improvements of European art are added the numerous inventions due to American genius in the domain of the mechanical art. Several organs in America not only rival the best products of European manufacturers, but even surpass them in more than one respect."

The second part of Canon Couwenbergh's work contains, as we have said before, a description of the component parts of the organ; the different systems of bellows, wind chests, pneumatic actions and electrical appliances are accurately and comprehensively explained and compared; a detailed account is given of the various pipes, their composition, form, special qualities and application; a chapter on the diapasons, or the relative measurements of the different sets of flue pipes and reeds is very instructive and considers the matter from a scientific stand-point; the concluding chapter of the work contains excellent advice as to the choice of stops required for organs of different dimensions.

The Appendix is a history of organ playing from its first exponents to the eminent virtuosi of the present day.

From the summary of "L'Orgue Ancien et Moderne" which we have given, it will be readily seen that Canon Couwenbergh's work is interesting, instructive and comprehensive; it is the work of a man at once learned, experienced, and impartial, of a man whose self-imposed task is a labour of love, carried to the end with the enthusiasm of a sincere devotee of the art divine. We congratulate the worthy Canon Couwenbergh on the splendid result of his labours, and hope he will continue his good work in the cause of his beloved art.

ACOUSTICAL VASES.

In the course of an article in "Chamber's Journal" occur the following words;—

"These vessels (anciently) termed ècheia, were found greatly to strengthen the speaker's voice, especially when the dialogue was intoned; and here we have probably the philosophy of the origin and practice of intoning our church services. Each écheion selected a certain note, like the pipe of an organ, and vibrating in unison with it, responded and took up the sound by sympathetic vibration there by increasing its intensity. Any hollow air-space will accommodate itself more or less in the same manner, a fact that is generally now taken advantage of in our theatres and public buildings, by leaving open spaces beneath the seats and floors, between the walls and above the ceiling.

It is of very recent years that the study of acoustics has received the attention due to it, and that such rude expedients as these sonorous vessels have given way before the steady advance of science. In the year 1850, an open plastered drain about a foot square in section was discovered beneath the chancel floor of St. Peter's Mancroft Norwich, running under the stalls on either side; and built into both sides of the drains, about three feet apart were earthenware jars, resting on their sides, with their open ends projecting two or three inches into the drain. They measured about nine inches in height, six inches across their ends, and eight inches at their middle part, and their insides were glazed. Ten years later the same arrangement was found at another church in the same city, St. Peter's Mountergate, with the slight difference that the jars had handles; and, instead of being laid opposite to each other as in the former case, they alternated on either side the drain. A similar discovery of acoustic pottery was also made at Fountains Abbey.

When the new Opera House was built at Turin in the middle of last century, all the architects, mathematicians, and men learned in harmonies and the philosophy of sound were consulted as to the form and situation of these harmonic vases; but no clear idea either of their construction or principle was arrived at. Trial vases were, however, placed in the house, as well as in others in various parts of Italy, but without the effects expected from them of augmenting, the tone of the human voice, and of the instruments to which they were tuned. In a small private theatre where it was hoped to propagate and clarify the sound of choral music by their means, the result was a resonance, like the sound produced by sea-shells when placed against the ear many times multiplied, and growing like the sound of a gong, a powerful and perpetual hum; so that whenever anything was said or sung, it was necessary for the time to remove the écheia.

This shows that great care and not a little knowledge is necessary in applying the principles of acoustics, another instance in confirmation of which was published in the 'Philosophical Magazine' for 1830. "A church had been erected in Sheffield in which the preacher was altogether unheard, however great his exertion. Various unsuccessful expedients were tried, until the incumbent, happily in this case a scientific man, had a large parabolic reflector of light wood constructed and so suspended that the pulpit was in the centre of the parabola. By such an arrangement the rays of sound issuing from the focus of the mirror would be thrown forward as a parallel beam. The consequence of this was that every word uttered in the pulpit could be distinctly heard throughout the church; indeed, the speaker was more distinctly heard at the far end than at the intermediate portions, because this parallel beam was directly cast upon those in the distant gallery. Unfortunately the reflector acted in both directions. If anyone whispered in that distant gallery, the sound of the whisper was gathered into the focus of the reflector."

In the case of badly placed organs the experiments here detailed might be worthy of consideration; but it would be well—on the principle that "prevention is better than cure"—to apply "the great care and necessary knowledge" primarily in the proper construction of churches, and next in the selection of good position for organs.

THE ANTHEM.

Mr. F. N. Adams observes in the Cleveland (U. S) Musical Art Journal.

The Anthem in the "English Cathedral Service" has attracted the special attention not only of musicians, but the lovers of music generally. Its direct purport has long been acknowledged universally as of great importance in the Liturgy, and hence has become to be regarded as a prominent part of the "Cathedral Service." The word "anthem" in itself, owes its origin by some authors to ant-hymn, a species of antiphony. H. Ch. Koch ("Musik Kalisches Lexicon") and Mattheson ("Ehrenpforte") state that "anthem" formerly expressed the same meaning as "antiphony." Byrd, Tallis, and others composed anthems in the style of the old Motet, Purcell, etc. introduced solo anthems. Handel composed anthems in a style influenced by the motet and German sacred cantata. Under the influence of the motet style Handel constructed the anthem choruses in a most artistic manner as regards development, the structure being of large dimensions; the words were taken from the Bible. From the cantata the anthem received its solo features and orchestral accompaniments. The words for anthems are usually selected from Scripture, but the Prayer Book has been drawn upon for this purposes."

SPECIFICATIONS.

Cardiff.—Specification of organ erected in St. Margaret's Church, Roath, by Messrs. Bevington and Sons of London :

Great Organ.—Open Diapason, Claribel Sub-Bass, Bell Diapason, Principal, Mixture.

Swell Organ.—Double Diapason, Open Diapason, Gamba Voix Celeste, Lieblich Gedact, Principal, Cornopean.

Choir Organ.—Echo Dulciana, Suabe Flute, Piccolo Harmonique, Clarinet.

Pedal Organ.—Open Diapason, Bourdon.

Couplers.—Swell to Great, Swell to Pedal, Great to Pedal, 6 Double-Action Composition Pedals.

RECITAL NEWS.

St. Peter's Brockley.—Re-opening of the Organ. Recitals were given by Mr. E. H. Turpin, and Dr. H. Walmsley Little, F.C.O. (Organist of Holy Trinity Church, Tulse Hill). The following was Dr. Little's programme: Fantasia in C, Berthold Tours; Andante in F, H. Smart; Air with Variations, Freyer; Berceuse, Gounod; Allegro Vivace, Morandi; Allegretto, B Minor, Grand Chœur in E flat, Guilmant.

Haverhill, Suffolk.—An organ recital was given by Mr. George Leake, F.C.O., in the Town Hall, on Nov. 16, 1888. Programme: Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Adagio in E (Fantasia Sonata), Rheinberger; Festival March in D, Smart; Sonata in D minor, No. 6, Mendelssohn; Allegretto in C, Moderato in F, Niels Gade; Concerto in B flat, Handel; Air in G (by request), Batiste; Marché Cortége (Iréne), Counod.

Parish Church, Selkirk.—On Nov. 24, 1888, Mr. J. E. Senior, F.C.O., L.R.A.M., (Organist of Govan Parish Church, Glasgow), gave a recital upon the new organ erected by Messrs. Brindley and Foster, of Sheffield. Programme: Organ Sonata in D major, No. 5, Mendelssohn; Romanza in E flat, Haydn; Pastorale in G major, G. Meskel; Fugue in D minor, Bach; Song, "Ave Maria," Schubert; Carillons de Dunkerque, T. Carter; Prier et Berceuse, Grand Chœur Triomphal (in A major), Guilmant; Andante in G, Batiste; March of the Crusaders, Liszt.

SPECIFICATION OF ORGAN.

(Constructed on Brindley's Patent Tubular Pneumonic System.)

Great Organ (Compass CC to A).—Large Open Diapason, metal, 8 ft. 58 pipes; Claribella, wood, 8 ft, 58 pipes; Dolce, metal, 8 ft., 58 pipes; Principal, metal, 4 ft., 58 pipes; Fifteenth, metal, 2 ft., 58 pipes; Harmonic Flute, metal, 4 ft., 52 pipes.

Swell Organ (Compass CC to A).—Lieblich Bourdon, wood and metal, 16 ft., 58 pipes; Open Diapason, metal, 8 ft., 58 pipes; Lieblich Gedact, wood and metal, 8 ft., 58 pipes; Viole d' Orchestre, metal, 8 ft., 58 pipes; Viole Célestes, metal, 8 ft., 46 pipes; Gemshorn, metal, 4 ft., 58 pipes; Echo Dulciana Cornet, 5 ranks, metal, various, 290 pipes, Trumpet, metal, 8 ft., 58 pipes.

Pedal Organ (Compass CCC to F).—Open Diapason, wood, 16 ft., 42 pipes; Bourdon, wood, 16 ft., tone, 42 pipes; Principal Bass, wood, 8 ft., 30 pipes; Flute Bass, wood, 8 ft., 30 pipes.

Couplers.—Swell to Great Unison; Swell to Great Sub-Octave; Swell Octave on itself; Great to Pedal; Swell to Pedal; Tremulant; 3 Composition Pedals to Great and 3 to Swell.

Reversing Pedal working Great to Pedal and Tremulant.

Holy Trinity Church, Halstead, Essex.—Mr, George Leake, F.C.O., gave an organ and vocal recital on the organ in Holy Trinity Church, on Sunday, November 23, 1888. Programme;—Fugue in D minor (the Giant), Bach; Adagio in B flat (from a quartet), Spohr; song, "The Chorister," Sullivan; Organ Concerto, No. 4 in F, Handel; song, "The King of Love," Counod; Offertoire in F., Salome; Song, "Oh rest in the Lord," Mendelssohn; March in B flat, Silas.

St. Paul's, West Brixton.—On November 20, Mr. W. T. Best opened the new organ, playing the following pieces: Andante G. Major, H. Lind; Prelude and Fugue, C minor, Bach; Andante, F. major, S. Wesley; Sonata, No. 5, D minor, Merkel; Cantilène Pastorale, J. Grison; Capriccio (B flat), Capocci. The organ is by Lewis and Co., and has two manuals and pedal.

St. Michael's, Devonport.—The organ at St. Michael's Church, Stoke, Devonport, was re-opened on November 20, after reconstruction by Messrs, Hele and Co., of Plymouth. The amount spent upon the organ has been about £210, and there still remains a choir organ to be subscribed for, preparation having been made for its insertion when the funds allow of it. The present specification of the organ shows:—

GREAT ORGAN.—Open diapason (large scale), flauto traverso, stop bass, gamba, dulciana, harmonic flute, principal, mixture (two ranks), trumpet, clarionet (ten stops).

SWELL ORGAN.—Double diapason, open diapason, lieblich gedact, salicional (grooved bass), voix celeste, gemshorn, mixture (two ranks), cornopean, oboe (nine stops).

PEDAL ORGAN.—Open diapason, and bourdon (lowest octave used in double capacity for pedal and swell).

COUPLERS.—Swell to great, swell to pedal, great to pedal, and swell octave.

Total number of pipes, 1,132.'

The proceedings commenced with a short service, and a recital in the afternoon. The church was fairly well filled. The recital was given by Mr. Ernest Wood, organist and precentor-elect of St. Paul's Cathedral, Melbourne. The programme consisted of seven selections, which, by the skill of the player, admirably brought out the fine qualities of the organ. They consisted of Overture in E minor Morandi; Cantilene Pastorale, Salome; Mendelssohn's Sonata No. 4, Andante, Batiste; Fugue, Bach; Allegretto, Guilmant; and a Triumphal March by Lemmens. There was a second service at which there was a large congregation and a full choir. Mr. Ernest Wood again presided at the organ, and Mr. T. Gibbons, the organist, conducted the choir, who sang admirably Calkin's Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in B flat. At the conclusion of the sermon there was another recital on the organ by Mr. Ernest Wood, interspersed with some vocal music. After a prelude and fugue by Mendelssohn, Miss Hodges sang "Angels ever bright and fair," (Handel). Mr. Trounson gave the air, "Waft her, Angels," and the recitative which precedes it. The quartet from Sterndale Bennett's "Woman of Samaria," "God is a Spirit," was sung by Miss Lewin, Mrs. Jolly, Mr. Trounson, and Mr. Smith. Mrs. Jolly afterwards sang Costa's sacred song, "I dreamt I was in Heaven," and the vocal programme concluded with the duet and chorus, "I Waited for the Lord," Mendelssohn; the duet being sung by Miss Lewin and Mrs. Jolly. Mr. Ernest Wood speaks in terms of the highest commendation of Messrs. Hele's work upon the organ. It is beautifully voiced throughout, and the whole work is blended with the new in a remarkably successful manner. The organ is highly spoken of by critical persons.

CHURCH OF ST. NICHOLAS COLE-ABBEY, November 20th.—Mr. T. Cowtan Edwards, A.C.O. (Organist and Choirmaster, St. Mary's, Hoxton). Programme: Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Adagio, Schubert: Andante grazioso, Mozart; Andante (Nachstücke) No. 4, Schumann; Sonata in D minor, Merkel.

TRINITY CHURCH, S. MARYLEBONE.—Mr. R. Steggall gave an Organ Recital on behalf of the Organ Fund, on Thursday Evening, November 15. Programme. Sonata, No 3, Mendelssohn; Communion in F, Grison; Andante in A flat, W. S. Hoyte; Grand Fugue in A minor, Bach; Andante in G, R. Steggall; Offertoire in F minor, Batiste.

EDINBURGH.—A recital was given by Mr. William Blakely, Mus. Bac., at the United Presbyterian Church, Morningside, on Nov. 20. Programme;—March on a Theme of Handel, Guilmant; Aria, "'Si lo' Sento," Spohr; Fantasia, "O Sanctissima," Lux's; Cantilene, Mailly; Fugue in G minor, Bach; Festival March, "Edinburgh," Oakeley; "Angelic Voices," No. 1, Batiste; Overture, "William Tell," Rossini.

CRAWSHAWBOOTH.—Mr. J. E. W. Lord gave a recital at the Westleyan Chapel on Nov. 14. Programme:—Marche Religieuse pour l'orgue, Gounod; Invocation and Capriccio, Capocci; Toccato in G, Dubois; Pastorale from the 1st Organ Sonata, Guilmant; "Convey me to some peaceful shore," Handel; March in E flat, Wély; Transcription for the Organ, "Home Sweet Home," Buck; Postlude in D, Smart.

SOUTHPORT.—A Recital was given by Mr. W. T. Best, at Houghton Street Baptist Chapel, on November 14. Programme: Offertoire in a major, Chauvet; Andante in F major, Wesley; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Air with Variations, Auber; Organ Sonata' No. 5, in D minor, Merkel; Capriccio, Capocci; Marcia Eroica and Finale, Best.

PARISH CHURCH, BECKENHAM.—Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" will be sung, accompanied by a full orchestra, at a special service on Wednesday evening, the 5th inst., at 8 o'clock. Mr. G. J. Hall, F.C.O., will conduct, and Dr. Warwick Jordan will preside at the organ.

NOTES.

That distinguished French organist, M. Guilmant, announces a recital on the 11th prox. at Hampstead parish church, where there is a fine organ by Willis. M. Guilmant will play Mendelssohn's sixth sonata, a canon of Schumann, and a selection from his own compositions.

A contemporary notes that "Mr. W. J. Barnwell, organist at East Hendred, Berkshire, has recently laid before the French Academy of Sciences a series of cyclometric figures, which, he states, contain the solution of the long-sought-for squaring of the circle. The formula is being at present studied by the Mathematical Commission. Within the last two years a number of plans have been offered: that of Mr. Barnwell appears to find most favour."

Mr. Henry Willis is building an organ for the stage of the new Lyric Theatre. It will be a large and powerful instrument. The keyboards placed in the orchestra will be connected with the organ by pneumatic action.

By an odd printer's error, Bach's "Toccata in F" is assigned to Balfe as the composer in a recent programme.

In December, 1872, the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's Cathedral increased the choir by the election of seven assistant vicars choral, viz.: Messrs. Frost and Stilliard (altos); Kenningham and Guy (tenors); and Horscroft, Beale, and Kempton (basses). Of these Mr. Guy resigned his appointment before entering on his duties; Messrs. Stilliard and Beale left in 1877; and Mr. Horscroft in 1885. There are only three now remaining of those elected in 1872, and all have recently received a substantial recognition of their faithful services from the Dean and Chapter. The two eldest (Messrs. Kempton and Kenningham) have been created Vicars Choral in the place of Sir John Stainer and the late Mr. Winn; whilst Mr. Frost was in May last appointed Professor of the Pianoforte and Assistant Singing Master at the Choir School. The new Vicar Choral appointments were made on November 8.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS CALENDAR.

On Tuesday next the Library will be open from 7 to 8.

December 4. Dr. C. W. Pearce, F.C.O. will read a paper on "Modern treatment of Ancient Ecclesiastical Melodies" at the College at 8 o'clock. Musical Illustrations will be given. The chair will be taken by Dr. E. J. Hopkins. January 8. F.C.O. Examination (Paper work). January 9. F.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). January 10. F.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). January 11. Diploma Distribution. January 15. A.C.O. Examination (Paper work). January 16. A.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). January 17. A.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). January 18. Diploma Distribution. February 5. Dr. F. J. Sawyer, F.C.O., will read a paper on "The History of the Theory of Harmony." March 5. Lecture. April 2. Lecture. April 29. Annual College Dinner. May 7. Lecture. June 4. Lecture. July 16. F.C.O. Examination (Paper work). July 17-18. F.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). July 19. Diploma Distribution. July 23. A.C.O. Examination (Paper work). July 24, 25. A.C.O. Examination (Organ Playing). July 26. Diploma Distribution. July 30. Annual General Meeting.

Candidates for the forthcoming Examination should send in their names before January 1.

Further arrangements and particulars will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Secretary.

95, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury.

MISS AMY FLORENCE

(From a Photograph by Boning & Small,

Miss Amy Florence, better known to frequenters of the Opera
Birmingham. She commenced her musical studies under Mr. De Lar England, and placed herself under the tuition of Signor San Giovanni, of Miss Florence made a highly successful début at the Theatre Royal, Malta, w in "Rigoletto." She afterwards appeared in these and other operas—not houses of Como and Naples. On returning to England, Miss Florence principally in "Carmen" and "The Bohemian Girl," and afterwards san of 1886-7, under Signor Lago, and that of the present year under Mr. A

Correspondence.

THE DAY-MACFARREN THEORY OF HARMONY.

To the Editor of the "Musical World."

Dear Sir.—I am exceedingly obliged to Mr. Stephens for pointing out my inaccuracy in saying that he considered the Neapolitan 6th chord to be in the key of its own root. I must apologise for misinterpreting, him and plead in my own defence that the bulk of the paper was written immediately after the discussion in which I believed him to say it, and that the impressions of the whole discussion seemed to have the vividness of a phonograph. I am afraid they have not proved as accurate.

It is, however, not a little startling to have evidence one has been accustomed to use on one's own side of the question, turned to prove exactly the contrary. It makes one feel like an accused person who has trusted to an alibi to prove his innocence, and suddenly finds the alibi turned to look like complicity in the offence. Mr. Stephens says in his letter la siently borrow it a striking co should be follo
avoid tonal am
Day theory ful

One of the chords could b which they bel surroundings.
company he k before or after.
by tonality wit
the association
as tonic. You
Stephens says t
"Assisa al pie"
introduce a sec
chord, and so

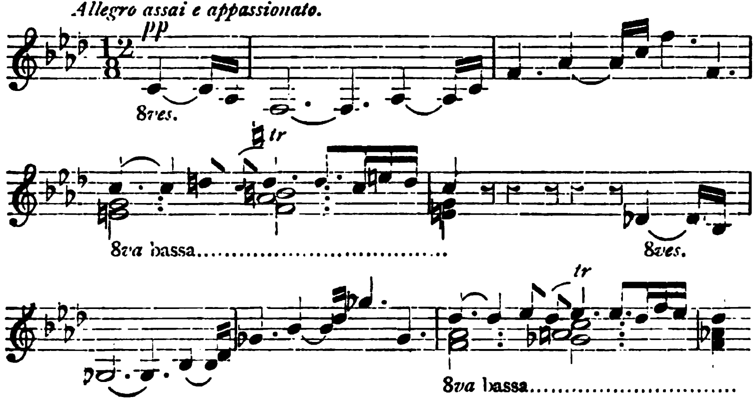
nothing save that we may, if we like, begin a chord of A flat as the Neapolitan 6th of G minor, quit it as the subdominant of E flat, and so modulate into the key of E flat. We could equally well change it to the sub-mediant of C minor, and go on in the key of C minor.

But, in the unaltered Rossini phrase, the chord of A flat is embedded among a number of unmistakeable G minor chords,—the tonic, dominant, tonic again, sub-dominant, tonic, supertonic (chromatic) dominant 7th, tonic, then this Neapolitan 6th, followed by tonic and dominant—and these surroundings hold it in the G minor group or key.

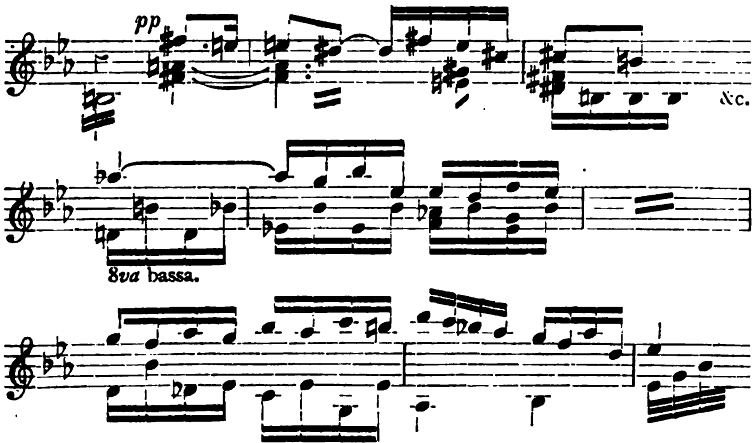
I am fearful of the accuracy of my mental phonograph now, therefore I go to the "Proceedings" for the next remark. I find Mr. Stephens said, on March 5, at the discussion above-named, "this chord (the Neapolitan 6th), assuming C as our initial key, is borrowed from that of F minor."

I hope to find Mr. Stephens as human as that beautiful but erratic instrument, the orchestral horn, has been said to be; for I cannot see why the Neapolitan 6th in G minor should be borrowed from the sub-mediant, while that in C comes from the sub-dominant. I infinitely prefer, with all its faults, which everything human must have, the bold theory which says, "the common chord of the minor second has been constantly used, freely and without special treatment, by good composers from time immemorial, and with good effect; we therefore include it in our list of concords in the key."

One more objection. Mr. Stephens says in his letter that A flat key has no relationship with G minor (that I take to be the meaning of cognate). I grant it in the diatonic style; but in the chromatic modern style, emphatically, it has. Listen :—



Though we may use unrelated keys in the fantasia section of a symphonic movement, we want to use, in the first part, related keys, which will confirm those of the first and second subjects. It would surely be a wandering mind that would lead a man to start his journey with a leap of seven leagues, and afterwards proceed by ordinary human steps. When I learnt to drive I was instructed to drive my horses slowly at the beginning of the journey, and not to get them over-heated too soon. To continue the simile, we drive our horses slowly the last mile home, and get them into stable cool. It is only a smart and cruel coachman who drives them fast and steaming up to his master's door. Listen again :—



I pray for forgiveness, for I know my own fallibility.

Yours truly,

OLIVERIA PRESCOTT.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Mr. Jocelyn Brandon's English version of Alphonse Daudet's drama, "L'Arlésienne," which offers a parallel to the play of "Hamlet" without the Prince of Denmark himself, was revived at the Princess's Theatre on Monday last for a series of matinées. It would serve no good purpose to discuss at any length the merits of a piece which has been already presented to an English audience, and not with overwhelming success, although the favour with which it was received in July last at the Prince of Wales's Theatre has doubtless encouraged its reproduction now. That there are faults in the adaptation cannot be denied; but we hesitate to lay the most serious charge to the door of the adaptor, who may not be entirely responsible for the depressing vulgarity of the part of Patron Marc, as exhibited by Mr. James East. That so poetic a play as this of Daudet, palpitating with Provençal passion and glowing with southern colour, should be thus marred, is intolerable. Nor can it be said that any of those who took part in the performance in question had fully appreciated the sublimated romance of the play. Miss Sophie Eyre, it is true, played the part of Rose with a great deal of power, and Miss Grace Hawthorne was a charming Vivette, while Miss Enid Leslie was all that could be wished as the half-witted Bibi; but, with the exception of the last-named lady, there was throughout a want of restraint, and of what, to borrow a musical term, may be called "phrasing," which went far to convert what is above all things a refined work of art into a transpontine melodrama. As the Arlesian enchantress, for love of whom Frédéri's life is wrecked, and who appears on the scene but for a moment, Miss Nellie Favette danced with spirit and grace.

The music composed by Bizet was on this occasion given by a band of 60 performers, whose efforts, however, were of a somewhat tentative sort. The overture is hardly in Bizet's happiest or most characteristic manner, but the choruses and entr'actes are such as none but he could have written. The dance-music in the last act, indeed, might almost seem a part of "Carmen." For the sake of this exquisite music alone, we could well wish to see "The Love that Kills" take a permanent place on the English stage.

DR. BRIDGE'S "CALLIRHOE."

It is gratifying to record the remarkably fine first performance in London of Dr. J. F. Bridge's cantata "Callirhoë," by the Finsbury Choral Association at the Holloway Hall, on November 22. Of the cantata itself, we remain of the opinion expressed after the Birmingham first performance, that "Callirhoë" is a capital specimen of musical art and effective workmanship by the organist of Westminster Abbey, and that both lyrical and dramatic elements are combined and contrasted in the happiest fashion. The prediction upon which we ventured that the cantata would be in immediate demand by provincial and other choral societies has already been fulfilled, as the work has been taken up all over the country, and the first edition of the vocal score has long since been sold out. It is, however, desirable, to add that since its production at Birmingham the composer has more or less revised his work, and especially has given freer use to the gongs which represent the brazen bowls gently clanging together in the breeze before the oracle of Dodona. The chief parts were undertaken at the Finsbury Choral Association rendering by Miss Anna Williams, Madame Belle Cole, and Mr. Banks; but the greatest success of all was undoubtedly achieved by the choir, very admirably trained by the conductor, Mr. C. J. Dale, and directed by Dr. Bridge in person. It consists of about 500 excedingly fine voices, and the really magnificent singing by the Finsbury choristers of the dramatic finale to the first part, and of the choruses before the oracle was a splendid revelation of choral power. Before "Callirhoë" Sir Sterndale Bennett's "Woman of Samaria" was performed, under the able direction of Mr. Dale.

ST. GEORGE'S HALL.

Pleasurable curiosity seemed the prevailing characteristic of the audience which assembled on Monday night to "assist" at the production of the new comedietta by Walter Browne and A. T. Caldicott, "The Bo'sun's Mate." The patrons of the entertainments presided over by Messrs. A. German Reed and Corney Grain are, above all things, indulgent. If tuneful music be wedded to refined humour, they do not ask too curiously for originality or skill in the weaving of a plot. Accordingly, since these first-named qualities are abundantly present in "The Bo'sun's Mate," the little operetta, or whatever it may be called, is likely to commend itself to that section of the entertainment-loving public which flocks so faithfully to the little hall in Langham Place. To analyse the composition at any length would be both unfair and unnecessary. Suffice it to say that Mr. Reed has a part in which he finds plenty of opportunity for the display of his peculiar humour; that Miss Kate Tully looks and sings charmingly as Winifred, the smuggler's danghter; while Mr. Ernest Laris looks well, but sings badly, as the gallant Jack Hardy; and Miss Fanny Holland gives an irresistibly piquant rendering of her part. The operetta was received with every mark of approval. Mr. Corney Grain's sketch, "John Bull Abroad," which closes the entertainment, still continues to afford huge delight to his admirers.

Concerts.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The attendance on Saturday last was not so large as on several recent occasions. Was this programme not sufficiently attractive?

An Overture to Shakespeare's Comedy, "Twelfth Night" (Op. 40) ... ... A. C. Mackenzie.
(First time at these Concerts.)
Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, No. 1 ... ... Paganini.
Violin—PAN FRANZ ONDRICZEK.
Air, "Star of Eve" (Tannhauser) ... ... Wagner.
MR. MAX HEINRICH.
Symphony, "Eroica" ... ... Beethoven.
Songs { Serenade ... ... Schubert.
Songs { Wanderlied ... ... Schumann.
MR. MAX HEINRICH.
Fantasia for Violin and Orchestra, on Airs from Smetana's Opera, "Die verkaufte Braut" ... ... F. Ondricek.
(First time in England.)
Violin—PAN FRANZ ONDRICZEK.
Overture to a Comedy ... ... Smetana.
Conductor ... MR. AUGUST MANNS.

The most important item of the concert, Beethoven's "Eroica," was accorded a rendering remarkable for phrasing of singular breadth, freedom and flexibility, and for the almost frosty clearness with which every detail of the score stood out. Once or twice, in the first and second movements, a little more majesty would have been welcome, but the Scherzo and Finale were superbly played. Certainly, those horns in the Trio of the Scherzo did make one a wee bit nervous; but then the horn is such a human instrument that fallibility is to be expected.

The overtures which respectively began and ended the concert are admirable examples of the humorous in music. That by Dr. Mackenzie, heard for the first time in public, it will be remembered, at the Richter Concert of June 4, is one of those works which will not only bear repeated hearing, but absolutely need it for full appreciation. Many of its qualities indeed are at once obvious; for instance, its rich but never overloaded orchestration, and its tunefulness; butacquaintance with the work reveals a subtlety of humour and an aptness of characterisation which, to the intelligent listener, are infinitely diverting. How far this may count on public recognition remains to be seen. Smetana's merry work, though not new to frequenters of the Crystal Palace, is never heard in London. This is a pity. It bubbles over with fun, without ever approaching coarseness or triviality, and its technical qualities evince the sound musicianship of its author. In its way, it is a masterpiece. We shall not be expected to descant upon the merits of Mr. Ondriczek, now so well known to English amateurs. His powerful tone and marvellous executive gifts were again conspicuous, but unfortunately the pieces chosen left little room for the display of higher qualities. There may have been a time when Paganini's platitudes were accepted as novelties, and even now, in some quarters, ear-tickling still passes for music; but at a high-class concert such as this we have surely a right to expect the exclusion of works which have nothing but difficulty and a famous name to recommend them.

Mr. Max Heinrich was very successful in Schumann's song, but less so in that by Schubert; in Wagner's air which, by the way, he unwisely sang in English, his expression was too spasmodic. The declamatory style of Wagner's later works is not suitable in this case.

SATUDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

Last Saturday the concert opened with Mozart's Quartet in B flat, one of the set of six dedicated to Haydn, the executants being Madame Neruda, MM. Ries, Straus, and Piatti; and the concluding piece was Schubert's bright and genial, but assuredly too-long-drawn-out Rondeau Brilliant for pianoforte and violin (Op. 70), effectively interpreted by Sir Charles Hallé and Madame Neruda. Madame Bertha Moore excited considerable admiration by her rendering of Sullivan's "Orpheus with his lute," and Grieg's "Solvejg's song." The latter was so warmly applauded that if it had followed, instead of preceding, Bennett's "May-Dew," with which it was bracketed, an encore would certainly have been demanded. Mr. Ernest Ford did good service as accompanist.

Sir Charles Hallé selected Beethoven's Sonata in D major, Op. 10, No. 3, as his solo. To our taste the slow movement was taken too slowly. Solemnity and nobility appear to be lessened when the pace gets below a certain point, quite as certainly as when it is unduly hastened.

The interest of the concert, however, did not centre in any of these numbers, but in Dvorak's magnificent Quintet in A, Op. 81, heard for the first time at the "Pops." This quintet is one of those living works that appear from time to time, casting to the winds the belief which sometimes takes possession of us that everything that was new is used up, and that nothing remains for the musician but to dress up the old in new attire. Here we find, once again, fresh, vigorous life; and—unconsciously or consciously—the new proof that art, like nature, is infinite, was hailed with delight. There was no mistaking the genuine enthusiasm of the applause after each movement; no mistaking the gratified faces of the listeners. Musicians of the old school, musicians of the new, and those of no school at all, agreed that Dvorak's Quintet is a superb composition.

The remarkable originality and richness of the melodies, the unconventionality and freedom of their employment, at first so attracts the listener that there is hardly a thought to spare for the extraordinary ingenuity of their treatment. There are depth, pathos, sweetness, and strength all through; perhaps a more touching passage than the return to the tempo primo in the slow movement has never been written; and all thisbeauty has been drawn out of a phrase consisting of three notes. Though Dvorak is true to his own individuality from the first bar to the last, yet when the hearer has room for thought of any other in his mind save Dvorak, that other will certainly be Brahms. There is a certain turn of expression that is alike in these two musicians, and in this quintet some passages recall Brahms' two fresh young works, the quartets, Op. 25 and 26.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

The crowd which filled St. James's Hall on Monday was no doubt in great part attracted by the prospect of hearing Brahms's new gipsy songs; and as these were placed in the second part of the programme, the previous items might have excited impatience had they not been selected with the greatest tact. But who could regret the time spent in lingering over the heavenly beauties of Schubert's D minor quartet, or in admiring, though for the hundredth time, the pure tone and finished phrasing of Signor Piatti, manifested on this occasion in Max Bruch's "Kol Nidrei"? No one, apparently, for in each case recalls were insisted on. Our article last week dealt so exhaustively with the general characteristics of Brahms's Op. 103, that we need now only say that the gipsy songs were received with a favour which augurs well for their future popularity. Their interpretation, it is true, was of such excellence that this alone would have justified the applause to which Mrs. Henschel, Miss Lena Little, Mr. Henschel, Mr. Shakespeare and their accompanist, Miss Fanny Davies, were compelled to respond. There can, however, be no question as to the merits of these fascinating trifles. They are such as he who runs may read writ large on every dainty page. We are so accustomed to hear Brahms spoken of, not always without justification, as "dry" and "laboured," that it is well he should occasionally help to dispel this notion by extreme examples of his genius in its lighter moods. He has done so in this case with rare felicity. Miss Margaret Wild contributed a pianoforte solo, Chopin's Scherzo in B flat minor, with a certain amount of charm, hardly sufficient, however, to justify her appearance at a "Monday Popular" Concert.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The second of these concerts on Tuesday was much better attended than the first, a welcome state of things which we hope will become permanent. Only the most hopeless grumbler could have found fault with the programme. Wagner, Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven, and Weber, each were represented. Mozart, by his noble, passionate, and exquisitely beautiful Concerto in D minor, played by Miss Fanny Davies with rare appreciation of the style in which the music of Mozart's day should be played; Beethoven by the music to a "Ritterballet," a set of pretty little pieces composed in 1790, and valuable as giving indications of characteristics later to be identified with the master's manner; Weber and Wagner by the "Oberon" and "Tannhauser" overtures, and Brahms by his Symphony in F, No. 3. There is much grandeur in this last, much charm, abundant fancy and ingenuity; while the orchestration, as usual with the composer, is rich and full, without ever being noisy. Yet somehow we cannot help feeling that a work in which so many excellencies are combined, should have a greater effect on the hearer than we have yet been able to experience when listening to this Symphony. The fault may, of course, be ours, and Brahms is fully entitled to the benefit of such a doubt. Remembering his Requiem, and the Symphony in D, however, to say nothing of several other works, we may at least be allowed to suggest that our partial disappointment has not in this case an altogether subjective origin. Mr. Henschel deserves special praise for the delicate playing of his band in the Mozart Concerto.

HERR WALDEMAR MEYER'S CONCERT.

At his first concert at St. James's Hall on the 23rd ult., Herr Meyer was heard in the Violin Concertos of Brahms and Mendelssohn, and F. Ries' suite for violin and orchestra. It is needless to say that only an artist of exceptional calibre can do justice to such works, but we may at once admit that no charge of undue temerity could be brought against Mr. Meyer for his selection. The beauties of Brahms' concerto lie by no means on the surface, and the player who is able to reveal them proves that his technical attainments are of the highest order, since it is only when the difficulties of such a work are no longer felt either by performer or hearer that this is possible. In the slow movement of the Ries' suite Herr Meyer had ample opportunity for the display of his noble quality of tone, and was singularly happy in phrasing the rapid passages of which the final "moto perpetuo" consists. It would be affectation to say that we have not heard a finer rendering of the Mendelssohn Concerto, but in every important particular Herr Meyer was eminently satisfactory. We regret, however, that in the last movement he did not adopt a less sensational tempo than that made, unhappily, so familiar by Senor Sarasate. Dr. Stanford was at the head of an excellent orchestra, which, beside playing Herr Meyer's accompaniments, was heard in Mozart's "Symphony in D" No. 1, Beethoven's "Namensfeier," and Hamish MacCunn's "Dowie Dens O'Yarrow." The latter pleased so much that the applause caused quite an interruption.

MR. RALPH STUART'S RECITALS.

Mr. Ralph Stuart put forward a varied and interesting programme for his recital on Wednesday, and his friends assembled in numbers which, considering the weather, were far larger than could reasonably have been expected. The audience, moreover, not only came, but stayed to the end—a rare thing now-a-days. Mr. Stuart's rendering of the first part of Rubinstein's Concerto in D minor (Herr Emil Bach assisting at the second piano), was a really noble achievement. He was also very successful in some pieces by Chopin, and gave a nocturne by Raff with exquisite finish. His reading of the "Moonlight" sonata was less satisfying; but then, how few can so play that wonderful composition as to realise the listener's ideal! Mr. Stuart's phrasing is broad, clear, and in soft passages often charming, and he skilfully avoids monotony of tone; but his transitions from p to f are sometimes unduly sudden, and at times he plays loud passages somewhat ponderously. A quaint and pretty "Rococo" by Emil Bach was a pleasing item.

MISCELLANEOUS CONCERTS.

MISS WINIFRED PARKER'S CONCERT.—Miss Winifred Parker gave her first evening concert at St. James's Hall on November 23. The names of Madame Antoinette Sterling, Mr. Iver McKay, Mr. Barrington Foote, and M. Johannes Wolff, are sufficient guarantee that the portion of the programme for which these artists were responsible, was excellently rendered. The bénéficiare essayed the "Roberto" scena, and Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," the choral portion of the latter being given by Mr. Carter's choir. In neither of these was Miss Parker equal to the demands made on her, but was more at home in the old ballad of "The bailiff's daughter." Miss Rose Williams, whose voice is, in part of its register, of beautiful quality, but whose singing is absolutely colourless, gave Sullivan's "Sleep, my love, sleep," and Mr. John Gritton revealed hitherto unsuspected elements of dulness in Schumann's "Two Grenadiers."

PORTMAN ROOMS.—Whether the management have taken to heart the adverse criticism freely bestowed on them in these and other columns, or the presence of ladies exercised a chastening influence, the fact remains that the fourth concert (ladies' night) of the Bohemian Subscription Smoking Concerts, held on Monday last, was a great artistic advance on its predecessors. Interesting features of the new departure were Polish and Spanish dances for four hands by Scharwenka and Moszkowski, played by Messrs. W. Ganz and Norfolk Megone; the singing by Miss McKenzie, with all her accustomed charm, of songs by Glinka and Cowen, and an excellent rendering by Miss Annie Swinfen of Mendelssohn's "Infelice." Conspicuous among the other successes of the evening were the violin and violoncello solos of those clever young gentlemen, Masters Richard and Edward Davis. The former was heard in an "Andante varié" of De Bériot, playing this characteristically graceful composition of the great Belgian violinist in a manner which fully merited the enthusiastic encore he received, and the latter in a beautiful romance by Goltermann displayed the same admirable qualities which redeemed a former concert from absolute worthlessness.

EYRE ARMS ASSEMBLY ROOMS.—A party of gentlemen amateurs gave a minstrel entertainment at the Eyre Arms Assembly Rooms, St. John's Wood, last week, in aid of the Boys' Institute connected with All Saints Church, Finchley Road, N. W. A refined and excellent entertainment was provided under the management of Mr. E. E. Heron.

BOHEMIAN MUSICAL SOCIETY.—The second smoking concert of the season was given at the Crystal Palace on the evening of Thursday last, and proved not less successful than its forerunners. The principal vocalists were Mr. J. Dalgety Henderson, who sang in his best style "Macgregor's gathering," Mr. Arthur Oswald, who gave Lacome's serenade "Estudiantina," and "The Sheriff," by Oliver King, and Mr. Alfred Moore, whose contributions were Bishop's "O Firm as Oak," and a new song by Bevan, "Brother Ambrose." Mr. A. Bartram Laud gave some interesting 'cello solos.

HIGHBURY PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—This society gave, on Monday last, a performance of Rossini's "Moses in Egypt," the principal artists being Miss Anna Williams, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Charles Chilley, and Mr. Bridson, with Miss Jessie Hotine, Miss May Willis, Mr. Gilbert P. Betjemann, and Mr. Frank Ward. The performance may fitly serve as evidence of the work being done by the Society, which is by far the largest in London possessing an amateur orchestra and chorus, the professional element in these being almost nominal, and when this fact is remembered, the efficiency to which Mr. G. H. Betjemann, the conductor, has brought his forces, is worthy of high praise. Of the performance in question little need be said. Mr. Lloyd is seldom heard to better effect than in Rossini's music, and his duets with Miss Williams and Mr. Bridson provoked the greatest enthusiasm; the two last-named artists also sang in a way entirely worthy of their reputations. The choruses were admirably given, the leads being taken up with much precision and firmness, and the band also was eminently satisfactory.

MR. ALFRED GREENWOOD gave his first concert this season at the Portman Rooms on Monday last, for the purpose of introducing his concert party, who, with the exception of Miss Leslie Trowbridge, duly appeared. Miss Frances Hipwell, however, proved an efficient substitute,; in fact, the only performances worth mentioning in addtion to hers were those of Madame Ellen Lamb, Mr. J. Thorman, Mr. John Campbell (of New Zealand), Mr. A. Greenwood, Mr. Harvey Löhr, and last, but not least, Miss Marianne Eissler, who again displayed to the greatest advantage the talent that has raised her to her present enviable position. We were particularly sorry to see that Mr. Greenwood has attempted to revive the "book imposition." No one wishes to pay 6d. for the words of a few ordinary ballads and part-songs, and for the concert-giver's own sake we trust that he has lost sufficiently over this little mistake to prevent him trying it at his concerts announced for February and March next.

LECTURE HALL, HARESTONE VALLEY.—A "Cottage Hospital Concert" was given here on Monday last, when an excellent programme, in which the amateur element was conspicuous, was well-rendered. The chief honours were won by Miss Marianne Rea and Mr. James Bovett. The lady sang Bishop's "Tell me, my heart," and the ever popular "Kathleen Mavourneen," with admirable taste and feeling, receiving for each song a well-merited encore. Miss Rea should be heard more frequently in the concert-room. Mr. Bovett's pleasant tenor voice and artistic method were well displayed in Handel's "Where'er you walk," and Balfe's "Come into the garden, Maud." Amongst others who rendered good service may be mentioned Mr. Sinclair Mantell, Mrs. Percy Hall, and Mr. J. Blanchard.

Next Week's Concerts.

SATURDAY (THIS DAY) DECEMBER 1.

		P.M.
Saturday Popular Concert	St. James's Hall	3
Crystal Palace Concert	Crystal Palace	3
M. Carré's Second Matinée	Steinway Hall	3
Royal Academy of Music, Student's Concert		7
MONDAY, 3.
Monday Popular Concert	St. James's Hall	8.30
Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Haden's Recital	46 Rutland Gate	3
TUESDAY, 4.
Third Symphony Concert	St. James's Hall	8.30
Miss Caverhill Shiel's Concert	Steinway Hall	8.30
Madame Tueski's Concert	Portman Rooms	8
WEDNESDAY, 5.
Evening Ballad Concert	St. James's Hall	8
Madame Essipoffs's Second Recital	Steinway Hall	3
THURSDAY, 6.
"Judith" (Novello Oratorio Concerts)	St. James's Hall	8
Miss Dora Barnard's Concert	Steinway Hall	3
Fraser Quintett Concert	Portman Rooms	8
FRIDAY, 7.
The Misses Bateman and Mowbray, Pianoforte Recital	Steinway Hall	8
Herr Mav Heinrich and Mr. Emanuel Moore, Vocal Recital	Steinway Hall	3

THE AUSTRALIAN PARROT.

The last Cunarfl steamer which arrived at Liverpool brought a great living curiositfl. It is an odd-looking parrot, whose conveesation made the cabins lively during the vuyage, and whose wisdom filled the forecastle with awe. Externally he is unimpressive. Instead of the usual green and yellow plumage of parrots, he has a grey suit, that is not at all handsome. His form is rather striking, however, as he is as big as an owl, and his head is remarkably wide and flattened in front. Across the top of his head is a queer ridge of feathers, at the base of which there is a dark marking, making him look like a profound scholar of a bird who has pushed his spectacles back from his forehead, rumpling up his hair.

The parrot is at present rather mopish. He evidently has not yet been able to reconcile himself to his new surroundings. Among the party of gentlemen who greeted the parrot's owner on his arrival was a member of a well-known wholesale drug-house of Liverpool, who sympathetically inquired of the parrot, "What do you want, Polly?"

The parrot startled him by the reply delivered in a gruff tone and with slow emphasis, quite unlike the rapid, rasping ejaculations of most talking parrots, "I—want—to—go—home!"

"Home is now some 14,000 miles away, for the parrot was brought from Australia. He is an African bird, bought when young from a Sydney bird fancier, by Mr. Alfeed Hay, one of the great sheep-breeders of New South Wales. Mr. Hay's estate, known as Boomanoomanio, is on she Murray River. It contains about 300,000 acres and pastures a quarter of a million sheep. It is remote from any town, the nearest post-office being the little hamlet of Mulwala. The piano in Mr. Hay's house had to be hauled by wagon about 100 miles from the railway-station. In a family so isolated from society and so dependent on its own resources for entertainments, the old-looking grey parrot had a good shcol. He soon developed an astounding aptitude for speech, and the whole family took a lively interest in his education. Talking parrots are generally swearing parrots. Mr. Hay gave stricr orders that the parrot should not be allowed to use oaths. If the parrot picked up a naughty word from a servant he was piomptly cuffed, and so decorous became his speech that he was called the Deacon. Eventually the servants were afraid to swear or do anything wrong in his presence, as the Deacon would be apt to selemnly report the fact to the family.

The present owner of Deacon made the parrot's acquaintance last Autumn, which in Austrylia corresponds with Spring in England, and is the sheep shearing season. That is a time of great bustle ane activity on a sheep range. An army of labourers are collected into a camp, for the gathering of the sheep into paddocks, handling and packing the fleece, and hauling to market, takes many hands. At Boomanoomana two hundred men were kept busily employed at shearing alone. The operation is not near so nice and difficult as with English sheep, for in Australia, owing to the mild climate, the fleece does not crinkle or mat, and the wool is straight. Shearing is a factory process, instead of an individual manipulation. Helpers keep a continuous procession of sheep moving from a paddock to the shearers. About three sweeps of the long shears will cut off the fleece on one side. The struggling animal is flopped oxer. Snip, snip, snip! The fleece on the other side is off; the shorn sheep is released and wildly plunges down the fenced passage leading to another paddock.

It was during such a scene as this that Deacon's present owner first saw the gray parrot. Deacon always eujoyed excitement, and some one of Mr. Hay's family had hung its cage where it could see the shearers at work. Descon was in a great flufter, and he had much to say. If he heard an oath, "Hush, you wicked beggar!" he would scream at the offender. The thing that most interested him was the occasional snipping of the sheep's hide. In such rapid work the shears would not unfrequently slice off a piece of skin and draw blood. The practice was to give the sore place a rub with the well-known remedy, St. Jacobs Oil, which is in high favour in the colony. Descon heard so much about St. Jacobs Oil tcat he got his phrases about it very pat. If a sheep had a sore or was nicked by the shears, he would shake his feathers, jump from perch to perch excitedly and shout "St. Jacobs Oil!" "Use St. Jacobs Oil!" "Rub on the Oil." Again he would sententiously announce: "St. Jacobs Oil conquers pain," in recollection of the phrase on every bottle and which he often heard repeated.

The gentleman visiting the range was on a hunting trip into the interior of the country, when he called on Mr. Hay. He naturally took a great fancy to Deacon, and Mr. Hay finally presented the bird to him. At Sydney Deacon's linguistic powers attracted great atfention, and the Editor of the "Sydney Daily News" wrote an article describing the parrot's great intelligence. Deacon's owner left Australia last autumn, taking the Pacific Mail steamer to San Francisco. While in that city Deacon was the subject of many notices in the newspapers. His owner lodged in the Palace Hotel, an enormous structure, whose extensive interior courtyard is laid off in lawns and gardens. Deacon soon after his arrival was hung out on a piazza overlooking the courtyaad As a coloured servant was rushing by, he shouted: "I say, you beggar, whe-re's the sheep?" The tone was so gruff and peremptory, and the voice so un ccountable to the startled darkey, who hadn't noticed the parrot, that in his fri ht he dropped his tray and smashed the chinaware. "Rub it with St. Jacob's Oil,'g blandly remarked the parrot.

The parrot went wite his owner across the American continent, and recently crossed the Atlantic to this country, so that he has pretty nearly circumnavigated the globe. He was christened the Doctor by the sailors during the voyage to England, from his habit of recommending his favonrite remedy. If he saw anyone get a knock or bruise, or limp as if from pain: "Rub it with St. Jacob's Oil," would be his solemn advice. He picked up some sea phrases, and in rough weather he would cry, "Oh-h-h, Steward!" with an amusing sea-sickish drawl. He has not recovered his vivacity since his arrival, and except an occasional "Oh, dear me!" or a "I wish I was home!" has little to say. His owner thinks, however, that he will soon come around. and that as soon as hegets used to our climate he will begin to take an interest in English sights.

EDWARD IVIMEY, Practical Tailor and Outfitter,
RECTORY HOUSE 2, ST. PETER'S ALLEY, CORNHILL, AND 24, OULLUM ST., FENCHURCH ST.
ESTABLISHED OVER 100 YEARS.

GOODS FOR WINTER NOW READY.
ALBERT BLUE MELTON, BEAVER AND VICUNA FOR THE NEW STYLE OF SAC OVERCOATS, now so much worn.
TOURIST AND SHOOTING SUITS, 50s., 55s., 63s.

DRESS SUITS FROM FINE TWILL ELASTIC, SATIN LINED, 3½ Guineas
SCOTCH TWEEDS & ANGOLA WOOL, TROUSERS from 13/-. a pair, 5/-.
EDWARD IVIMEY, Tailor & Outfitter.—Excellency with Economy combined

ADVANCES
ARRANGED on LIFE POLICIES, REVERSIONS, ANNUITIES
SETTLED INCOMES, and every kind of negotiable SECURITY.
BILLS DISCOUNTED.
W. AUSTIN & CO., BANK CHAMBERS,
44, HAMMERSMITH ROAD, KENSINGTON, W.

NICHOLSON & CO.,
Organ Builders,
PALACE YARD, WORCESTER.
ESTABLISHED 50 YEARS. SPECIFICATIONS & ESTIMATES SENT FREE.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice.

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

Without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s, 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings
FOR
VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,
ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,

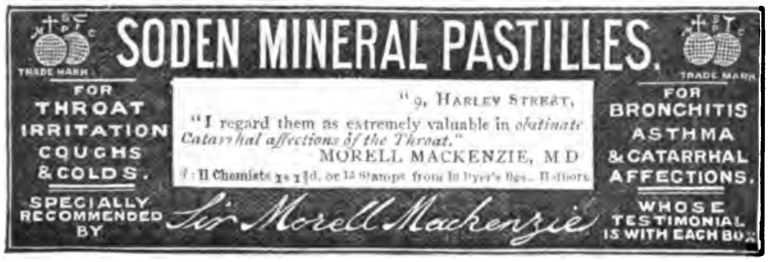
Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

Vins de Champagne

ARTHUR ROEDERER, Reims.

MAISON FONDEE 1876



SODEN MINERAL PASTILLES.

TRADE MARK

FOR THROAT IRRITATION COUGHS & COLDS.

"9, HARLEY STREET,

"I regard them as extremely valuable in obstinate Catarrhal affections of the Throat."

MORELL MACKENZIE, M.D.

FOR BRONCHITIS ASTHMA & CATARRHAL AFFECTIONS.

SPECIALLY RECOMMENDED BY Sir Morell Mackenzie WHOSE TESTIMONIAL IS WITH EACH BOX

SELL'S

ADVERTISING AGENCY, LTD.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING.

If you want to know the exact cost of any particular line of Advertising in Home, Colonial, or Foreign Newspapers or Magazines, you can get every information from "SELL, LONDON."

ESTABLISHED THREE QUARTERS OF A CENTURY.

A. S. MALLETT, ALLEN & CO.,

CONTRACTORS TO
HER MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE,
Type Music Printers,
LITHOGRAPHERS, &c.

PORTRAITS. (Speciality.)
POSTERS.

WINDOW BILLS.
BOOKS.
CATALOGUES

STATIONERY.
SHOW CARDS.
PLANS, &c., &c.

68 & 70, WARDOUR ST., LONDON, W.
TELEGRAPHIC ADDRESS—"ASMAL, LONDON."

CASSON'S PATENT

Organ-Building System.

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c., See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The Late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A
Mr. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—

CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN COMPANY, LIMITED,

DENBIGH.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Stndio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO.

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had but little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me, or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

To Mr. Ainsworth. BURNHAM-HORNER, F.R. Hist. S.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and Organ student who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music or organ arrangement, with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is, as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours, I. B. THORNTON,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly, HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.
To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilitate the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number), each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS,
BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

FOR SINGERS AND TEACHERS.

THE "MITRE" LOZENGE.

CONTAINS NO OPIATE.

TRADE MARK

PLEASANT TO THE TASTE

For Voice, Throat, & Coughs.

TESTIMONIALS.

"They are the very best I have ever used; they give an undoubted freedom and freshness to the voice."
VERNON RIGBY.

"I never experienced so much and marked benefit as I did last Sunday from your Mitre Lozenges."
T. MAJOR LESTER, Hon. Canon of Liverpool.

"The effect produced upon the voice is excellent. Please send another box."
H. SAYERS, Chaplain of Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford.

"Having had occasion to try the Mitre Lozenges for a severe hoarseness, I am pleased to say they have afforded me the desired relief."
BASSETT ROE.

"For clearing and strengthening the voice, I consider your Mitre Lozenges the best I have ever tried."
ELIZA THOMAS.

"Having found your Lozenges very good for the voice in singing, I shall have great pleasure in recommending them to my pupils."
ELLEN SAUNDERS, from the London Academy of Music.

"I have pleasure in testifying to the excellence of your Mitre Lozenges. As a vocalist and teacher of singing I have found them of great benefit to myself and pupils."
KATHERINE WALLACE.

"MISS ELDENA ELDON was suffering from a most irritable throat, which the Lozenges instantly relieved."

"I have experienced great relief and assistance from your Mitre Lozenges."
GEO. GIDDENS, (Criterion Theatre.)

"I know the Mitre Lozenges well, and think them excellent."
GEO. GROSSMITH.

"They are very agreeable and effective."
STANLEY LEATHES, D.D., Prebendary of St. Paul's.

"They are the best Lozenges extant."
CHARLES STRONG,
Choirmaster St. Augustine and Christ Church, Highbury, & Teacher of Singing.

Dear Sirs,—"I have tried your Mitre Lozenges and consider them invaluable to Vocalists, or to anyone who has to exercise the voice much. Having found them so efficacious I have already recommended them to several of my pupils." Yours truly,
G. CARAVOGLIA.

"They are the best I ever used."
EGBERT ROBERTS,

"I have found the Mitre Lozenges very efficacious in restoring the voice, when impaired from the effects of cough and cold.
FREDERIC PENNA, Professor of Singing and Elocution.

"I find the Mitre Lozenges very palatable and efficacious."
SINCLAIR DUNN, (The Scottish Tenor.)

"The Mitre Lozenges arrived most opportunely as I was suffering from a severe cough and cold. I feel it was through them that I was enabled to sing that morning."
LIONEL DAVIS.

"I found great relief in clearing the voice when hoarse from your valuable Mitre Lozenges, and shall recommend them to my friends."
THORNBER ROE.

Sold by all Chemists at 1s. 1½d, and 2s. 9d.

Made for the Proprietors, J. & G. HAWKE, by ALLEN & HANBURYS, Plough Court, Lombard-St., London, E.C.
POST FREE ON RECEIPT OF STAMPS.

Printed by A. S. MALLETT, ALLEN & CO., London, and Published by WILLIAM PEARCE, at 138a, Strand, W.C., to which address all communications must be sent.

WEEKLY.]

The Musical

ESTABLISHED 1836.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES N
MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 17/6 PER ANI

VOL. 68.—NO. 48. SATURDAY, DECEMBER

THE

KARN AMERICAN ORGANS

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,
WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs, equal to, if not surpassing all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

New Illustrated Catalogue and Price Lists Free of the
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:

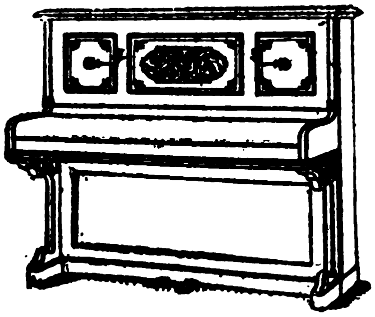
THE SCHREIBER PIANO COMPANY,
3, NEWMAN MANSIONS, NEWMAN ST., LONDON, W.

W. G. THOMAS'S PIANOS!!

ARE the BEST and cheapest in the market. Professors and others will find an advantage by sending for the Free Illustrated lists. Splendid Iron-framed PIANOS, full-compass trichord, in Walnut Wood Cases, at popular prices. Packed FREE. Contracts taken for large quantities. Old Pianos bought for Cash, or taken in exchange.

W. G. THOMAS Pianoforte Manufacturer,
Gospel Oak Grove, Malden Road, Kentish Town, London, N.W

PIANOS, PIANOS
Harmoniums, and American Organs,
ON THE THREE YEARS' SYSTEM



Pianos .. ... from 10s. 6d. per month.
Harmoniums ... " 5s. 0d. "
American Organs " 7s. 0d. "

Any Instrument sent home on receipt of first Instalment.

OUR UPRIGHT IRON GRAND, Trichord, Double Check Repeater Action, Celeste Pedal, 15s. per month.

This is a thoroughly sound and elegant Instrument, warranted in every respect.

Other Classes equally cheap.

Write for Catalogue to

SHENSTONE, SHENSTONE & CO.,
Steam Works: GRANGE ROAD, LEYTON, E.
Shew Rooms: 79, Hackney Rd.; 37, St. Peter's St., Islington; & 29, Kennington Pk. Rd

CONCERT
Mr. Ambros management of C

LONDON SY ductor.—PR
next, St. James's H
pianoforte, in G
Harold in Italy
Tristan and Isolde seats, 7s. 6d. and 4
Agents, and St. Ja

MADAME
Steinway H
Programme:—Fan
Impromptu in B fl
(Schubert); Mela
(Schütt); Thême
Valse (Chopin).
N. Vert, usual age

THE HECK
SECOND
Wednesday eveni
Tickets, 7s. 6d., 5
Vert, 6, Cork Stre

HERR WAL
TRAL CO
mences at eight o'
Conductor, Profes

MACKENZI
Spohr's Ni
FORMED by H
CHESTRAL CC

HERR WAL
TRAL CO
Programme: Sy
(conducted by th
(Spohr); concert centenary of the Concerto (Beetho
10s. 6d., 7s. 6d.,
Basil Tree, Ticke

GRESHAM CONCERT
8 p.m. Program
No. 17, Pianofor
Violoncello Solo
Mr. C. Hann;
(Gounod), Violin

MRS. WEI
MUSICAL
Hall), THIS D
Henry Bird.

HERR VO
CONCER
at Three o'clock,
Petherick and P
Violoncello, Mr.
Wolff and Mr.
Office, and of H

SPECI

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, or £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the Manager of The Musical World, 138a, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERICK H. COWEN,
73, Hamilton Terrace,
St. John's Wood, N. W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.,
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, Finsbury Park Villas,
Green Lanes, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI,
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor).
12, Westbourne Park Terrace, W.

Mr. F. St. JOHN LACY,
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist (Baritone),
Fitzroy Mansion, Charlotte Street,
Fitzroy Square, W.

Mr. H. MARTIN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor)
Address–7, Wimpole St., Cavendish Sq., W.

Mr. LOUIS N. PARKER, A.R.A.M.
(Composer, Conductor, Lecturer),
Sherborne, Dorset.

Mr. G. W. L. MARSHALL-HALL
Gives Lessons in Composition and Dramatic Singing,
151, Rucklidge Avenue,
Willesden Junction, N.W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts)
Bosworth House, Husband's Bosworth,
Rugby.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o Nolan & Jackson.

Miss JULIA JONES (Soprano) begs that all communications respecting Oratorios, Concerts, &c., will be addressed to 4, St. Thomas's Road, Finsbury Park, London, N.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorio),
41, Welbeck St., Cavendish Square, W

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, Portsdown Road, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concerts and Oratorio),
29, Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio)
2, Sedgmoor Villas,
Private Lessons given. Camberwell, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
(Ballad, Oratorio, etc.)
31, Monmouth Rd., Bayswater, London, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, Norfolk Square, Hyde Park, W.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts),
56 Duchess Rd., Edgbaston, Birmingham.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 36, Albion Place, Hyde Park W.; or to Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul (sole agent),
26, Old Bond Street, W.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul,
26, Old Bond Street, W.,
Or, 270, Elgin Avenue, Maida Vale, W.

Mr. IVER McKAY
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concerts),
1, Milner Square, London, N.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Old Trafford, Manchester.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio),
28, Devonshire Street, Islington, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
Gothic Lodge,
Lordship Lane, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, St. Stephen's Avenue,
Shepherd's Bush, W

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
40, Stanley Gardens, Belsize Park, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. Roosevelt Schuyler,
55, Beaver St., New York City.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, Upper Mount Street, Dublin.

Mr. RAPHAEL GORDON
(Operas, Concerts, and At Homes).
c/o Signor Odoardo Barri,
60, Margaret Street, W.,
Or, 97, Talbot Road, Bayswater, W.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. Vert, Esq., 6, Cork Street.

Mr. FREDERICK KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, Canfield Gardens, S. Hampstead.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
Egremont, Croxted Road,
West Dulwich, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert),
63, Stafford Place,
Buckingham Gate, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, etc.),
30, Lancaster Road, Notting Hill, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorios, and Operas),
70, Portsdown Road, Maida Vale, W.

Harp.

Mr. W. T. BARKER
(Concerts, At Homes, Receptions),
49, Ebury Street, Belgravia, S.W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22a, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified." 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
"Yelbana," 99, Anerley Road,
Pupils visited and received. Anerley, S.E.

Miss FREDA MARSDEN,
Solo Violinist (Concerts, At Homes, etc.),
Address. c/o Mr. Charles Woolhouse,
81, Regent Street,
London, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella (Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST,

Telegraphic Address: "Healey's Agency," London

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Madame WILSON-OSMAN (A.R.A.M.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert), (Soprano)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss AMY FLORENCE (Soprano),
(Opera, Concerts, Oratorios, At Homes),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W

Miss FLORENCE EMERSON (Soprano)
(Concerts, Oratorio, At Homes, Etc)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey.
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W, B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss FALCONAR (Contralto),
(Oratorio Concerts Etc.)
24, Oppidans Rd, Primrose Hill, N.W
or Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor),
28, Belsize Road, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W

Mr. HENRY PHILLIPS (Tenor),
Sole agent, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio)
Business Manager, W, B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone),
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W, B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Herr WALDEMAR MEYER (Solo Vlnst)
Concerts, At Homes, Etc.)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street,
Regent Street, W

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, or £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the Manager of THE MUSICAL WORLD, 138*a*, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, HAMILTON TERRACE,
ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N. W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.,
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, FINSBURY PARK VILLAS,
GREEN LANES, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI,
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor).
12, WESTBOURNE PARK TERRACE, W.

Mr. F. ST. JOHN LACY,
(Professor of Singing. Composer, and Vocalist (Baritone),
FITZROY MANSION, CHARLOTTE STREET,
FITZROY SQUARE, W.

Mr. H. MARTIN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor)
Address–7, WIMPOLE ST., CAVENDISH SQ., W.

Mr. LOUIS N. PARKER, A.R.A.M.
(Composer, Conductor, Lecturer),
SHERBORNE, DORSET.

Mr. G. W. L. MARSHALL-HALL
Gives lessons in Composition and Dramatic Singing,
151, RUCKLIDGE AVENUE,
WILLESDEN JUNCTION, N.W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts)
BOSWORTH HOUSE, HUSBAND'S BOSWORTH,
RUGBY.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o NOLAN & JACKSON.

Miss JULIA JONES (Soprano) begs that all communications respecting Oratorios, Concerts, &c., will be addressed to 4, St. Thomas's Road, Finsbury Park, London, N.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorio),
41, WELBECK ST., CAVENDISH SQUARE, W

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, PORTSDOWN ROAD, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concerts and Oratorio),
29, ALBANY STREET, REGENT'S PARK, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio)
2, SEDGMOOR VILLAS,
Private Lessons given. CAMBERWELL, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
(Ballad, Oratorio, etc.)
31, MONMOUTH RD., BAYSWATER, LONDON, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, NORFOLK SQUARE, HYDE PARK, W.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts),
56 DUCHESS RD., EDGBASTON, BIRMINGHAM.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 36, ALBION PLACE, HYDE PARK W.; or to Mr. N. VERT, 6, CORK STREET, W.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. ALFRED MOUL (sole agent),
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. ALFRED MOUL,
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.,
Or, 270, ELGIN AVENUE, MAIDA VALE, W.

Mr. IVER McKAY
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concerts),
1, MILNER SQUARE, LONDON, N.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio),
OLD TRAFFORD, MANCHESTER.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio),
28, DEVONSHIRE STREET, ISLINGTON, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
GOTHIC LODGE,
LORDSHIP LANE, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, ST. STEPHEN'S AFENUE,
SHEPHERD'S BUSH, W

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
40, STANLEY GARDENS, BELSIZE PARK, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. ROOSEVELT SCHUYLER,
55, BEAVER ST., NEW YORK CITY.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, UPPER MOUNT STREET, DUBLIN.

Mr. RAPHAEL GORDON
(Operas, Concerts, and At Homes).
c/o Signor ODOARDO BARRI,
60, MARGARET STREET, W.,
Or, 97, TALBOT ROAD, BAYSWATER, W.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N VERT, Esq., 6, CORK STREET.

Mr. FREDERICK KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, CANFIELD GARDENS, S. HAMPSTEAD.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
EGREMONT, CROXTED ROAD,
WEST DULWICH, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert),
63, STAFFORD PLACE,
BUCKINGHAM GATE, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, etc.),
30, LANCASTER ROAD, NOTTING HILL, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorios, and Operas),
70, PORTSDOWN ROAD, MAIDA VALE, W.

Harp.

Mr. W. T. BARKER
(Concerts, At Homes, Receptions),
49, EBURY STREET, BELGRAVIA, S.W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22A, DORSET STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified." 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
"YELBANA," 99, ANERLEY ROAD,
Pupils visited and received. ANERLEY, S.E.

Miss FREDA MARSDEN,
Solo Violinist (Concerts, At Homes, etc.),
Address, c/o Mr. CHARLES WOOLHOUSE,
81, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella (Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST,
Telegraphic Address: "HEALEY'S AGENCY," LONDON

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Madame WILSON-OSMAN (A.R.A.M.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert), (Soprano)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Miss AMY FLORENCE (Soprano),
(Opera, Concerts, Oratorios, At Homes),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W

Miss FLORENCE EMERSON (Soprano)
(Concerts, Oratorio, At Homes, Etc)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY.
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W, B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Miss FALCONAR (Contralto),
(Oratorio Concerts Etc.)
24, OPPIDANS RD, PRIMROSE HILL, N.W
or Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor),
28, BELSIZE ROAD, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W

Mr. HENRY PHILLIPS (Tenor),
Sole agent, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio)
Business Manager, W, B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone),
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W, B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Herr WALDEMAR MEYER (Solo Vlnst)
Concerts, At Homes, Etc.)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET,
REGENT STREET, W

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, or £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the Manager of The Musical World, 138a, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, Hamilton Terrace,
St. John's Wood, N. W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.,
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, Finsbury Park Villas,
Green Lanes, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI,
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor).
12, Westbourne Park Terrace, W.

Mr. F. St. JOHN LACY,
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist (Baritone),
Fitzroy Mansion, Charlotte Street,
Fitzroy Square, W.

Mr. H. MARTIN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor)
Address–7, Wimpole St., Cavendish Sq., W.

Mr. LOUIS N. PARKER, A.R.A.M.
(Composer, Conductor, Lecturer),
Sherborne, Dorset.

Mr. G. W. L. MARSHALL-HALL
Gives lessons in Composition and Dramatic Singing,
151, Rucklidge Avenue,
Willesden Junction, N.W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts)
Bosworth House, Husband's Bosworth,
Rugby.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o Nolan & Jackson.

Miss JULIA JONES (Soprano) begs that all communications respecting Oratorios, Concerts, &c., will be addressed to 4, St. Thomas's Road, Finsbury Park, London, N.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorio),
41, Welbeck St., Cavendish Square, W

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, Portsdown Road, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concerts and Oratorio),
29, Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio)
2, Sedgmoor Villas,
Private Lessons given. Camberwell, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
(Ballad, Oratorio, etc.)
31, Monmouth Rd., Bayswater, London, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, Norfolk Square, Hyde Park, W.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts),
56 Duchess Rd., Edgbaston, Birmingham.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 36, Albion Place, Hyde Park W.; or to Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul (sole agent),
26, Old Bond Street, W.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul,
26, Old Bond Street, W.,
Or, 270, Elgin Avenue, Maida Vale, W.

Mr. IVER McKAY
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concerts),
1, Milner Square, London, N.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Old Trafford, Manchester.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio),
28, Devonshire Street, Islington, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
Gothic Lodge,
Lordship Lane, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, St. Stephen's Afenue,
Shepherd's Bush, W

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
40, Stanley Gardens, Belsize Park, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. Roosevelt Schuyler,
55, Beaver St., New York City.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, Upper Mount Street, Dublin.

Mr. RAPHAEL GORDON
(Operas, Concerts, and At Homes).
c/o Signor Odoardo Barri,
60, Margaret Street, W.,
Or, 97, Talbot Road, Bayswater, W.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. Vert, Esq., 6, Cork Street.

Mr. FREDERICK KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, Canfield Gardens, S. Hampstead.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
Egremont, Croxted Road,
West Dulwich, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert),
63, Stafford Place,
Buckingham Gate, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, etc.),
30, Lancaster Road, Notting Hill, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorios, and Operas),
70, Portsdown Road, Maida Vale, W.

Harp.

Mr. W. T. BARKER
(Concerts, At Homes, Receptions),
49, Ebury Street, Belgravia, S.W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22a, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified." 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
"Yelbana," 99, Anerley Road,
Pupils visited and received. Anerley, S.E.

Miss FREDA MARSDEN,
Solo Violinist (Concerts, At Homes, etc.),
Address. c/o Mr. Charles Woolhouse,
81, Regent Street,
London, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella (Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST,

Telegraphic Address: "Healey's Agency," London

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Madame WILSON-OSMAN (A.R.A.M.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert), (Soprano)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss AMY FLORENCE (Soprano),
(Opera, Concerts, Oratorios, At Homes),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W

Miss FLORENCE EMERSON (Soprano)
(Concerts, Oratorio, At Homes, Etc)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey.
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W, B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss FALCONAR (Contralto),
(Oratorio Concerts Etc.)
24, Oppidans Rd, Primrose Hill, N.W
or Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor),
28, Belsize Road, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W

Mr. HENRY PHILLIPS (Tenor),
Sole agent, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio)
Business Manager, W, B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone),
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W, B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Herr WALDEMAR MEYER (Solo Vlnst)
Concerts, At Homes, Etc.)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street,
Regent Street, W

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Tenterden Street, W.—NEXT FORTNIGHTLY CONCERT, DECEMBER 15.

For Syllabus of Local Examinations, 1889, and other information, apply to the Secretary.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, Kensington Gore, London. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.

President—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director—SIR GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL.D.

NEXT COLLEGE CONCERTS, DECEMBER 10 and 13 (ORCHESTRAL).

FIFTEEN OPEN FREE SCHOLARSHIPS will be competed for in March. Last day for receiving applications January 20.

Forms of application and particulars may be obtained of the Registrar, Mr. GEORGE WATSON, at the College. CHARLES MORLEY, Hon. Sec.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and EXAMINATION, etc., and the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music Instituted 1872.

President, THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.

SESSION, 1888—9.

The next STUDENTS' ORCHESTRAL CONCERT at Princes' Hall, Piccadilly, will take place on MONDAY, DECEMBER 17, at Eight o'clock. Conductor, Mr. George Mount. Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Admission, 2s. 6d. Tickets may be obtained at the Hall.

The next HALF-YEARLY EXAMINATIONS FOR THE DIPLOMAS OF L. MUS. T.C.L. and A. MUS. T.C.L., the positions of Associate-Pianist, Organ-Associate, Associate-Vocalist, Special Certificates for Harmony and other separate subjects, will be held during the week commencing January 7, 1889. These Examinations are open to all Candidates, whether Students of the College or not, and without restriction as to age, sex, or creed. LAST DAY OF ENTRY, DECEMBER 15.

Regulations and all particulars can be obtained from the Secretary, Trinity College, London, W.

By order of the Academical Board.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C. PATRON—THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.

Established to advance the cause of Church Music and the truest interests of its Professors.

Members of the Church of England and Ireland and the Episcopal Church of Scotland are eligible for Election.

Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates), 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members), 15s, per annum; Life Subscription, 5 guineas.

Prospectus and further particulars may be abtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

MUSIC SCHOOL.—CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL for Girls (Limited), 6, Upper Baker Street, Regent's Park.—Head Music Mistress, Miss Macirone, late Professor of Royal Academy of Music. Fee, three guineas per term. Children from 8 to 13 allowed to begin and continue for two guineas per term. Pupils not in the School may pay an entrance fee of one guinea. The fees payable in advance. Pupils wishing to join Violin Class under Mdlle. Gabrielle Vaillant, to send in their names to Miss Macirone. F. J. HOLLAND, Chairman.

ANGLO-FRENCH SCHOOL, FOR DAUGHTERS OF GENTLEMEN, Granville House, Hornsey Rise, London, N.—Miss NASH and Madlle. RAYMOND, assisted by a staff of efficient Professors and Teachers, receive Pupils to board and educate. Special attention given to Music. Healthy and pleasant locality. Terms moderate. References kindly permitted to parents of pupils and to the Editor of "The Musical World."

SOUTHSEA. St. Bees' College for Girls and Kindergarten, conducted by Miss Nelson, M.C.P., healthily and pleasantly situated, with good playground, offers every educational advantage with the comforts of a home, and careful supervision. Pupils prepared for all higher examinations. Special attention to Music and preparation for the R.A.M. Class-singing, languages, physiology, drawing, dancing, swimming, musical drill, combined with a thorough English education. Terms, moderate and inclusive.

MR. JOHN GREIG, M.A., Mus. Bac., F.C.O. (passed Exam. for Mus. Doc. Oxon., 1887), teaches HARMONY, COUNTERPOINT, and FUGUE by CORRESPONDENCE. Coached successfully for final Mus. Bac. Oxon., 1886.—Address, 7, Scotland Street, Edinburgh.

SIGNOR NICOLA COVIELLO, the popular Cornet Soloist (Royal Italian Opera, Promenade Concerts, &c.), now booking Concert Engagements (London, suburbs, and provinces). Immensely successful at Promenade Concerts with "The Lost Chord," Levy's "Whirlwind," &c.—3, Sudbourne Road, Brixton.

MR. J. S. KNIGHT (Tenor) for Ballad Concerts, Oratorio, &c—Address, 59, Beauchamp Place, Brompton Road, S.W.

HIGH-CLASS VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC for Evening Parties, At Homes, etc., by experienced artists: a complete Concert Party if required; terms moderate.—Address K. and B., 59, Beauchamp Place, Brompton Road, S.W.

TYROLEAN VOCALIST. (SPECIALITY!)

MR. JOSEPH HOFFMANN

(Own Compositions, Author of

" De Schweizer Girl," " De Organ Girl," " De Schneiderlin

" Mine Flute," " The Disappointed Lover," etc., etc.)

38, MILDMAY ROAD, N.

"THE MEISTER."

The Quarterly Journal of London Branch of the Wagner Society.

Annual Subscription (post free), 4s.

Payable to Mr. J. Cyriax, 33, Douglas Road, N.

No. IV., completing Vol. I., now ready, price 1s.

CONTENTS.

"Parsifal," Part III, (conclusion).

"Art and Revolution," by Richard Wagner, Part III. (conclusion).

Two Studies of the Overture to the "FLYING DUTCHMAN."

Notes, &c.

GEO. REDWAY. LONDON.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

PARENTS seeking ENGLISH or FOREIGN SCHOOLS, TUTORS, GOVERNESSES for their children, are invited to write fully to

J. F. MOON, M.C.P.,

85, NEWMAN STREET, LONDON, W.,

Who will forward prospectuses and every requisite information, free of charge.

Particulars required are: age and sex of pupil, locality preferred (if any), a about what terms will be paid. Housekeepers, Nursery Governesses, and Co panions are also recommended. Hours 11 till 3. Saturdays closed.

SPECIAL TINNED TUBES.

FOR

TUBULAR PNEUMATIC ORGANS.

MELLOWES & CO., LEAD PIPE WORKS, SHEFFIELD

DRURY LANE.—AUGUSTUS HARRI

Lessee and Manager.

EVERY EVENING, at 7.30, concluding at 11.15.

A New Grand Spectacular Drama entitled,

THE ARMADA, a Romance of 1588.

By HENRY HAMILTON and AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

Box-office open daily from ten till six.

MORNING PERFORMANCE of THE ARMADA. In co sequence of the great success of "The Armada," and in response to num rous requests, another Morning Performance will be given THIS DAY (Saturda at 1.30.

THE ARMADA.—The unanimous praise bestowed upon th historical drama and grand spectacle by the leading Press of the country nightly endorsed by the crowded audience which fills Drury Lane Theatre at ea performance.

THE ARMADA EXHIBITION NOW OPEN to all perso booking seats, from eleven a.m. till five p.m. Open to all persons occupyi places entitling them to access to the saloon from seven p.m. till eleven p.m including the 3s. balcony.

LAST NINE NIGHTS of the ARMADA, in consequence of th unprecedented preparations for the Grand Christmas Pantomime, "The Bab in the Wood.

BABES IN THE WOOD, BOXING NIGHT, Dec. 26.—Bo office now open.

THE JODRELL THEATRE, Great Queen Street, W.C.—Lesse Mrs. Churchill-Jodrell. Manager, Colonel H. J. Sargent.—THE ALDE MAN, by James Mortimer. Preceded by A WHITE LIE.—Box-office open t to five.

THE ALDERMAN.—Genuine Success. A screaming comedy.

THE ALDERMAN.—Enthusiastically applauded.

JODRELL THEATRE. — THE ALDERMAN. — Now bein played to crowded houses.

THE ALDERMAN, at 8.45.

Special Notices—Continued.

EYRE ARMS ASSEMBLY ROOMS, St. John's Wood.—Thursday, December 13, at 8.

GRAND EVENING CONCERT, under the direction of Mr. W. Pearce, 27, Alexandra Road, N.W.

MISS AMY FLORENCE, Miss Fanny Joyce, Miss Theodora Wilson, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. William Nicholl, Mr. Charles Copland, and Herr Ragnar Grevillius. Signor Nicola Coviello (Cornet), Herr von Czeke (Violin), Madame Sophie Tueski (Pianoforte), and Mrs. Charles L. Carson (Recitation). Tickets, 5s., 3s. 2s. and 1s., at Basil Tree's, St. James's Hall; Chappell's, New Bond Street; Rogers and Son, Circus Road, N.W.; and Boone's Library, Swiss Cottage, N.W.

MR. CLAUDE TREVOR'S MATINÉE, STEINWAY HALL, December 10, at 3.30.—Artists: Mesdames Alphonsine Douilly, Beata Frances, Helen D'Alton. Violin, Miss Marie Douglas, Mr. Claude Trevor, and Signor Mhanes. Conductors, Mrs. Watson, Mr. Trevor. Floral decorations by Gerard, 84, Regent Street.

ST. MARY'S, Boltons, S. Kensington.—ORGAN RECITAL by C. F. ABDY WILLIAMS, on Wednesday, Dec 19, at 4 p.m.—Programme: Sonata in A. No. 2 (Mendelssohn), Andante from Organ Trio in D minor. No. 3 J. S. Bach), Choralvorspiel, Sonata in E flat minor, No. 6, Op. — (Rheinberger), Prelude, Intermezzo, Marcia Religioso, Fugue, and Vocal Selections.

TO CLOSE A TRUST.—For SALE as a going concern, a well-established high-class PIANOFORTE and GENERAL MUSIC BUSINESS established 30 years, in a fashionable sea-side town on the Lancashire coast.—Further particulars may be had from Messrs. Buck, Dickson, & Cockshott; Solicitors, Southport.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1888.

 MSS. and Letters intended for publication must be addressed to "The Editor." Rejected MSS. cannot be returned unless accompanied by stamped directed envelope.

 Advertisements and business communications generally should be addressed to the Manager (MR. WILLIAM PEARCE), whose receipt—with the sole exception of the Proprietor's—for amounts due since August 1, 1888, will alone be recognised. Advertising, Publishing, and General Offices: 138a, Strand, London.

Facts and Comments.

Those musicians who had hailed the accession of the young Emperor William II., on account of his musical proclivities, will be possibly inclined to abate their enthusiasm, if a piece of information which comes from the Continent prove to be true. According to this, it appears that he has extended his patronage to a concert, which is to be given shortly, of a happily unique character. It is a concert of—trumpets! The idea originated with two trumpeters of the Hussar regiment of which William II. is the honorary commander, and they have appealed to their colleagues in various regimental bands, with the result that 300 trumpet-players have promised their assistance. The programme will include a fanfare in the Emperor's honour, Bach's chorale, "Eine feste Burg," a chorus from Gluck's "Iphigénie," and a "Kaiserhymne," composed by Herr Kosleck. No doubt the "intention is good," but the idea is very depressing. It is to be hoped, for the sake of the Emperor and audience also, that it will not be carried out.

"Sweet are the uses of advertisement!" The following, extracted from the advertising columns of a daily contemporary, affords food for reflection:—

> "HOW TO VAMP to Songs, Chords, &c. 1s. 6d.—Apply, &c. See Testimonials."

What the exact process of "vamping to chords" may be, we know not; and we do not particularly desire to know. But that any person should actually advertise himself as an instructor of the art of "vamping" is in itself a curious commentary on certain conditions of modern music.

The teaching staff of the United States National Conservatory of Music has received a valuable addition in the person of Madame Eugenie Pappenheim, the German prima donna, whose painful story can scarcely be yet forgotten. In the midst of a career which promised to be extremely brilliant, she became the prey of a malady which totally destroyed her singing voice Madame Pappenheim is, however, said to possess all the qualities requisite for an admirable teacher.

Reference has more than once been made in these columns to the recent improvements in the phonograph. The practical nature of those improvements was recently shewn at Llewellyn Park, N.J., where a phonograph was used to reproduce the music played by the band of Fort Hamilton. The peculiar quality of each instrument was not re-produced with entire success, but each instrument could be distinguished, and there was no blurring or faintness of the notes. Then the pieces were played backwards, a proceeding which seemed to have aroused the liveliest satisfaction in the minds of the auditors. There are many modern tunes which so played would sound just as well.

Madame Emma Nevada, who is probably best remembered among us by her appearance at the Norwich Festival of 1884, where she created the soprano rôle in "The Rose of Sharon," appears to be achieving a veritable triumph in Madrid, in which city she is now singing in "Lakmé." That Madame Nevada should win success will not surprise those who are acquainted with her singing; but they will scarcely be prepared to hear that the Spanish critics declare her worthy to rank by the side of Adelina Patti.

The performance on Thursday last, of the "Messiah' in Westminster Abbey, contained some features which will not impossibly become historic. There was, however, one curious spectacle which probably passed unnoticed, save by the few in whose immediate vicinity it took place. It was that of a stalwart policeman who had been stationed amongst the congregation for the "regulation of traffic." Scarcely had the first number been commenced, when the minion of the law produced from his capacious pockets a well-worn score of Handel's work, from which he followed the performance with an attentive interest and watchfulness that would have well become the most grave and reverend of musical critics. The incident was one which could scarcely be barren of suggestion. That the "Messiah" occupies the highest place in the affections of the average English amateur, is a fact well recognised; but that musical culture—whether or no a little antiquated—should have penetrated thus to "the force," is indeed matter for satisfaction. In view of the alleged incompetence of much musical criticism, it might not be profitless to recruit the ranks of the profession from the class to which Policeman X belongs. But, oh!—perish the thought—what if Policeman X should prove to be a disciple of the exploded Wagner?

The tenor, Masini, has definitely concluded an engagement to sing during the approaching season at Buenos Ayres, receiving for the whole engagement the modest sum of 900,000 francs, which proves two things—neither indeed, new—that there is more than one rapacious artist in the world, and that South America is a happy hunting-ground for singers who can sing. At any rate, we could wish that many vocalists whose claims are (in their own estimation alone) equal to those of a Masini or a Patti, would go to seek their fortune in Buenos Ayres—or anywhere else on the other side of the Atlantic.

M. Boito has, it is announced, completed the score of "Nero," the opera on which he has been occupied for so long that its very existence has seemed more or less apocryphal. The work, which is written in six tableaux, will probably be produced next year, but, before its presentation on the operatic stage, M. Boito intends to publish the libretto—which is also from his own pen—in separate form. One cannot but wonder how many other librettists there are who could successfully venture on such a step.

Wide-spread regret has been caused by the death, at the early age of 37, of Mr. Desmond L. Ryan, the musical critic of the "Standard," and an able writer on musical subjects generally. Mr. Ryan's health had for some time been unsatisfactory, and last year he made a voyage to Australia, without however, receiving any permanent benefit. The funeral took place on Monday at the Paddington Cemetery, Willesden-lane, where there were present many musicians and members of the press, amongst them being Dr. Hueffer, Mr. Sutherland Edwards, Mr. Joseph Bennett, Mr. Hersee, Mr. Barrett, Mr. Henry Gadsby and Mr. William Davison. Owing, however, to an ambiguity in the wording of the invitation, some had proceeded in the first instance to the Willesden Cemetery, arriving therefore, too late for the ceremony.

Mr. Ferdinand Praeger's symphonic poem, "Manfred," will be performed to day at the Crystal Palace.

Dr. Francis Hueffer has completed the libretto of a new cantata, entitled "The Sacrifice of Freya," the music for which has been supplied by Dr. Creser, a local Leeds organist. The work, which partakes rather of the nature of a religious ceremony than of a cantata, as the word is usually understood, consists of one scene only; a story being, however, incidentally introduced. Should it be performed at the next Leeds festival, it will be found to contradict entirely the ordinary ideas on the worth of "local talent." It may be mentioned that a quartet by Dr. Creser was performed not long since at a concert of the National Society of British Musicians.

For Madame Adelina Patti's second and last concert of the season, which will take place on Tuesday next at the Albert Hall, a programme has been provided which, in point of musical interest, compares advantageously with that of the last. Madame Patti herself will sing "Ah! non giunge" and Gounod's "Ave Maria," the violin obbligato to which will be played by Mdlle Marianne Eissler, and in the duet "Tornami à dir," from "Don Pasquale," with Mr. Lloyd. The band, under Mr. Ganz, will play Beethoven's "Egmont" overture, the valse from Berlioz's "Symphonie Fantastique," and Gounod's "Funeral March of a Marionette."

We are glad to know that the subscriptions to the "Walter Bache scholarship," which, as readers of the "Musical World" are well aware, is founded with a view to supplement, the Liszt scholarship at the Royal Academy, has reached the amount of £511 5s. 9d. As this, however, when added to the funds of the Liszt scholarships, although sufficient to defray the educational fees of the Academy, is not sufficient to meet the requirements of students in foreign residence, any further subscriptions will be welcome.

Brahms' Sextet in B flat will be played at Gresham Hall, Brixton, on Wednesday next by Mr. W. C. Hann and his five sons—we believe, an altogether unique performance.

Miss Amy Florence will sing "Ricordanza,' a song on two notes, written for her by Vincenzo Cirillo, at the Eyre Arms Assembly Rooms, St. John's Wood, on Thursday next. An unusually strong programme has been provided.

We understand that a concert is to be given at the St. James's Hall in the course of next month for the benefit of the sisters of the late John Leech.

The programme of the R.A.M. Orchestral Concert, which takes place at St James's Hall on Dec 21, is of unusual interest, and will include Purcell's "Jubilate," Raff's "Ode to Spring," the Andante and Finale from the same composer's Pianoforte Concerto in C minor, and the Andante and Finale from Dr. Mackenzie's Violin Concerto.

ROMEO AND JULIET AT THE GRAND OPERA IN PARIS.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

PARIS, November 29.

The first performance of "Patrie," and the 500th of "Faust" are recent musical festivals that were eclipsed by last night's representation of "Romeo and Juliet." Adelina Patti is a name with which to charm Parisians, and since the day on which she accepted the task of "creating" Juliet at the Opera her visit has been looked forward to with feverish interest. Every word she uttered in London has been faithfully reproduced by the press of this city, and on her arrival last Saturday night she was literally besieged by admirers and journalists at the Hotel Bristol. The fierce light that beats about a throne has been turned on her, and every detail of her daily life has been laid bare in hundreds of Parisian salons. Unfortunately, Madame Patti is forced to limit the number of her performances at the Opera House, but she has been induced to make a concession to the public by promising to sing on Saturday night. Otherwise the probabilities of hearing her were slight for those outside the Tout Paris, which engages its boxes by the year, and a very small official circle. These details, however, may be regarded as superfluous, so it will be well to launch at once into a description of the piece and the performers.

MM. Carré and Barbier's adaptation of Shakespeare, to which Gounod has set such charming music, is not a new one, although two scenes have been added to the work as originally produced at the Lyrique Theatre in 1867, and the Opéra Comique in 1873. But as these new portions are in the middle of the piece, they do not meet the objections to the work as an incomplete adaptation. The prologue proclaims that the death of the ill-starred lovers will heal the hated existing between the Capulets and Montagues, but the French version of Shakespeare is brought to a close with the death of the lovers, and the promise of the prologue remains unfulfilled. It is in front of a majestic gateway that the prologue is chanted by the chorus, which surrounds the principal artists. This unpretending scene gives place to Capulet's ball-room—a perfect marvel of elegance and scenic effect. The fête takes place in a gallery adorned with magnificent frescos, and sparkling with the reflection of many mirrors, and through the windows at the back of the stage is obtained a view of Capulet's park, which stretches away until it is lost in the blue sky in the distance. Tybalt is in a multi-coloured tunic, Mercutio in tunic and cape of dead gold, and Benvolio in an armoured costume. Capulet himself makes his entry in a loose robe leading Juliet, who was really the tender and poetic heroine of Shakespeare. She was charming as she advanced softly and timidly in the brilliant banquet-hall, her eyes sparkling under her magnificent black hair. Through the first and second acts she wore a gown of cream-coloured satin and lace over a groundwork brocaded with rose-buds and dead gold. The corsage was in white velveteen, with gold cord lacings and bordered with pearls. This border was superb, the pearls being divided with tiny balls of gold and rubies. Her black hair hung over her shoulders in long curls, and in her head-dress was almost concealed a magnificent band of pearls. It was in this costume that Madame Patti charmed the audience by her graceful rendering of the famous balcony scene. Romeo was attired from the painting by Carlo Crivelli. He wore a blue and iron-grey tunic; his tights were in a lighter shade of the same colour, which was harmonised by the neutral tint of the doublet. The design for the cloak was taken from the painting of Carpaccio at Venice. This was also of a neutral shade, brocaded with faded flowers, and lined with a silken velvet material. Even as to the sword worn by Romeo tradition's aid had been sought, and it was from the fresco of Pinturicchio at Sienne that the form of weapon was borrowed. Patti's other toilettes were even more astonishing than the first. In the third act the skirt was of terra-cotta toned velvet, over which was worn a robe of faille française. The corsage was laced with gold cords; tiny bonnet en suite, trimmed with black and grey pearls, necklace and cross of black pearls—in fact, the facsimile of the painting of Lorenzo di Pietro. It was in this costume that the marriage ceremony was performed in the cell of Friar Lawrence. In the fourth act Romeo was in black velvet, and Juliet in a negligé dress of dainty white tulle, cut simply in the old Greek style, and fastened at her waist with a girdle. In the final act the artist wore a plain white tulle gown.

The orchestra was conducted by Gounod himself, who appeared delighted with the success of Madame Patti and M. Jean de Reszké. Several times he laid down the baton to applaud the performers, and at the close of the second act, when these artists were recalled, he kissed his hand. It is impossible to say which of the numbers of the charming opera met with the most favour. The marriage scene, the duel scene, and the last scene of all were grand, the balcony scene delicious, the duet, "No, it is not yet day; 'tis the nightingale, not the lark," superb, and also the many little passages that call the master's "Faust" so vividly to mind. Adelina Patti appeared, in the opening act, to pay more attention to her pronunciation than to her voice, and it was remarked in the audience that her performance was slightly wanting in sentiment. But there were passages in which she fairly enchanted her hearers, such as the kissing duet, the valse air, the nightingale duet, and the tragic music at the close. Jean de Reszké had an unqualified success, and excelled himself. This is saying a great deal for the finest Faust ever heard on the stage of the Paris Grand Opéra. The première was a tremendous success, and those who had the pleasure of hearing the performance will retain a life-long recollection of its grandeur.

MR. F. H. COWEN IN AUSTRALIA.

Mr. Cowen was recently entertained at a banquet in Sydney by the professional and amateur musicians of that city. The chair was taken by Sir Patrick Jennings, who referred in highly eulogistic terms to the achievements of the guest of the evening. Mr. Cowen, in reply, spoke of the encouragement he derived from such expressions of sympathy and kindness, and proceeded to say how surprised and gratified he had been by the condition of music amongst them. A good many people at home were under the impression that he was doing nothing at the Exhibition but perform waltzes and polkas, for it was doubtful if an occasional symphony would be well received. So far from that being the case, said Mr Cowen, the classical concerts, where symphonies and Wagnerian music were performed every day, had been the best attended and the most appreciated. Mr. Cowen also spoke with enthusiasm of the organisation which he directed, saying that it would be difficult in the "old country" to get together a chorus of 700 voices which would be kept at work so constantly, with unslackening enthusiasm.

ANOTHER BUBBLE!

> Faust.—Who art thou then?
>
> Mephistopehles—Part of that Power not understood, Which always wills the Bad, and works the Good.
>
> Faust.—What hidden sense in this enigma lies?
>
> Mephistopheles.—I am the Spirit that Denies! And justly so: for all things from the void called forth deserve to be destroyed. 'Twere better there were naught created.—Goethe's "Faust' Scene III.

Every true musician will read with satisfaction and amusement a letter in the current number of the "Musical Times," by Mr. J. F. Rowbotham ("Bubble Rowbotham" as a Boston contemporary insists on calling him) in which that eccentric gentleman attempts to defend himself from the attack of Dr Villiers Stanford which appeared in the November number of the "Nineteenth Century."

It appears that the editor of that magazine very properly refused to allow Mr. Rowbotham a second opportunity of advertising himself and bringing ridicule on its pages by extravagant and blunder-headed remarks on a subject of which he knows little or nothing. It is whispered, we know, that some magazines will print anything by a writer who has made a name, but if this explains the insertion of Mr. Rowbotham's "Bubble" article, the refusal to allow a second exhibition of the kind shows clearly that the "Nineteenth Century" at least, considers that there are limits even to commercial considerations.

In his extremity Mr. Rowbotham threw himself on the mercy of the "Musical Times," whose indulgent editor has, as we think with misplaced kindness, allowed him space for a pied-à-terre. It is instructive to observe, however, that Mr. Rowbotham's remarks appear under "Correspondence," an evidence of prudence which will assuredly not be lost on the intelligent reader.

We have said that every true musician would read the letter with satisfaction; but Wagnerians will find in it special cause for rejoicing. The average music lover will see in it only the discomfiture of a fanatic, but the Wagnerian will see that since the famous article on "Tristan and Isolde," which appeared in the "Daily Telegraph" about twelve years ago, nothing so likely to tell in Wagner's favour has been written. Anti-Wagnerians, and there are still some left, will be inclined to cry "Save us from our friends," and to wish Mr. Rowbotham at the bottom of the sea for bringing them into contempt by so miserably failing to maintain his first position, and playing into the hands of the enemy by letting him see how strong he is. Indeed how little Mr. Rowbotham's exertions have been relished is evident from the fact that not a single writer anywhere has had a word to say in his favour; whilst he has been attacked not only by Dr. Stanford (who by the way is not the "acknowledged spokesman" of Wagnerians as Mr. Rowbotham asserts—and this makes his defence of Wagner all the more significant) but by writers all over the country, and in America. It is perhaps natural that all this should have its effect upon him; and accordingly we are not surprised to find from this letter that Mr. Rowbotham has lost his temper, and with it as a matter of course, his head. No doubt he smiles—after a fashion; and tries to look pleasant—after a fashion; but it is a very sickly smile, and the "pleasant" look is wonderfully like a spiteful grin.

It is annoying, of course—most annoying—to be asked to prove one's statements. To do so entails, in any case, a deal of trouble; and when one's statements have no foundation in fact, it becomes exceedingly awkward and inconvenient. There are in fact only two ways out of such a dilemma. Scrupulous men withdraw and, if strong minded enough, confess their error; unscrupulous men brazen it out. Mr. Rowbotham selected the second course, and it is to the credit of his better nature that he was unable to pursue it with the requisite sang froid. This deserts him to such an extent that he is not even able to quote his adversary correctly. Dr. Stanford, for instance, wrote: "Mr. Rowbotham is confusing two species the lion and the jackals * * * * the literary jackals have blown bubbles it is true," &c. This is the way Mr. Rowbotham quotes:—"He (Dr. Stanford) argues that all contributors to magazines are literary jackals." "All contributors."!! Dr. Stanford pointed but that Wagner and Beethoven brought more money to concert givers than any other composers, and wrote:—"To say that the bubble has burst already is to state what men's eyes, ears and pockets know to be absolutely false." Mr. Rowbotham quotes these words and thus comments: "While candidly admitting that the whole thing is a bubble he tells me I am wrong in saying it has burst yet and grumbles that it still exists to his cost."!! Dr. Stanford, as by this time every one interested in the matter knows, denied the truth of almost every one of Mr. R's statements. Yet we find this sentence early in Mr. R.'s letter. "These facts (sic) * * * are all allowed to pass completely unchallenged (!) by my opponent;" and, later on, this astounding assertion "I cannot deny, he says (mark the 'he says') that Wagner in his music ignores all the past teachings of the art. I cannot deny, &c., &c." Here follow all Mr. Rowbotham's own statements foisted on Dr. Stanford. Of course Dr. Stanford wrote nothing of the sort.

It would be tedious to mention all the inaccuracies into which the perfectly natural excitement of Mr. Rowbotham has betrayed him, and the worst of which is the insertion between inverted commas of words which are not to be found in Dr. Stanford's article. This, among honourable men, is scarcely to be condoned even on the score of temper. But it is, of course, just possible that the inverted commas may have been inserted by the printer, and as Mr. Rowbotham was, no doubt, far too excited to correct his proofs, we willingly avail ourselves of this explanation of a singularly ugly feature of the controversy.

So far the spectacle can cause nothing but satisfaction and amusement to right-minded people. They will be delighted to find that Dr. Stanford has struck home, and they will hugely enjoy the frantic but harmless war-dance offered by Mr. Rowbotham in lieu of argument. But there is another side to the question. Both in his article and in his rejoinder, a disingenuousness is apparent which can have but one effect on honest men; and let us tell Mr. Rowbotham that there are many such even among those who cannot accept Wagner's teachings. By these, candour and fairness are considered of more importance than smart writing and bewildering exhibitions of the art of fence, which are adornments only—valuable in proportion to the worth of that which they are set to embellish. Mr. Rowbotham's tactics in this direction show that, if he were only able to keep his temper, he might aspire to high rank as a party politician. But discussions on art are usually conducted for the purpose of eliciting truth, or at any rate of giving reasons for what is held to be truth. This is certainly not Mr. Rowbotham's object. His purpose in the first instance (vide "Nineteenth Century" for October) was to throw ridicule on Wagner, not to test the soundness of his views or the merits of his art-works. His object now is to throw ridicule on Dr. Stanford, not to test the validity of any of his arguments. All through, one supreme good is kept in view: the exaltation of Rowbotham. "Down with everything and everybody, but up with Rowbotham." He is shrewd enough to know that if a sufficient quantity of mud be thrown, some of it is bound to stick. He knows too that one or two carefully concocted misrepresentations could easily have been set aside, and therefore flings them in handfuls, well aware of the difficulty which would be experienced in refuting them within the limited space of an article. He makes fairly good use of several well-known, but always effective "dodges" for beclouding the points at issue and misleading the inexperienced reader, such as quoting passages without their context for the purpose of giving them a different meaning to that intended by the writer; or assuming a tone of virtuous indignation, as where he complains of Dr. Stanford's "ungenerous treatment" and "unfairness." Then we have our old friend the Odium Theologicum—Wagner is called an "Atheist"; and so on, and so on.

The result of Mr. Rowbotham's two performances—after which we hope he will return to his historical studies, and try to be useful again—may be foretold in the words of Cicero which no doubt Mr. Rowbotham had in his mind when writing:—"MEN OF SENSE WILL ALLOW YOU TO BE ELOQUENT AND FOOLS WILL BELIEVE YOU TO BE IN THE RIGHT."

But Mr. Rowbotham has reckoned on too many fools. They abound certainly, but not among the readers either of the "Nineteenth Century" or of the "Musical Times."

"LONDON'S MUSICAL TASTE."

Such is the title of an article recently contributed to the New York World by Mr. Jerome Hopkins, a transatlantic pianist whose concert-lectures have been the astonishment of all who have heard them; the astonishment arising from precisely those features which have hitherto prevented us from mentioning them in these columns. With an inconsistency which, it must be admitted, is shared by other critics than Mr. Jerome Hopkins, he professes to have discovered many of these features in our own musical system. Insincerity, sensationalism, mediocrity in performance, vulgarity, plagiarism—all these faults are urged against us by Mr. Jerome Hopkins. The critical half-brick, however, may hurt the recipient head none the less that it was aimed by grimy hands; and, were the criticisms of Mr. Jerome Hopkins, the gifted composer of "Toffee and old Munch," and the "Kangaroo" étude, anything more than a re-statement, in typically exaggerated forms of what are counted as truisms by all thinking men amongst ourselves, we would gladly hail the gentleman in question as a new Daniel come to judgment. As it is, we must confess that the prophet's mantle ill beseems the shoulders of Mr. Jerome Hopkins; he would appear to have stolen the garment in question from some minor prophet who, perchance, had strayed into a piano-lecture in Bloomsbury Hall, and there fallen asleep. We are, for instance, informed that "the public love noise better than tone, and high sounds better than low ones; therefore it behoves all singers to be soprani rather than contralti, and tenori than bassi. Then we are given a short disquisition on the evils of the "royalty" system, and are told that the strength of English composers goes into the old-fashioned oratorio, cantata, and royalty ballad, because they pay the best—"when it is not comic opera," excepts Mr. Hopkins, in language less picturesque than peculiar. There are, however, two paragraphs of the article which, it must in justice be admitted, contain more than a form of truth, though overstated in characteristic style, and couched still in a language which may, or may not, be English, according to the literary standpoint, which may not without profit be quoted in extenso:

"As for composers of oratorios, it is surprising how numerous they are, when one realises that the only avenue to a public hearing is through the keyhole of some one of the yearly musical festivals in the provincial cities—Leeds, Birmingham, and Gloucester. Naturally, but a limited number is sufficient to supply the demand. But it is truly astonishing to one soaked with the best musical lore of German, Italian, French, and Russian musical genius to realise what simple innocuous music is here accepted as 'new' by these festival committees. The critics, too, fall right into line with the prevailing conservatism, and have the funniest ways of protecting their friends, the kleptomaniacal composers, by traditionally damnatory faint praise. Thus I read the other day in one of the London papers about a certain quartet which was a specially bold theft, 'The author has admirably caught the spirit of so and so.' The ghost of some dead composer or other, I suppose, was meant.

"If certain phrases and harmonic progressions are not absolutely cacophonous, and are sung in a sufficiently stentorian manner by the truly Titanic armies of performers congregated here, they seem to pass muster, for I have often thought, while listening to these monster English choruses, of two trite quotations—one from Scripture, 'Great is Diana of the Ephesians,' and the other from Wordsworth's poem on the 'Katydid,' 'Thou say'st an undisputed thing in such a solemn way.' It is thus with the way in which these dear perfunctory English singers announce the trite platitudes of Handel, Haydn, and Rossini, and talk about them afterwards as if they had never been new, and as if they were the only music in the world. Sound seems to count as of the first importance here. Ideas are entirely secondary. And to get a jury of one's peers by which to judge of a new score you would have to sift the English centuries."

When the force of these last remarks has been admitted, it remains to be seen whether the criticisms as a whole gain any new weight of authority from the lips of Mr. Jerome Hopkins.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Advertisements of Concerts, &c., will be received up to 4 p.m. on Thursdays, if addressed to the Manager, 138a, Strand, W.C. "The Musical World" is the recognised medium for advertising London, Suburban, and Provincial Concerts, and has no other address whatever for the reception of communications.

Knighthood of the Legion of Honour, 1878. Knight Commander of Villa Viregа, 1883. Gold Medals at the principal International Exhibitions.

JOHN BRINSMEAD & SONS'

PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOFORTES ARE FOR SALE, FOR HIRE, and on the THREE YEARS' SYSTEM.

The perfection of Touch, Tone, and Durability.

JOHN BRINSMEAD AND SONS, Pianoforte Manufacturers, 18, 20, 22, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W.

THE "EMPRESS" PIANOS

ARE the best value in the market. Workmanship cannot be surpassed. Touch and tone unequalled. Professors and others are invited to inspect these beautiful instruments. Prices from 20 guineas. Ten years' guarantee with every instrument. Messrs. Chudleigh Bros., 140, Strand, London.

£10 10s. PIANOS.

PIANOFORTES (High-class) for the Million, £10 10s. Full compas, 7 octaves. Warranted. THE LONDON MUSIC PUBLISHING COMPANY (Limited) Originators of the "Ten Guinea" Pianoforte.
54, Great Marlborough Street, W.

DRESSMAKING MADE EASY for 2/6, by using the SYMMETRICAL DRESS PATTERN. Lessons in Dress Cutting till perfect, £2 2s. inclusive.—Write, Miss HEMMENS, 19, Queen Street, Bryanston Square, London, W.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE, and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be of the greatest efficacy in every form of disease. Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.

Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT, 78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 3, or by letter

THE RIGHT HON. LORD KNUTSFORD, G.C.M.G. Engravings from the original Portrait of Lord Knutsford, by J. F. Acret, are now being issued. Steel Line Engraving, by Harold Bourne. Artist's proof, £1 1s., Enfield House Studio, Windmill Hill, Hampstead.

Musical World Portraits.

DECEMBER 15 MADAME BELLE COLE.

Publishers' Announcements.

NEW PART SONGS FOR S.A.T.B.
By W. W. PEARSON.

'Tis Morn! (Edwin Oxenford)	3d.
The Oyster Dredgers	2d.
Welcome, young Spring	2d.
Off to Sea (Edward Oxenford)	4d.
HUMOROUS PART SONGS.
Three Doughtie Men (30th thousand)	3d.
Three Children Sliding (6th thousand)	3d.
A Ryghte Merrie Geste	4d.
The Snow-white Doe (just published)	4d.
Ben Bowlegs (Edward Oxenford)	3d.
The Carrion Crow	3d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO., 1, Berners Street, W.

ROECKEL'S PATENT PAMPHONIA.

Model Music Staff with Movable Lines, for teaching rapidly the three clefs and general notation.

Particulars and Testimonials post free.

Messrs. CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.
AND ALL MUSICSELLERS.

Publishers' Announcements—continued.

LOVE'S GOLDEN DREAM. Lindsay Lennox.

LOVE'S GOLDEN DREAM (Lindsay Lennox).—This charming song will be SUNG by Mr. SIMS REEVES, during the coming season. 2s. net. "A charming new waltz-song, sure to become popular, and will most probably become a rage this season. It is one of those pretty little morsels of which one does not tire in a hurry."—Northamptonshire Guardian. — London Music Publishing Company (Limited), 54, Great Marlborough-street, W.

VIOLIN TUTOR.

PRACTICAL VIOLIN SCHOOL, for Home Students. A Practical Book of Instructions and Exercises in Violin Playing, for the use of Amateurs, Self-learners, Teachers and others. By J. M. FLEMING. 1 vol., demy 4to, cloth gilt, price 7s. 6d.; also in monthly parts, 7d. "Can be heartily recommended to students who wish to lay a solid foundation for good and artistic playing."—Musical Standard.

London: L. UPCOTT GILL, 170, Strand, W.C.

TO COMPOSERS,—RIDGEWAY and CO., Music Publishers 10, Argyll Street, W. undertake the REVISING, PRINTING, and PUBLISHING of Musical Works upon exceptionally low terms. The finest work in the trade. Estimates upon receipt of MSS. IMPORTANT.—Composers' Works included in Catalogue and introduced without extra charge.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of
A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR
THE VOICE,
By T. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 27, Harley Street, W.

THE VOICE.

A Complete Explanation of the Throat and its Functions in Breathing and in the Production of Voice, will be found in

"ELOCUTION, VOICE, & GESTURE."
By RUPERT GARRY.

Remedies for Clearing and Strengthening the Voice, and for the Cure of Hoarseness, Sore Throat, and other derangements of the Breathing Tubes.

"The section on the Voice is well considered and trustworthy, based as is on the writings of authorities on the question of the Hygiene of the Vocal Organs."—STAGE.

"The Book contains many valuable hints in regard to Voice and Gesture."—VOICE (New York).

POST FREE, 1s. 2d.

London: Bemrose, 23, Old Bailey, E.C., and of the Author, at his residence, 49, Torrington Square, W.C.

IN SIX GRADES,
Price Two Shillings each.
Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:
A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,
By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWANN SONNENSCHEIN and CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE;
And all Book and Music Sellers.

The Organ World.

SOME SUGGESTED MODIFICATIONS OF DAY'S HARMONY, TO MEET THE VARIOUS OBJECTIONS RAISED AGAINST HIS THEORY.

PAPER READ BY DR. C. W. PEARCE, F.C.O., BEORE THE COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

(Concluded from page 190.)

Sir John Stainer is perhaps one of the principal objectors to Day's fanciful and unreal distinction made between so-called "artificial and fundamental discords." I need not waste time by describing the very familiar prepared discords of the 'Ancient Strict or Diatonic Scale" and the unprepared discords of the "Modern Free or Chromatic Style." Most of you have read either Day or Macfarren, and know exactly what I mean. Suffice it to say now that Mr. Prout met the objection very well upon Day's own ground - viz., that all these Diatonic prepared Discords could be readily derived from some one or other of the three arbitrarily selected roots before mentioned, they could very well be classed under the head of Modern Free and *un*Chromatic Discords prepared as Day would have us believe by nature herself.

I pass on to the third weak point—that of incorrectly deriving and treating concords and discords by a process either contrary to ordinary natural phenomena, or outside the reach of physical observation altogether.

This objection to Day's book was made in the most convincing, crushing manner by Mr. G. F. Cobb, in the paper previously alluded to. I strongly advise all who have not done so, to read it as soon as they can: it is one of the most valuable papers ever written, and perhaps has only one fault—viz., that it does not offer any suggestions for building up an improved system in the place of that which it endeavours so unflinchingly to destroy.

For the benefit of those who may not have had the opportunity of hearing or reading Mr. Cobb's paper, I will here—as briefly as I can—recapitulate some of his chief arguments, as they are most necessary for the intelligible reception of those remarks of mine which will follow.

Mr. Cobb points out that Musical Sounds may be considered under three aspects :—

(1) Their cause and mode of transmission. (2) Their reception by our external sense—the ear. (3) Their effect, after that reception, on our internal sense or musical feeling.

The first two of these aspects are recognised branches of physical science; the third (depending upon that hidden world of subtle processes of the brain into which the light of science has not yet penetrated, and in which, what we call mind, will, and choice hold sway), is best described as physical. Science has hitherto entirely failed to discover any difference between the ear of the musician and the ear of the non-musician, therefore, as an argument to start with, if the process by which we are made sensible of a difference in the pitch of sounds which are presented to us is a fault which resided in the brain, not in the ear—is in fact an operation of our inner, not of our outer sense - it is clear, that if physiology cannot determine this elementary point for us, it can as yet play very little part in our advanced investigations of harmony. It is one thing to describe and account for the means whereby differences of musical effect are produced and are producible; it is quite another to explain what may be termed preferences of effect. It is too readily assumed that because such and such tonal results are shown to be produced by such and such physical causes, therefore we are in duty bound in all cases to like them.

Musical psychics may be defined as the endeavour to ascertain and to describe the notes and combinations of notes which can be used in more or less intimate, but always distinguishable and agreeable relationship, to the one arbitrarily selected note which we call the Tonic. The phenomena of psychical music demand more careful and discriminating methods of investigation than those of physical music, inasmuch as being psychical, they are of their very nature occult, and recondite, and are incapable of being submitted to corroborative testimony —that is, the testimony of other senses than the one which is immediately concerned with them. Thus, Physical music can be calculated by arithmetic, felt by the finger, heard through the resonator, scrutinised under the microscope, measured with a foot rule, tested by the electric spark. Not so psychical music; yet its effects can be observed, noted, classified if only they be submitted to a skilled but different kind of scrutiny. Rules and regulations for psychical music have been made; but nearly every important step in the march of musical development has been taken in the teeth of them, and they lie so buried under the impressible growth of exceptions, as to assume the position of being far more honoured in the breach than in the observance. Under these circumstances, it is not unnatural that the phenomena of physical music should have been seized and welcomed as a kind of beacon light on a midnight sea of confusion, and that musical theorists should have been attracted to them by the hope of finding a new and more hopeful way of treating the subject. Thus, these theories owe their existence far more to the idea that they would form an escape from a previous state of chaos than from any clear recognition of the nature of the principles involved in them. But in any good, true, and educational system no amount of supposed à posteriori convenience can justify the toleration of à priori absurdity. Assuming the correspondence between psychics and physics in music to be successfully established, we are bound to the acceptance of one of three propositions :—

(1) We like physical music because we prefer the series of sounds it gives us to any other series.

(2) We like it because we have been so created as to make it impossible for us not to like it, without doing violence to our own nature.

(3) We like it because its presence is so incessantly with us that having got so accustomed to it, we prefer it to any other.

In fact, we like it either from choice, from necessity, or from habit.

EXAMINATIONS IN LITERARY WORK.

It is not seldom that one hears it said of musicians that they are uneducated men. Indeed some people seem to think that organists must almost necessarily be men of no education and no position. An organist called at a clergyman's house to ask for particulars respecting a vacant organistship, and, learning during the interview that the clergyman made it a matter of principle to choose the tunes himself, said he thought the choice of the tunes ought to be left to the organist if he were a competent man. The clergyman's wife here joined the controversy, and the respect in which she held the profession may be gathered from her remark: "I have a good cook, but I should not like her to choose the dishes" (?) The ridiculous expression, "He is only an organist," is common enough among unmusical people, who seem almost disposed to class modern church musicians with the merry minstrels and jongleurs of a by-gone period. While not agreeing with what is said by people that talk at random, the sincere friends and well-wishers of the church musicians must probably feel themselves compelled to admit that organists are not always as well educated as they might be. No serious person would require that church musicians should be great classical scholars, or expect every organist to be a Herschel; but everyone interested in church music would be glad to see the old reproach of ignorance removed from organists, and the professional status generally raised.

The Universities, formerly contented to admit, as candidates for musical degrees, men who could produce a letter from a Master of Arts certifying that they were "qualified in manners and learning to be members of the University," now require that such candidates shall pass a stiff examination in literary work. Probably the authorities may smile when they hear the examination called a "stiff" one. But although Responsions, the Previous Examination, the Senior Local Examination, the Dublin Examination, and Martriculation at London, must appear quite elementary tests of scholarship in their eyes, musicians find them very hard. Even undergaduates, who are professedly reading for a B.A. degree, find "Smalls" and "Little Go" sufficiently difficult; and the other examinations are a little easier. Indeed the examinations in literary work are so stiff that unless a musician pass them in his youth, when the education he received at school—and it must be no mean one—is still fresh in his memory, there is but very little chance that he will ever pass at all. An organist's time is fully occupied; his duties are many and onerous; he must devote some time every day to practising the organ and piano, and extending his acquaintance with the great masters; early and late he is teaching—probably the most fatiguing of all work. If amid the anxiety and toil of a professional life he did find himself able to spare time for preparing for a stiff examination in Latin, mathematics, and a modern language, it is not likely his wearied brain would be equal to the work that would be required of it. The writer would not willingly be guilty of exaggeration, but he believes that if a schoolmaster, who had an ear for music but knew nothing of theory, and a fine musician, who knew no Latin or mathematics, started together for the purpose of obtaining a degree in music, and the candidates were of the same age and equal ability, and had the same perseverance and opportunities for study, the chances are that if either ever arrived at the end of the course, the schoolmaster would not come in second. If musical degrees are given for knowledge and skill in music, it seems strange that they should be as much within the grasp of the unmusical scholars as that of the unlettered musician.

It is said that only educated men ought to hold university degrees, and many agree with this and hold that it is quite right that candidates for the degree of Mus. Bac., should be obliged to pass an examination in literary work. But the examinations are far too hard; they require too much of musicians. If the Universities had required candidates to pass some simple examination—such as the Oxford or the Cambridge Junior Local Examination—they would have asked no more than musicians might perhaps have done, and yet enough to guarantee that their musical graduates were men of some education. When men were admitted as candidates for musical degrees without any examination in literary work, probably uneducated men sometimes became Bachelors and Doctors of Music. And if the Universities, when they found the old scheme faulty, had insisted upon candidates passing a really elementary examination in Latin, mathemathics, English subjects, and a modern language, no one could have complained of those learned bodies. But good musicians have cause to complain when they know that they are being debarred by the interposition of a stiff examination in literary work (which is not their proper subject), from appearing before the University Professors of Music in their true characters as musicians. Even to to the many excellent musicians who have not altogether forgotten their Latin and mathematics, this examination is a stumbling block, whilst the case of musicians who have forgotten their school work must be more hopeless. Absolutely hopeless must be the case of those who never had what is called a good education—and yet some of these men, if they came before the Professor of Music, might be found to be musical geniuses. In the worlds estimation a musician with degree in music often takes precedence of one who has not, and it seems a little hard that the universities should close their gates against really good men. Everyone knows experienced musicians—men of great musical skill and learning, and of cultivated taste—who can never take a degree, simply because they have not passed in the literary portion of the work in youth, and, busily engaged in earning a livelihood, they cannot find the time and bear the excessive mental exertion necessary to pass the examination in after-life. Its is excessively hard on such men that they are effectually shut out from obtaining a degree, which very young men, fresh from a good school, can get without any very great difficulty.

But if the universities at present demand far too much of candidates for musical degrees, surely no musician should go to the other extreme, and ignore the importance of a fair general education. That an education is useful to musicians, as well as to other people, is certain. Some subjects are, indeed, of more practical utility than others to musicians, and on these stress might be laid. The hope has been expressed that the College of Organists—an institution held in high regard by church musicians and the clergy—would hold examinations in literary work, leaving it to candidates themselves to decide whether they would sit for them or not. If the College held such examinations, one would fancy that papers would be set in arithmetic, English grammar, geography, English history, a modern language, and (perhaps) algebra. A fair knowledge of the first four is expected of all who claim to be educated people. Arithmetic is of real use to the musician. In some branches of musical study a knowledge of it is absolutely necessary. In the Middle Ages great attention was given to the study of scientific or speculative, as distinguished from practical music, and we find music together with arithmetic, geometry, and astronomy, forming a quadrivium of mathematical sciences. The early musicians must have been good mathematicians. Indeed, many of them distinguished themselves as astrologers, and no less worthies than John de Muris and Walter Odington are said to have excelled in that singular science. For a long time an acquaintance with the abstruse and speculative writings of Boethius was required of candidates for musical degrees. Happily, we have changed all that, and music is no longer a branch of mathematics. But a knowledge of arithmetic is necessary to the student who wishes to follow intelligently the early history of music, which deals so much with the speculations and theories of philosophers and theorists. The great composers probably knew nothing of acoustics; certainly they could not have been acquainted with the recent discoveries in that science. Helmholtz points out that Palestrina generally uses the tetrards in the best positions, and adds that "as the existence of combinational tones was not then known, we can only conclude that his fine ear led him to do so." But, rightly or wrongly, a knowledge of acoustics is required of music students, and in reading this science and the theory of temperament, practice in arithmetic, especially in fractions, ratio, and proportion, and in squaring and extracting the square root of numbers, is quite necessary. Even in double and multiple counterpoint a practised arithmetician would probably learn faster than a person who had forgotten his arithmetic. In order to spare candidates useless labour, certain portions of the subject would not be asked for, such as interest, stocks, profit and loss, cube root; and no English church musician would question the importance of a knowledge of the elements of English grammar. And it will probably be conceded that all organists should all know the main outlines of English history, and have a fair knowledge of the continents and oceans, with their leading physical features, the division of continents into countries, and the government and religion and principal towns and places of interest in those countries. For the modern language, German would probably be considered to be quite the best. It is a fine language, and, when the rudiments are once mastered, very fascinating; and it is perhaps as good mental training as Latin. A knowledge of it is invaluable to musicians, as English translations of many excellent German theoretical works are not published. Probably our examiners would permit candidates to substitute French or Italian for German, if they preferred to do so. To be able to read a little Italian would certainly be very useful. Whichever language candidates chose, fairly easy questions would be set in the grammar and a bit of prose given for translation into English. It is interesting and curious to read what Tarlino, a contemporary of Palestrina, thought about the education of musicians. According to this famous theorist, a man, in order to be a complete musician, must know arithmetic (to be able to calculate musical proportions) and geometry (to measure them), must understand the monochord and harpsichord (to try experiments and effects), must be able to tune (in order to accustom the ear to distinguish and judge of intervals), must be able to sing with truth and taste, and perfectly understand counterpoint, should be a grammarian (in order to write correctly and set words with propriety), should know the history of his art, should be a master of logic (to reason upon, and investigate the more abstruse parts of it), and of rhetoric (to express his thoughts with precision), and should know something of natural philosophy and the philosophy of sound (that his ears being perfectly exercised and purified may not be easily deceived). If German is useful in enabling the musician to read many excellent modern treatises on music, a knowledge of Latin would be no less helpful if he wished to read the old Latin treatises. As much fine and interesting music has been written to Latin words, and Latin phrases occur in books on theory, an acquaintance with the language is, no doubt, useful to musicians. But, as regards the old treatises, the knowledge of Latin sufficient to enable men to read them, is to be only after very long study—and, after all, few men wish to become musical antiquaries. The old church composers probably knew Latin. In his well-known book Albrechtsberger relates a charming little story about himself and Haydn, and permits us to see a canon which he sent with a few lines of Latin—probably of his own composing—to that delightful composer. On the whole, Latin, beyond enabling them to understand the sense of the words of many fine church compositions, is not of much use to modern organists, and we should not expect to find it in the list of subjects for examination. Euclid would be a useless study for a musician. Admirably calculated to strengthen the reasoning powers, it would rather injure than improve the faculty of imagination so prized by artists. Algebra is of some use to students of music, as the formulas in acoustics are expressed algebraically, and perhaps a paper might be set which would require an acquaintance with the elements of this science as far as easy fractions and simple equations. But as so slight a knowledge of the subject would not be of much use—and more could not reasonably be expected of musicians—probably the authorities would deem it better to omit algebra.

The subjects, then, of such an examination as we have been imagining would be arithmetic, English grammar, geography, English history, a modern language, and, perhaps, a little algebra. A sound knowledge of the elements of each subject would be required, special stress being laid on certain parts of arithmetic. Bad spelling would count against candidates. As the object of the examiners would be to see if candidates had carefully prepared the subjects, fair, straightforward questions would be set, and care would be taken to avoid perplexing students, or setting papers of too great difficulty. Musicians who decided to sit for the examination might prepare themselves for it without any very great labour; and, as they would know beforehand that failing to pass it would not disqualify them for the examination in music, they would work comfortably, and have no cause whatever for uneasiness.

While the examinations in literary work held by the Universities in connection with examinations in music are far too stiff, the examination suggested here as suited to a college of musicians would not be found too difficult. There can be no doubt that if optional examinations in literary work were held, and organists availed themselves of them, much good would be the result. And not the least important among the benefits the system would confer on organists would be the certain rise of the profession in the public estimation.

R.B.D.

A NEW DEPARTURE.

The following appeared in the "Monthly Musical Record," under the heading:—

"THE FLOOD," A READING IN CHURCH RECITATION AND CHORUS, WITH ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENT.

The words selected by J. Powell Metcalfe; the music by Cornelius Gurlitt.

It is a world-wide truth that is stored up in the old proverb, "There is nothing new under the sun." The acorn is planted, and from it comes in due time of yearly growth the young tree fit for its own special uses—but let it grow and grow and grow, and at length the noble oak stands out in the landscape with all its beauty of intricate outline and all its glory of varied tints. If the useful young tree is again needed, we must start again from the acorn with the old process of growth. Something like this life of the forest giant seems to have been the origin of our present noble oratorio—with its beauty of interwoven theme and its glory of varied orchestration—it seems to have sprung and grown up from a very acorn. Its name, oratorio, leads us back to the day when in the adjacent Chapter-house, or in some building in which "prayer was wont to be made," one of the brethren of the monastery recited sacred stories to the people, which a choir of brethren illustrated and quickened by occasional chorus—the idea most probably derived from the classic Greek plays. As music doubtless most simple and inartistic, but an acorn that grew and grew with the gradual development of that art that shall never fail, till it stands revealed for the delight of man in an Israel in Egypt, an Elijah, or a Brahms's Requiem. And long and true be the great succession, ever increasing in beauty and glory.

But is not the primitive idea of oratorio—sacred story recited—quickened, interpreted, and brought home by interspersed chorus, worth a revival? Let any one who doubts as to the answer carefully look over Mr. Gurlitt's Reading, 'The Flood,' and see how a master of modern art can breathe beauty and interest into the old idea.

The recitation, though given to the orthodox G with its accustomed cadences, leaves ample scope for oratorical delivery—indeed, Mr. Gurlitt authorises the simple reading of the story—if it be thought that it can be better so enforced: in either case the chords and symphonies are to be used: and very unwilling indeed will any one be to leave them out who has once seen what marvellous musical vignettes they are—see, for instance, how a few notes of symphony are made to tell the whole story of the Dove. The choruses as a rule are very marvels of simplicity—long stretches of monotone are invested with fitting interest by the clever accompaniment of the organ—the melody is always natural and beautiful; it would be difficult to name a more charming movement than that which introduces the third part, the Rainbow—the subject, by recurrence in symphony, being used most skilfully to link emblem and promise together in succeeding numbers. The composer has most wisely held himself at liberty to give to fugues certain words that seemed to claim such treatment.

Assuredly this work will find a hearty and general welcome, for there is an increasing feeling among Christian thinkers that we have come to a time when it would be most desirable to revive another old use, namely, the Reading of the Great Bible to those who would gather to hear — that did so much to help forward the work of the Reformation. In these days of cheap Bibles the simple reading could scarcely be revived, but the singing grant in our elementary schools is year by year opening the ears of our people to the language of sound till music has acquired a new meaning and power to the people at large; and the two ancient uses may unite their streams in the reading in Church Recitation and Chorus, fulfilling the purpose of both. And is it too much to hope that such Bible readings to the people may become a bond of kindly brotherhood between Churchmen and Nonconformists? Even if were to be desired—which after all is a question with two sides—that there should be but one form of Church order throughout our free land, no one who knows our nation's history could for one moment think of such uniformity practicable. The long, long years of struggle against the Church of Rome that hard-fisted Henry VIII. terminated by putting himself at the head of the Anglican Church, that long struggle must have left, and did leave, behind it the latent antagonism of blood-feud against the Church, even when nationalised to the full. Nonconformity is the natural outcome of our nation's past history—and Nonconformity itself in its variety of form only reflects the jumble of nationalities that make up the English people. But with all this divergence of use and opinion there remains one rock on which all our feet are planted, and that is our English Bible. These are dangerous days, and wise men will not be anxious to search out in what way they differ but in what they agree. "Sirs, ye are brethren," and cannot brother Christian stand shoulder to shoulder with brother Christian, and tell forth to the people in music—the one universal language of the world—the stories and truths of God's word, without first calling on each other to say his or her special and particular catechism? This will come about, this must come about, if composers will supply us with readings like Mr. Gurlitt's "The Flood." The work here spoken of has been published by Messrs. Augener and Co.

SPECIFICATIONS.

SNEINTON CHURCH, Nottingham.—The organ, which has been enlarged and cleaned by Messrs. Brindley and Foster, Sheffield, at a cost of £180, now contains:

GREAT ORGAN.—Lieblich Bourdon, 16; Open Diapason, 8; Lieblich Gedact, 8; Principal, 4; Mixture, 2 ranks; Trumpet, 8.

CHOIR ORGAN.—Dulciana, 8; Salcional, 8; Wald Flute, 4; Clarionet, 8.

PEDAL ORGAN.—Bourdon, 16; Open Diapason, 16.

SWELL ORGAN.—Double Diapason, 16; Open Diapason, 8; Vox Angelica, 8; Voix Celestes, 8; Principal, 4; Oboe, 8; Horn, 8; Mixture, 3 ranks; Voix Humaine, 8; Tremulant.

COUPLERS.—Swell to Great, Swell to Choir, Swell to Pedal, Great to Pedal, Choir to Pedal, Composition Pedals, 4.

Mr. C. F. Hole, the organist and director of the choir, gave a recital on November 25. The programme was as follows: Offertoire, Hainworth; Nocturne, Gower; Prelude and Fugue in G, Mendelssohn; Anthem, "As pants the Hart," Spohr; Adoremus, Ravina; Barcarole from 4th Concerto, Sterndale Bennett; Anthem, "King all Glorious," Barnby. Postlude in E flat, Wely. Spohr's Oratorio, "The Last Judgment," will be rendered on the second Sunday in Advent.

RECITAL NEWS.

Catterick Church.—On the 21st of November the combined choirs of Yorkshire held a very successful choral festival. The Richmond, Catterick, Easby, Gilling, Grinton, Hipswell, Hudswell, and Marske choirs took part in the proceedings. Mr. James Callow, organist of St. Mary's Parish Church, Richmond, conducted, and the anthem was the "Hallelujah" Chorus from the "Messiah." Mr. Thomas H. Collinson, Mus. Bac., organist of St. Mary's Cathedral, Edinburgh, presided at the organ, and gave a recital after the service.

Town Hall, Birmingham.—On November the 22nd Mr. C. W. Perkins, organist of the Town Hall, gave an organ recital in the presence of a large audience. The programme included Bach's Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Turpin's Fantasia on the "Vesper Hymn," Batiste's offertoire in D major, and Meyerbeer's overture, "L'Etoile du Nord."

St. George's Hall, Liverpool.—The following pieces were played by Mr. W. T. Best on the 22nd and 24th November:—Offertoire in A major, Chauvet; Andantino from the Sonata in A minor, Op. 164, Schubert; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Duet, "Dans ce séjour," Rossini; Andante in A major (posthumous work), Smart; Overture, "Le Duc d'Olonne," Auber; Marche aux Flambeaux, No. 1, C minor, Meyerbeer; Pastoral Chorus, "Guillaume Tell," Act 1, Rossini; Andante in A minor, Op. 122, Merkel; Overture for the Organ in F minor, Morandi; Air with Variations in E major, Op. 60, Weber; Finale to the Fourth Organ Symphony, Widor.

New Public Hall, Preston.—Mr. James Tomlinson gave a recital in the above hall on November 22, with the following programme:—Grand Concerto, Handel; Storm Fantasia, Lemmens; Selection from Sullivan's "The Yeomen of the Guard"; Overture to "Martha," Flotow; Ballet Music from "Sylvia," Delibes; Military March, Gounod.

Immanuel Church, West Brixton,—On November the 29th, Mr. F. G. Brooker gave a recital at the above church, playing the following programme:—Sonata in A minor, Gladstone; Fugue in A flat, Brosig; Theme in A flat, Hiles; Scherzo in A minor, Best; Cavatina in D, Raff; Barcarolle from 4th Concerto, Bennett; Sing unto God ("Judas Maccabeus"), Handel.

St. Peter's Brockley.—On the occasion of the re-opening of the organ on Nov. 7, an organ recital was played by Dr. Frost. The following was the programme:—Andante grazioso, Fantasia with Choral, H. Smart; Andante, Dubois; Fantasia, Petrali; La Carita, Rossini; Preghiera, Capocci; Overture in E, Morandi.—On Nov. 14, an Organ Recital was given by Dr. C. W. Pearce, F.C.O., with the following programme:—Sonato No. 2, Meditation for All Saints' Day, C. W. Pearce; Vorspiel zu Parsifal, R. Wagner; Grand March, E. Silas; Adagio Cantabile, Dr. E. J. Hopkins; Choral Song and Fugue, Dr. S. S Wesley; A Study on the Cambridge Chimes, G. F. Cobb, M.A.; Postlude in E. flat major, Dr. F. E. Gladstone.—On Nov. 21, and Organ Recital was given by G. B. Gilbert, Esq., F.C.O., when he played the following pieces: Sonata No. 5, in D, Mendelsshon; "Air with Variations," Dr. Rea; "Andante con Moto," Dr. Garret; "Con Moto Moderato in D, H. Smart; "Cantiléne Pastorale," "Marche Réligieuse," Guilmant.

St. James's, Hatcham.—At this church an Organ Recital was given on Nov. 27, with the following programme; Offertoire in D, Wely; Variation on a Ground Bass (Organ Concerto), Handel; Fugue in G Minor, J. S Bach; Andante in A, H. Smart; Fest Fantasie on a Choral, C. Steinhäusen; Idyll, Dudley Buck; Andante (Op. 16), Beethoven; Toccata, H. Schellenberg; Andante (Symphony No. 4), Mendelssohn; Overture to "Last Judgment," Spohr. The organist being Mr. E. H. Turpin.

Ockley Church.—The organ in the above church was reopened on Sunday, Nov. 25, after having been rebuilt and enlarged by Mr. Holdich, of London. Mr. C. G. Sadler, A.C.O., presided at the organ, and during the day played the following selection:—Fugue in C minor, Bach; Intermezzo, Macbeth; Nun's Prayer, Wely; Andante in E, Batiste; Festival March, Dunster; Largo in G, Handel; "O Rest in the Lord," and "If with all your Hearts," Mendelssohn; Evening Prayer, Smart; War March of the Priests, Mendelssohn.

Moseley Road Wesleyan Chapel, Birmingham.—An Organ Recital was given by Mr. A. T. Robinson, A.C.O., on November 28. The programme included: Prelude and Fugue in G major, Bach; Allegretto in B flat, Lemmens; Fantasia in E minor (the storm), Lemmens; and Overture in E minor and major, Morandi. Mr. A. T. Robinson's skilful performance was thoroughly appreciated.

NOTES.

The Rev. Edward Husband, Incumbent of St. Michael's, Folketone, occupies the position of organist of his own church. During, the last fifteen years the reverend gentleman has given 200 organ recitals.

A handsome organ has been erected in St. George's Church Glasgow, by Messrs. Harrison, of Durham, who are to be congratulated on the tasteful design of the instrument. The organ was inaugurated recently. Mr. R. Felvus Henn, who was so favourably received at the organ recitals in the Exhibition, has been appointed organist of St. George's.

Messrs. Puttick and Simpson sold, last Wednesday, the Library of Music belonging to J. T. Frye, Esq., the late organist of Saffron Walden, which included oratorios, operas and cantatas, numerous editions of Handel's works, Church music, anthems of the Early English School, choral works in score and parts, psalm and hymn tune books, collections of glees and old English songs, books on music and musical periodicals, the Musical Times from the commencement in 1844 to 1887, sets of concertos, symphonies, overtures, etc., as well as organ and pianoforte music.

Mr. Alfred Kirkland has erected an organ for the Rev. W. S. Smart, Curate and Precentor to St. Clement Danes' Church, Strand, at his residence, 40, Marlborough Road. The Organ which has two manuals, is enclosed in a pitch pine case, and is blown by a Blennerhassett hydraulic engine.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS,

On Tuesday, December 4, Dr. C. W. Pearce, F.C.O., read an admirable paper on the "Modern treatment of Ancient Ecclesiastical Melodies." Illustrations were excellently rendered by Messrs. Pearce, Holmes (violin), Wheeler (Organist of St. Luke's, Old Street). Some of these were compositions by the lecturer, displaying much genius and contrapuntal skill. Dr. Pearce treated the subject with much learning and sound judgment. Dr. E. J. Hopkins ably occupied the chair, and delivered some very interesting remarks.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS CALENDAR.

On Tuesday next the Library will be open from 7 to 9.

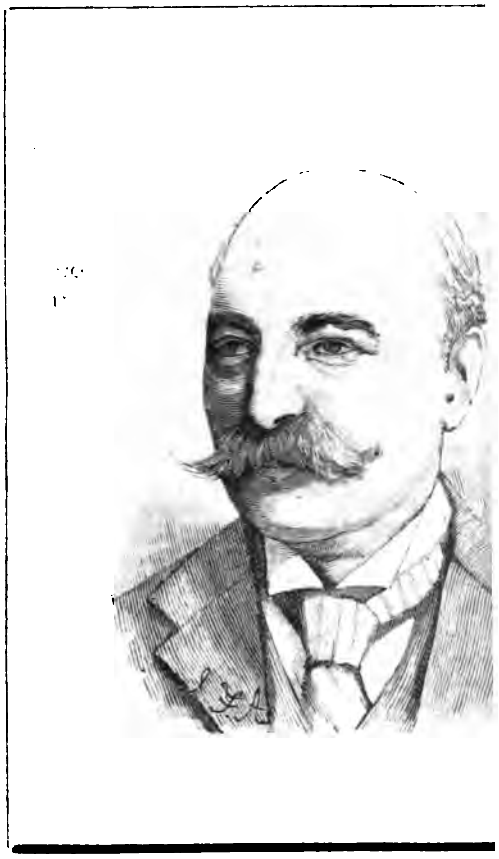
January 8—F.C.O., Examination (Paper work). Jan. 9—F.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). January 10—F.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). January 11—Diploma Distribution. January 15—A.C.O., Examination (Paper work). January 16—A.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). January 17—A.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). January 18—Diploma Distribution. February 5—Dr. F. J. Sawyer, F.C.O., will read a paper on "The History of the Theory of Harmony." March 5—Lecture. April 2—Lecture. April 29—Annual College Dinner. May 7—Lecture. June 4—Lecture. July 16—F.C.O., Examination (Paper work). July 17-18—F.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). July 19—Diploma Distribution. July 23—A.C.O., Examination (Paper work). July 24-25—A.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). July 26—Diploma Distribution. July 30—Annual General Meeting.

Candidates for the forthcoming Examination should send in their names before January 1.

Further arrangements and particulars will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Secretary.

95, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury.



HERR POLLITZER.

HERR POLLITZER, the well-known leader of the Royal Choral Soci
At an early age he entered the Vienna Conservatoire, where he studi Gottfried Preyer, and when thirteen years old had taken a first p continue his studies in Paris under Alard, and in 1850 came to Englan made for himself an excellent reputation as performer and teacher, nur as Miss Adelina Dinelli, Miss Kate Chaplin, the Misses Mabel an tinguished amateurs as Mr. H. M. Morris and Mr. L. d'Egville. It is int a boy, played the violin concerto of Mendelssohn, accompanied by th tribute was recently paid him by the presentation at the hands of Mr pupils, of an illuminated address and a gold repeater, as a token of t

PROVINCIAL.

BIRMINGHAM, December, 4.

Thanks to Mr. Augustus Harris and our experienced local manager, Mr. Mercer H. Simpson, the lessee of the principal theatre in Birmingham, a rare opportunity has been afforded us during the past week of hearing the Royal Italian Opera Troupe, from Covent Garden, in seven different operas. Never before in our experience have Italian operas been brought out here on such a grand scale, with such an array of principals, with such an excellent orchestra, chorus, and accessories. Mr. Augustus Harris, mindful of his high reputation, is doing for the provinces what he has done for Covent Garden, and we reap the benefit of his experience. The least our soi-disant musical population could have done would have been to show their just appreciation of such laudable efforts by their presence, but we regret that a different tale has to be told, and we must come to the conclusion that our wealthy citizens are not musical, that they are callous and indifferent to true art, and that fashion only reigns in their midst. It is true, there was the great counter attraction at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, where Mr. Irving was drawing crowded houses night
Mefistofele given here
"Carmen," were also and Miss
and we gla
Press. Mdl
gherita di vocalisation derful dram impersonati triumph of conception
Birmingham
Saturday nig
the opera th
ham. She beautiful voi
Mr. August

that want of space will not permit us to enter into details, but we must not omit to name specially Mdlle. De Vigne. A welcome feature was the re-appearance of Madame Demeric Lablache. Signori D'Andrade, Miranda, Abramoff, Winogradow, and Foli also deserve high praise. The veteran Signor Arditi, who was greeted nightly with enthusiastic applause, conducted with his well-known ability. The orchestra and chorus were the most complete and efficient ever brought to Birmingham; and finally, the beautiful mise en scène, the dresses and rich appointments, under the careful supervision of Mr. Mercer Simpson, were in every way befitting his reputation.

Messrs. Harrison's second Subscription Concert, given at the Town Hall last night, brought together the "élite" of Birmingham society. The vocalists included Madame Albani, Miss Whitacre, Miss Alice Gomes, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Banks, and Mr. Santley. The instrumental department was rich in novelty, introducing the celebrated Heckmann String Quartet. Besides these we had Miss Fanny Davies (solo pianoforte), and Mr. Sidney Naylor, the conductor. Madame Albani gave Prayer and Barcarolle from Meyerbeer's "L'Etoile du Nord" with her accustomed finish and fervour, and elicited the most enthusiastic demonstration. The two tenors shared the honours of the evening, and Mr. Santley sang in his best style. Miss Whitacre, who created such an agreeable impression at one of Messrs. Harrison's earlier concerts, met with the same demonstrative reception as on the former occasion. Our space being so limited we regret that we cannot fully detail the many excellent points of this charming concert. It stands without saying that Miss Fanny Davies played her solos with perfect technique and expression. Miss Alice Gomes greatly pleased her audience with her finished singing. Mr. Sidney Naylor was a remarkably good conductor.

MANCHESTER, December 4.

An excellent programme of chamber music was provided at the Gentlemen's Concert on Tuesday evening, November 27. The artists were Sir Charles Hallé, and Messrs. Hess, Speelman, Bernhardt, and Piatti. Schubert's beautiful quartet in D minor was the first item: it is one of the many works of this composer, of which the "heavenly length" makes us feel that his difficulty was not how to go on, but when to stop. It was very well given, though in the allegro we fancied that Herr Hess's intonation was at times not quite accurate; but the andante con moto, with its solemn opening subject, derived from "Death and the Maiden," was perfect. Signor Piatti played two compositions of his own—one an impromptu on a very fine air, by Purcell, from the "Indian Queen"; the other, a gagliardo. In Schumann's Sonata for Pianoforte and Violin (A minor, Op. 105), Herr Hess confirmed the favourable impression which he made on his first appearance. The concert was concluded by an admirable performance of Haydn's Pianoforte Trio in E minor.

The "Elijah" was given at Sir Charles Hallé's sixth concert, November 29, before an enormous audience. On the whole, this most beautiful oratorio has, perhaps, not been heard here so well for many a day. The principal vocalists were Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Piercy, and Mr. Santley. Both the ladies sang excellently; and though we cannot convince ourselves that Miss Williams' upper notes possess so much intrinsic beauty as to recompense her for the efforts made in their production, there is no doubt that she sings both carefully and artistically. On Thursday last she almost surpassed herself, and her phrasing in particular left nothing to be desired. Mr. Piercy was very successful, and as for Mr. Santley, he is still the ideal Elijah—there is none like him. A word of praise must be given for Miss Jessie Moorhouse's interpretation of the minor part allotted to her. The choruses were, for the most part, very well done indeed.

CREWE, December 6.

An interesting pianoforte recital was given here on Wednesday by Dr. Horton Allison, of Manchester, who presented a programme of sustained and varied interest, which commenced with Beethoven's so-called "Moonlight" Sonata in C sharp minor, which gave the pianist ample opportunity for the display of his qualities of crispness and clearness of touch, supplemented by no small share of emotion and taste. Dr. Allison also gave excellent interpretations of Thalberg's Variations on "Home Sweet Home," and Liszt's "Tannhäuser" Fantasia. Miss Mary Athol was the vocalist, and gave charming rendering of Arditi's "Il Bacio" and the Jewel Song from "Faust."

Concerts.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The lion's share of Saturday's programme was given to Robert Schumann, two of whose very finest works, the "Rhenish" Symphony and the Pianoforte Concerto, were presented. The Symphony was, almost as a matter of course, magnificently played, but the inadequacy of its orchestration contrasted more forcibly than ever with the splendour of its subject matter. Madame Essipoff's reading of the Concerto was instinct with the spirit of Chopin rather than Schumann. It is a pity that pianists do not realise and try to perpetuate Madame Schumann's style of rendering her husband's works, instead of allowing their own temperaments to guide them. We want as much as possible to know what the composer meant. In the case of Bach, Mozart, Beethoven even, this is often a question upon which doctors may reasonably differ, since no supreme authority can be appealed to. It is otherwise with composers the tradition of whose style has been received direct from its source by performers now before the public. In such cases there is but one one right way; all others are, and must be, wrong. The artist who can sink his or her individuality in that of every composer is no doubt extremely rare—perhaps non-existent; but why not avoid all works with which we are not en rapport? Madame Essipoff was further heard in pieces by Chopin and Paderewski, and in response to an encore, gave with perfect finish a little piece by Scarlatti. The remaining orchestral items were Bennett's lovely overture "Paradise and the Peri," and two novelties. The first of these, a Cortège Fantastique by Moszkowski, proved to be an example of our old friend the "band passing," picturesquely scored, and free from vulgarity; the second, Ambroise Thomas' overture, "Raymond, ou le secret de la Reine," beginning with a series of graceful dances, somewhat in Auber's manner, and ending with a noisy cancan, might appropriately be described as a "ballet overture." The vocalist, Miss Carlotta Badia, tickled the ears of her hearers, between the two great works of Schumann (!), with "Bel Raggio."

MADAME ESSIPOFF'S RECITALS.

Madame Essipoff, assisted by Madame Fannie Bloomfield, gave two of a series of three pianoforte recitals at Steinway Hall on the the 29th ult. and the 4th inst. Schumann's Sonata in G minor, Beethoven's sonatas Op. 26 and 57, duets by Saint-Saëns, Schumann, Reinecke, and Leschetitzky, and smaller works by various composers were given, In pieces requiring delicate manipulation and a rapid finger Madame Essipoff was very successful; but of her rendering of Beethoven the less said the better. It was tricky, sensational, and almost totally wanting in sympathy. Madame Essipoff's "expression" would seem to result mainly from an exercise of the decorative faculty, but at times she played with a coarseness which in so small a hall was positively painful. This artist's technical acquirements, her excellent memory, and her physical powers are so unmistakeable that in judging her, leniency would be quite thrown away; it is, indeed, necessary to protest strongly against her readings precisely on account of the prestige which her talents have gained her, and in order that she may not be taken as a model by the large number of ladies who "sit under" her at her matinées, and indiscriminately applaud every piece.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

This excellent and venerable charity celebrated its 150th anniversary on the 29th ult., by a performance of "The Messiah" in Westminster Abbey. The glorious old building was, of course, crowded, and many stood outside, eager to catch any stray sound-crumbs from the musical festival within. It cannot be said that the rendering of Handel's masterpiece was altogether worthy of the place or the occasion. Dr. Bridge did the best that was possible with the forces at his command; but these were not adequate. The solos were, however, in capable hands, Madame Albani, Madame Patey, Messrs. Harper Kearton, Hilton, and Brereton having most generously given their services. The pure, rich tones of Madame Albani's voice floated through the building in a wonderful way. This was a delightful experience. It is pleasant to hear that the result is a substantial addition to the Society's funds; on this account, and because we believe that reverence for Art cannot fail to be fostered by opportunities of hearing great works in such localities, we hope that steps will be taken to make the performance annual.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

It is impossible to congratulate Mr. Henschel on the performance of Tuesday last. There were good points, of course, notably in Mozart's "Idomeneo" overture, and in Liszt's Symphonic Poem, "Orpheus," but the renderings of Mendelssohn's delightful Italian Symphony, and Wagner's Meistersinger overture can only be described as altogether second rate. The Symphony especially was wanting in finesse, and indeed the first and last movements sounded positively clumsy. Bach's beautiful concerto in D minor, for two violins, was tastefully played by Miss Emily Shinner and Miss Geraldine Morgan, but the orchestral accompaniments were rather untidy. It is almost incomprehensible how Mr. Henschel, who, when seated at the piano is a very angel of sympathy and intelligence, can bring himself to present such crude and soulless renderings of great and familiar works, when he knows how important for art is the success of his enterprise and how exclusively success in London depends upon the way in which the works are presented.

MISCELLANEOUS CONCERTS.

HECKMANN QUARTET.—Once more this excellent quartet, welcomed back by a numerous and enthusiastic audience, is with us, and in the course of a programme, remarkable for well-chosen diversity, displayed that unique ensemble which has characterised their previous performances,. Of Brahms's magnificant Quintet in F minor they, in conjunction with Madame Haas, gave a rendering, which if not ideally perfect, was undoubtedly of a high order of excellence, and Schumann's Quartet in A major was played with those wonderful nuances and that intelligence of phrasing which have made the Heckmann Quartet famous. But while fully acknowledging the power and individuality of their readings of such typical works of the romantic school, we confess we are wholly unable to agree with their undignified and restless performance of that most classical of quartets, Beethoven in C major, Op. 59. Too often Herr Heckmann was obviously striving to make effect at any cost, and, as conspicuously evidenced in the Trio of the Minuet, often with most eccentric results. On the other hand, important "points" with which every connoisseur is familiar, such as the well-known passage in G major, which precedes the "working out" of the first movement, were either wholly ignored, or only partially insisted upon. One agreeable feature of the concert was the performance of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in A minor, by that excellent artist, Mme. Haas, who in response to an encore, played a charming little trifle of Scarlatti's.

ST. ANDREW'S DAY.—The St. Andrew's Festival has for long been an annual institution at St. James's Hall, and the enthusiastic crowd which assembled therein on Friday of last week proved that there is no diminution of public interest in the national concert. The vocalists included Miss Liza Lehmann, Madame Patey, Miss Frances Harrison, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley, and the Glasgow Select Choir had been imported to lend importance to the occasion. Miss Lehmann's solos were given with her accustomed purity of style, and Madame Patey and Miss Harrison gave full expression to the determined and defiant elements of such songs as "Scots wha hae" and "Bonnie Dundee," while Mr. Santley was in excellent voice, and sang in his best manner. The Glasgow Choir occasioned a little misgiving in their first part-song, but their later efforts were marked by correct intonation and sympathetic expression, which never degenerated into the vulgarity of over-accentuation. A new part-song, "Bonnie Bell," composed by Dr. Mackenzie, was introduced, and proved of considerable interest, since it combines the melodic severity of Northern music with the rich harmonies of the modern school, and combines them so cleverly that the least suspicion of incongruity is happily avoided.

REGENTS' PARK CHAPEL.—Such a performance of the "Redemption" as took place here on Wednesday is a sign of the times indeed. Mr J. L. Phillips the energetic organist of the Chapel, who conducted, had brought together a choir and orchestra, which would have sufficed for one of our large concert rooms, and with their aid and that of Mis Alice Whitacre, Miss Hannah Jones, Mr. Hirwen Jones, Mr. Frank May and Mr. Frederick King secured a rendering of Gounod's work remarkable for its vigour, precision and dramatic power. The choir "attacked" with singular unanimity; and the orchestra, led by Mr. H. R. Starr, gave full effect to the picturesque scoring. The watchfulness and enthusiasm of the conductor, in short, communicated themselves to the executants, with results which had so great an effect upon the audience that they forgot the respect due to the building. Applause is all very well, but however much inclined to sympathise with the feelings which called it forth, we should have preferred the homage of silence. It is to be hoped that Mr. Phillips, encouraged by the success of his plucky experiment, will be induced to repeat it, until it crystallises into a permanent feature of London musical life.

HAMPSTEAD POPULAR CONCERTS OF CHAMBER MUSIC.—The second of these excellent concerts took place at the vestry hall on Friday last, and in spite of very bad weather was well attended. The players were the "Heckmann Quartet" (Messrs. Heckmann, Forberg, Ousboorn, and Bellmann) and Dr. Villiers Stanford; the vocalist, Miss Louise Phillips. The concert opened with Beethoven's Quartet in A, Op. 18, No. 5, and closed with Dr. Stanford's Pianoforte Quintet in D minor, Op. 25. It would be hard to find a better specimen of its kind by an English composer than this quintet, and the music was fully worthy of the finished and spirited rendering it received. The adagio is full of true feeling, the scherzo of fine humour; while clear construction and artistic restraint bind the four movements into a strong whole. Herr Bellmann appeared to great advantage in the violoncello Sonata in E minor by Brahms (Op. 38), but perhaps the skill and power of his playing were needed to carry off a certain dryness in the first and third movements of this sonata. The remaining work assigned to the strings was a movement from Schubert's posthumous quartet in D minor, viz., the variations on the theme which is contained in the song "Der Tod und das Mädchen." This was played in a manner at once exquisitely finished and full of warmth. Miss Phillips sang Grieg's "Die Odaliske," a Swedish song by Maude White, and a song by Gröndahl; but whether the last was Swedish, Norwegian, or Danish we cannot say. The sweet reflective monotony of the second song was rendered with an admirably liquid quality of voice. Mr. Wilfred Bendall is again the accompanist this season. A strong programme is promised for December 14, when the soloists will be Miss Gomes and Mr. Dannreuther.

CHELSEA TOWN HALL.—An excellent concert was given on Wednesday evening, November 28, at the above hall, under the direction of the Rev. F. J. D. Herbert, O.S.M., in aid of a local charity. The programme was of a miscellaneous character, consisting mostly of Irish songs and ballads, interspersed by some instrumental items. The artists included Miss L. Maidment, Miss Florence Simpson, Miss Alice Mordaunt, Signor and Signora Borghi, Signor Cesare Ducci (pianoforte), and Herr Polonaski (violin). In the course of the evening the Rev. F. Herbert gave a lecture on "The Scenery and Music of Ireland," which was frequently interrupted by hearty applause. Herr Polonaski played De Bèriot's "Scene de Ballet," and with Signor Ducci Schumann's Fantasiestücke for Violin and Piano. There was a very large and most appreciative audience, and the long programme was carried out in a most satisfactory, and to the artists, most creditable manner.

GRESHAM HALL, BRIXTON.—A concert for a benevolent purpose was given under the direction of Herr Polonaski on Thursday evening, November 29. The most important item of the programme was an admirable rendering of Gade's poetical Trio (for pianoforte and strings) in F, Op. 42, played by Miss Kate Cheyne, Herr Polonaski, and Mr. L. Roese. Madame Edwardes, Miss Rose Williams, Mr. Rupert Williams, and Mr. Britton Luget were the vocalists, with Mr. Louis Lee as conductor. Herr Polonaski played solos by Wieniawski, and Miss Marion Jay (pupil of Herr Polonaski) played an "air varié," by Dancha, on the violin in a highly promising manner; the young lady, who is only in her 11th year, was most enthusiastically encored for her performance. The rest of the programme was of a mixed nature, requiring no further comment. There was a very large attendance.

GROSVENOR CLUB.—An excellent smoking concert, under the direction of the Rev. A. Wellesley Batson, was given by the above Club at the Grosvenor Gallery on Saturday evening. The programme included glees and part-songs by Horsley, Lorenz, Hatton, and Paxton.

all rendered in excellent fashion by Messrs. Browne, Groome, Branscombe, and Stanley Smith. Two movements of Schubert's Trio in B flat were played by that well-known violoncellist, Mr. Charles Ould, and his clever sons, Messrs. P. and C. Hopkins Ould. Mr. Charles Ould also played in masterly style an "Introduction and Polonaise," by Dunkler, and Mr. P. Ould in a Reverie, by Sarasate, displayed an excellent technique, noble quality of tone, and refined phrasing that should ere long make their possessor a brilliant star in the musical firmament.

Mr. Penna's Vocal and Dramatic Recital, which took place on Thursday of last week at the Steinway Hall, afforded his friends an opportunity of hearing some of the choicest of old English airs rendered in a capital way, for it was in such charming numbers, as Purcell's "I attempt from love's sickness to fly," and Dr. Blow's "Self-Banished" that Mr. Penna's chief successes were made. The other vocalists included Miss Clementine Ward and Mr. Cobham Trelawney, and the instrumentalists were Madame Frickenhaus and Mr. J. C. Ward. The lady gave some brilliant pianoforte solos, and the gentleman performed upon the concertina, an instrument which proved, under such skilful manipulation, to be capable of much more than the uncertain wailing and erratic harmonies which one is accustomed to expect.

Miss Jessie Bridge, a young lady not half-way through her teens, gave a pianoforte recital on Friday in last week at Prince's Hall, under the patronage of the Marchioness of Lorne, in aid of the funds of the Victoria Hospital for Children. Miss Bridge must be judged as a student, and as such she is decidedly clever. Her phrasing is intelligent, though at present without any individuality, her touch is agreeable, and she has acquired considerable execution. Her rendering of Liszt's "Fantasie Hongroise" excited well-deserved expressions of approval, but her choice of the "Waldstein" Sonata was a mistake for which she, of course, was not answerable.

Madame Sophie Tueski's Concert took place at the Portman Rooms on Tuesday last, when a programme of considerable interest was provided. Madame Tueski appeared but once in her character of pianoforte soloist, playing a "Nocturne," by Döhler, and Logès' "La Farfalla," in which her power and neatness of technique were well displayed. Madame Tueski also took part in an excellent performance of Mendelssohn's Trio in C minor with M. Buziau and Mr. Hambleton, and displayed therein, in addition to the qualities mentioned, a considerable amount of intelligence and feeling. The vocalists of the evening included Mdme. Vaudrey, who gave a fairly adequate rendering of the scena from "Robert," although she has apparently yet to learn that the final "e" is not, by an accurate French scholar, pronounced as "ā"; Mr. L. v. Kollem, who sang with spirit the "Toreador's Song" from "Carmen," and Miss Alice Crang.

Miss Henden-Warde's concert.—A concert was given in the Steinway Hall on the 30th ult. by Miss Henden Warde, which was attended by a large and enthusiastic audience. Miss Henden-Warde elected to be heard in Glück's "Che Faro," in which she displayed to advantage a voice of good quality, used with excellent taste and skill, her mezza di voce being especially pleasing. The concert-giver also sang Mrs. Moncrieff's "Creole love-song," and two ditties from the prolific pen of Mr. Isidore de Lara, which, as they differ in no respect from their predecessors, demand no comment. Miss Carlotta Elliott, whose singing has greatly improved since we last heard her—being now free from excessive vibrato, and Mr. Lawrence Kellie, who gave an expressive rendering of Hope Temple's "In sweet September," were amongst the other vocalists.

Mr. Samuel de Sola's first concert took place on the afternoon of the 29th ult., at Princes' Hall. The concert-giver himself sang in excellent style Sullivan's "Thou'rt passing hence," and "Eri tu," from "Il Ballo," and he was assisted by, amongst others, Madame Edith Wynne, Miss Rosina Brandram, and Mr. Ben Davies, who all sang to the satisfaction of the audience. Miss Nellie Levey contributed some of her charming guitar-accompanied songs, and Miss Adela Duckham, a young lady of 13 years, showed tokens of undeveloped talent as a violinist.

Miss Eugénie Caverhill-Shiels' Concert was given on Tuesday last at the Steinway Hall. The beneficiaire proved herself to be a pianist of no mean ability, uniting neatness of execution to intelligence and taste. She was heard in two numbers from Schumann's "Kreisleriana" and Mendelssohn's "Variations Serieuses," and joined Mr. G. F. Huntley in an admirable performance of Rheinberger's Duet for two Pianofortes, Op. 15. The vocalists were Miss Ethel Winn, Miss Eleanor Rees, Mr. Claude Ravenhill, and Mr. Gabriel Thorpe.

Kingston-on-Thames.—A highly successful entertainment took place in the Albany Hall here last Tuesday in aid of the funds of St. Paul's Church. The chief interest centred round some excellent tableaux vivants given under the direction of Mr. W. P. Warren, which included a beautiful representation of Dicksees' well-known picture "Within the shadow of the Church," and, by way of contrast, the famous scene from "Nicholas Nickleby," in which Mrs. Squeers administers brimstone and treacle to her scholars. Some capital music was provided in the intervals by Miss Biddulph, Mr. Maxwell Tod, Capt. Lloyd Harris, and others.

Putney.—An entertainment was given at the Assembly Rooms on Thursday last in aid of the funds of the Royal Hospital for Incurables. The musical part of the programme was efficiently carried out by such well-known artists as Miss Helen D'Alton, Miss Nellie Levey, Signor Mhanes, Mr. Templer Saxe, and Mr. Franklin Clive, Mmes. Bandmann-Palmer, Genevieve Ward, and Gertrude Hemery recited, and Mr. Ganthony gave some humorous sketches. Miss Lewis at the pianoforte, and Miss Freda Marsden—one of our young violinists—played some solos admirably. Mr. Claude-Trevor was an excellent conductor.

Wandsworth Town Hall. — The Wandsworth Philharmonic Society gave their first concert on Monday, the 3rd inst., the chief item of the programme being Gaul's "Joan of Arc." As the Society is only just formed, and this was their first concert, it would hardly be fair to criticise the performance very closely. The female voices would bear strengthening both as regards quantity and quality, but the tenors and basses are fairly adequate. The Society appears to possess an efficient conductor in Mr. H. W. Weston, F.C.O. The solos were sung by Mdme. Wilson-Osman whose charm of voice and style gave much pleasure—and by Messrs. Dyved Lewis and Andrew Black. A short miscellaneous selection followed the cantata. The Hall was crowded, and the Society starts apparently well assured of support by the inhabitants of the neighbourhood.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur C. Haden gave a Vocal and Violin Recital, at 46, Rutland Gate, last Monday afternoon. Mrs. Haden's refined and expressive singing of music by Grieg, Dvorak, her husband's "Easy is my bed," and Amor's "O, more desirous we," no less than Mr. Haden's thoughtful readings of several violin pieces, greatly delighted the audience which crowded the room. Miss Enid Stuart Jones showed in her pianoforte solos true musical feeling, and Mr. Heydrick's accompaniments were all that could be wished.

LETTERS UPON THE POETRY AND MUSIC OF THE ITALIAN OPERA."*

LETTER VIII.

From what I have said of the aria di portamento, the cantabile, the mezzo carattere, and the different sub-divisions of the aria parlante, I hope I have, in some degree, made it plain to your Lordship, that there is no affection of the human breast, from the slightest and most gentle stirring of sentiment, to the most frantic degrees of passion, which some one of these classes is not aptly suited to express. If this be true, other classes must be either bad or superfluous. This, in fact, is the case of the aria di agilità, or aria di bravura, as it is sometimes called; in treating of which, it will be almost sufficient to repeat to your Lordship the description I gave of it in the general enumeration of the different classes. It is an air composed chiefly, indeed too often merely, to indulge the singer in the display of certain powers in the execution, particularly extraordinary agility or compass of voice. In such a composition, the means are evidently confounded with the end of the art; dexterity (if I may be allowed the expression), and artifice, instead of serving as the instruments, being made the object of the work. Such are the airs which, with us, we so frequently observe sung to ears erect, and gaping mouths, whilst the heart, in honest sympathy, is carrying on its mere animal function. And of this kind, indeed, are all the attempts, in the different arts, to substitute what is difficult or novel for what is beautiful and natural. Where there has ever been a genuine taste for any of the arts, this aptness to admire what is new and difficult is one of the first symptoms of the decline of that taste; such is at present the case in Italy with respect to all the arts; but the admiration bestowed in Britain on difficulty and novelty, in preference to beauty and simplicity, is the effect, not of the decline, but of the total want of taste, and proceeds from the same principles with the admiration of tumbling and rope-dancing, which the multitude may gaze on with astonishment long before they are susceptible of the charms of graceful and elegant pantomine, these feats of agility having exactly the same relation to fine dancing that the above mentioned airs have too expressive music. They are, therefore, I conceive, incompatible with the nature of a serious drama; but in the burletta, or comic opera, in which much greater liberties may be taken, I think I have, sometimes, heard them introduced with success. In a comedy, a pretty frolicsome coquette may be supposed to cut an elegant caper, at once to show her legs and to display her skill in dancing; nay, such a stroke might be characteristic, and therefore proper. So a gay, fashionable lady might, with a kind of graceful levity, express, by an air of this kind, some of her pretty capricious humours, equally unintelligible with the music itself, the merit of both consisting merely in the prettiness of the manner; for this kind of music, tho' incapable of any expression excepting that, perhaps, of gaiety in general, may yet have all the beauty which can be given to it by a fine voice running, with ease and velocity, though an arrangement of notes, not in itself unpleasing, just as the humour of the lady, though perhaps rather unmeaningly, may be accompanied with many graces of countenance, figure, voice, and motion.

---

* "By the late Mr. John Brown, painter. Edinburgh, 1789."

Now, the union of all this with music, produces often, without any violation of propriety, a very happy effect on the stage; but your Lordship will observe with what absurd impropriety these airs often make a part of our concerts, where all this elegant flirtation of face and figure is forbidden, and where these fanciful and exuberant follies are gravely pronounced by a lady standing at the harpsichord with downcast, or, at best, unmeaning eyes, and without the smallest apparent tendency to motion.

LETTER IX.

I have now endeavoured to give your Lordship as distinct an idea as I could of the simple and accompanied recitative, and of all those classes of airs which have names in Italian, and which I mentioned in the first general enumeration I made of them. There is, however, another species of Airs, which I have not classed with them, because it has no particular denomination, though it appears to me well deserving of that distinction. But this is easily accounted for when it is considered, as I took occasion to observe in the beginning, that the names of these classes are all taken from circumstances of the practical part of the art. The Airs alluded to here are those whose subject is a simile,and which I shall venture to call Airs of Limitation These, though essentially different from all those before mentioned, yet, from some circumstance of similarity in the practical part, have been referred to one or other of the above classes.

Though, upon the whole, similes of any length be perhaps seldom admissable in dramatic poetry, being in general repugnant to the genuine expression of passion, yet sometimes they may be introduced without impropriety, more particularly in the musical drama, which, like all the other arts, justly claims some licence in practice, with respect to that beauty which is its chief object, or that species of pleasure which it is peculiarly calculated to inspire.

Now, the
the perfection their subject music, being frequent intro
the opera tha
I proceed to
to say someth
And, first, it i of loud and the same in circumstance for some of w

The well-knc
Charing Cross,
downs of a busy
to lose seven con wholly disabled
engagements on,
time, salary, an bills. He says
dom. At the on worse than e remedy, St. Jac simply miraculo
after the first ap spent for many pain to endure.
Jacob's Oil by st
to me to be conv

Saturday Popula
Crystal Palace C
Herr von Czeke
Concert in aid o
Mrs. Welman an

Monday Popular

Symphony Conc
Madame Patti's

Morning Ballad
Madame Essipo
Herr Waldermar
The Heckman Q
Mr. T. R. Glanv

Evening Concert
Hyde Park Acad

Mr. Henri Falk
Mdlle. Marie H

EDWARD IVIMEY, Practical Tailor & Outfitter,
RECTORY HOUSE, 2, ST. PETER'S ALLEY, CORNHILL, AND
24, CULLUM STREET, FENCHURCH STREET.
ESTABLISHED OVER 100 YEARS.

GOODS FOR WINTER NOW READY.
ALBERT BLUE MELTON, BEAVER AND VICUNA FOR THE NEW STYLE OF SAC OVERCOATS, now so much worn.
TOURIST AND SHOOTING SUITS, 50s., 55s., 63s.
DRESS SUITS FROM FINE TWILL ELASTIC, SATIN LINED, 3½ Guineas
SCOTCH TWEEDS & ANGOLA WOOL, TROUSERS from 13/-. a pair, 5/-

EDWARD IVIMEY, Tailor & Outfitter.—Excellency with Economy combined.

ARRANGED
SETTLED

W. AU
44, H

NIC

PALA
ESTABLISHED

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice.

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

Without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings
FOR
VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,
ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,

Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

Vins de Champagne

ARTHUR ROEDERER, Reims.

MAISON FONDEE 1876

SODEN MINERAL PASTILLES.

TRADE MARK

FOR THROAT
IRRITATION
COUGHS
& COLDS.

"9, HARLEY STREET,
"I regard them as extremely valuable in obstinate Catarrhal affections of the Throat."
MORELL MACKENZIE, M.D.
Of all Chemists 1s 1½d. or 15 Stamps from 10 Dyer's Bgs., Holborn

TRADE MARK

FOR BRONCHITIS
ASTHMA
& CATARRHAL AFFECTIONS.

SPECIALLY RECOMMENDED BY Sir Morell Mackenzie WHOSE TESTIMONIAL IS WITH EACH BOX

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING For a cheque for £5 we will print a ten-line advertisement in Two Million copies of leading English Papers. This is at the rate of less than One Penny each 1,000 Circulation! The advertisement will appear in but a single issue of any paper, and consequently will be placed before Two Million different newspaper purchasers—or TEN MILLION READERS, if it is true, as is sometimes stated, that every newspaper is looked at by five persons on an average. Ten lines will take about eighty ordinary words. Address with copy of advertisement and cheque, or send Sixpence for SELL'S illustrated books on advertising. HY. SELL, SELL'S ADVERTISING AGENCY, LTD., 167 & 168 FLEET STREET LONDON E.C.

ESTABLISHED THREE QUARTERS OF A CENTURY.

A. S. MALLETT, ALLEN & CO.,

CONTRACTORS TO
HER MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE,

Type Music Printers,

LITHOGRAPHERS, &c.

PORTRAITS.	WINDOW BILLS.	STATIONERY.
(Speciality.)	BOOKS.	SHOW CARDS.
POSTERS.	CATALOGUES	PLANS, &c., &c.

68 & 70, WARDOUR ST., LONDON, W.
TELEGRAPHIC ADDRESS—"ASMAL, LONDON."

CASSON'S
PATENT
Organ-Building System.

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c., See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The Late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A
Mr. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—

CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN COMPANY, LIMITED,

DENBIGH.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Studio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO.

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had but little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me, or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

To Mr. Ainsworth. BURNHAM-HORNER, F.R. Hist. S.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and Organ student who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music or organ arrangement, with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is, as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours, I. B. THORNTON,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly, HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.
To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilitate the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number), each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS,
BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public, Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

Ascherberg Piano Depot,

211, REGENT STREET, W.

"THE SHAVER'S DELIGHT."

12 MONTHS LUXURY FOR 12 PENCE

[a shilling shaving stick lasts a year.]

Printed by A. S. MALLETT, ALLEN & Co., London, and Published by WILLIAM PEARCE, at 138a, Strand, W.C., to which address all communications must be sent.

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1836.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 68.—No. 49. SATURDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1888. PRICE {3d. Unstamped. 4d. Post Free.

THE

KARN AMERICAN ORGANS

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,
WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs, equal to, if not surpassing all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

New Illustrated Catalogue and Price Lists Free of the
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:

THE SCHREIBER PIANO COMPANY,
3, NEWMAN MANSIONS, NEWMAN ST., LONDON, W.

W. G. THOMAS'S PIANOS!!

ARE the BEST and cheapest in the market. Professors and others will find an advantage by sending for the Free Illustrated lists. Splendid Iron-framed PIANOS, full-compass trichord, in Walnut Wood Cases, at popular prices. Packed FREE. Contracts taken for large quantities. Old Pianos bought for Cash, or taken in exchange.

W. G. THOMAS Pianoforte Manufacturer,
Gospel Oak Grove, Malden Road, Kentish Town, London, N.W

PIANOS, PIANOS

Harmoniums, and American Organs,
ON THE THREE YEARS' SYSTEM

Pianos ..	...	from 10s. 6d.	per month.
Harmoniums ...	„	5s. 0d.	„
American Organs	„	7s. 0d.	„

Any Instrument sent home on receipt of first Instalment.

OUR UPRIGHT IRON GRAND, Trichord, Double Check Repeater Action, Celeste Pedal, 15s. per month.

This is a thoroughly sound and elegant Instrument, warranted in every respect.

Other Classes equally cheap.

Write for Catalogue to

SHENSTONE, SHENSTONE & CO.,
Steam Works: GRANGE ROAD, LEYTON, E.
Show Rooms: 70, Hackney Rd. 87, St. Peter's St., Islington; & 29, Kennington Pk. Rd

Special Notices.

CONCERT MANAGEMENT. Mr. Basil Tree (Successor to Mr. Ambrose Austin), St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, is open to undertake the management of Concerts.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.—Mr. HENSCHEL, Conductor.—The FIRST of the TWO EXTRA CONCERTS will take place on Wednesday afternoon next, St. James's Hall, at 3 o'clock.--Programme: A Faust Overture (Wagner); Recitative and Aria from Alessandro (Handel), Mrs. Henschel; Symphony in C minor, No. 5 (Beethoven); Suite from the Music to Peer Gynt, Op. 46 (Grieg); Adieux de l'Hôtesse Arabe (Henschel), Mrs. Henschel; Overture to Tannhauser (Wagner).—Reserved Seats, 7s. 6d. and 4s.; Unreserved Seats, 2s.; Admission, 1s., of N. Vert, usual agents, and St. James's Hall.—N Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

ST. MARY'S, Boltons, S. Kensington.—ORGAN RECITAL by C. F. ABDY WILLIAMS, on Wednesday, Dec 19, at 4 p.m.—Programme: Sonata in A, No. 2 (Mendelssohn), Andante from Organ Trio in D minor. No. 3 J. S. Bach), Choralvorspiel, Sonata in E flat minor, No. 6, Op. — (Rheinberger), Prelude, Intermezzo, Marcia Religioso, Fugue, and Vocal Selections.

TO CLOSE A TRUST.—For SALE as a going concern, a well-established high-class PIANOFORTE and GENERAL MUSIC BUSINESS established 30 years, in a fashionable sea-side town on the Lancashire coast.—Further particulars may be had from Messrs. Buck, Dickson, & Cockshott; Solicitors, Southport.

MISS ALICE LAMB.—(Contralto of Sir Charles Hallé's Manchester Concerts). Oratorio, concert, etc. For vacant dates address, The Polygon, Ardwick, Manchester, or Mr. W. Healey, 10a, Warwick Street, Regent Street, W.

UNIVERSITY of MELBOURNE.—Ormond Professorship of Music.—The Council of the University, having founded a Professorship of Music, to be called the Ormond Professorship, CANDIDATES for the APPOINTMENT are requested to forward their applications, with testimonials, to the Agent-General for Victoria, 8, Victoria Chambers, Westminster, not later than the 10th of January, 1839. Full information as to salary, tenure and duties of the Professor, can be obtained on application at the above address.

GRAHAM BERRY, Agent-General for Victoria.

Knighthood of the Legion of Honour, 1878. Knight Commander of Villa Viraga, 1883. Gold Medals at the principal International Exhibitions.

JOHN BRINSMEAD & SONS'

UPRIGHT IRON GRAND PIANOFORTES combine the Elegance and Convenience of the COTTAGE with the perfection of Touch, Tone, and Durability of the HORIZONTAL GRAND. Prices from 40 Guineas upwards.

JOHN BRINSMEAD AND SONS, Pianoforte Manufacturers, 18, 20, 22, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W. Lists free.

THE "EMPRESS" PIANOS

ARE the best value in the market. Workmanship cannot be surpassed. Touch and tone unequalled. Professors aud others are invited to inspect these beautiful instruments. Prices from 20 guineas. Ten years' guarantee with every instrument. Messrs. Chudleigh Bros., 140, Strand, London.

£10 10s.
PIANOS.

PIANOFORTES (High-class) for the Million, £10 10s. Full compas, 7 octaves. Warranted. THE LONDON MUSIC PUBLISHING COMPANY (Limited) Originators of the "Ten Guinea" Pianoforte.
54, Great Marlborough Street, W.

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, or £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the Manager of THE MUSICAL WORLD, 138a, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, HAMILTON TERRACE,
ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N. W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.,
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, FINSBURY PARK VILLAS,
GREEN LANES, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI,
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor).
12, WESTBOURNE PARK TERRACE, W.

Mr. F. ST. JOHN LACY,
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist (Baritone),
FITZROY MANSION, CHARLOTTE STREET,
FITZROY SQUARE, W.

Mr. H. MARTIN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor)
Address—7, WIMPOLE ST., CAVENDISH SQ, W.

Mr. LOUIS N. PARKER, A.R.A.M.
(Composer, Conductor, Lecturer),
SHERBORNE, DORSET.

Mr. G. W. L. MARSHALL-HALL
Gives lessons in Composition and Dramatic Singing,
151, RUCKLIDGE AVENUE,
WILLESDEN JUNCTION, N.W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts)
BOSWORTH HOUSE, HUSBAND'S BOSWORTH,
RUGBY.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o NOLAN & JACKSON.

Miss JULIA JONES (Soprano) begs that all communications respecting Oratorios, Concerts, &c., will be addressed to 4, St. Thomas's Road, Finsbury Park, London, N.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorio),
41, WELBECK ST., CAVENDISH SQUARE, W

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, PORTSDOWN ROAD, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concerts and Oratorio),
29, ALBANY STREET, REGENT'S PARK, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio)
2, SEDGMOOR VILLAS,
Private Lessons given. CAMBERWELL, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
(Ballad, Oratorio, etc.)
31, MONMOUTH RD., BAYSWATER, LONDON, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, NORFOLK SQUARE, HYDE PARK, W.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts),
56 DUCHESS RD., EDGBASTON, BIRMINGHAM.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 36, ALBION PLACE, HYDE PARK W.; or to Mr. N. VERT, 6, CORK STREET, W.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. ALFRED MOUL (sole agent),
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. ALFRED MOUL,
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.,
Or, 270, ELGIN AVENUE, MAIDA VALE, W.

Mr. IVER McKAY
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concerts),
1, MILNER SQUARE, LONDON, N.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio),
OLD TRAFFORD, MANCHESTER.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio),
28, DEVONSHIRE STREET, ISLINGTON, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
GOTHIC LODGE,
LORDSHIP LANE, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, ST. STEPHEN'S AFENUE,
SHEPHERD'S BUSH, W

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
40, STANLEY GARDENS, BELSIZE PARK, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. ROOSEVELT SCHUYLER,
55, BEAVER ST., NEW YORK CITY.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, UPPER MOUNT STREET, DUBLIN.

Mr. RAPHAEL GORDON
(Operas, Concerts, and At Homes).
c/o Signor ODOARDO BARRI,
60, MARGARET STREET, W.,
Or, 97, TALBOT ROAD, BAYSWATER, W.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. VERT, Esq., 6, CORK STREET.

Mr. FREDERICK KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, CANFIELD GARDENS, S. HAMPSTEAD.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
EGREMONT, CROXTED ROAD,
WEST DULWICH, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert),
63, STAFFORD PLACE,
BUCKINGHAM GATE, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, etc.),
30, LANCASTER ROAD, NOTTING HILL, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorios, and Operas),
70, PORTSDOWN ROAD, MAIDA VALE, W.

Harp.

Mr. W. T. BARKER
(Concerts, At Homes, Receptions),
49, EBURY STREET, BELGRAVIA, S.W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22A, DORSET STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified." 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
"YELBANA," 99, ANERLEY ROAD,
Pupils visited and received. ANERLEY, S.E.

Miss FREDA MARSDEN,
Solo Violinist (Concerts, At Homes, etc.),
Address. c/o Mr. CHARLES WOOLHOUSE,
81, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella (Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST,
Telegraphic Address: "HEALEY'S AGENCY," LONDON

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Madame WILSON-OSMAN (A.R.A.M.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert), (Soprano)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Miss AMY FLORENCE (Soprano),
(Opera, Concerts, Oratorios, At Homes),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W

Miss FLORENCE EMERSON (Soprano)
(Concerts, Oratorio, At Homes, Etc)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert).
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY.
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W, B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Miss FALCONAR (Contralto),
(Oratorio Concerts Etc.)
24, OPPIDANS RD, PRIMROSE HILL, N.W
or Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor),
28, BELSIZE ROAD, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W

Mr. HENRY PHILLIPS (Tenor),
Sole agent, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio)
Business Manager, W, B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone),
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W, B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Herr WALDEMAR MEYER (Solo Vlnst)
Concerts, At Homes, Etc.)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET,
REGENT STREET, W

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Tenterden Street, W.—
Patrons The QUEEN and the ROYAL FAMILY.
Principal—Dr. A. C. MACKENZIE.
NEXT FORTNIGHTLY CONCERT, THIS DAY at 8 p.m.
For Syllabus of Local Examinations, 1889, and other information, apply to the Secretary.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, Kensington Gore, London.
Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.
President—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director—SIR GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL.D.
NEXT COLLEGE CONCERT (ORCHESTRAL), DECEMBER 21.
FIFTEEN OPEN FREE SCHOLARSHIPS will be competed for in March. Last day for receiving applications January 20.
Forms of application and particulars may be obtained of the Registrar, Mr. GEORGE WATSON, at the College. CHARLES MORLEY, Hon. Sec.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and EXAMINATION, etc., and the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music Instituted 1872.
President, THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.
SESSION, 1888—9.
The next STUDENTS' ORCHESTRAL CONCERT at Princes' Hall, Piccadilly, will take place on MONDAY, DECEMBER 17, at Eight o'clock. Conductor, Mr. George Mount. Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Admission, 2s. 6d. Tickets may be obtained at the Hall.
The next HALF-YEARLY EXAMINATIONS FOR THE DIPLOMAS OF L. MUS. T.C.L. and A. MUS. T.C.L., the positions of Associate-Pianist, Organ-Associate, Associate-Vocalist, Special Certificates for Harmony and other separate subjects, will be held during the week commencing January 7, 1889. These Examinations are open to all Candidates, whether Students of the College or not, and without restriction as to age, sex, or creed. LAST DAY OF ENTRY, DECEMBER 15.
Regulations and all particulars can be obtained from the Secretary, Trinity College, London, W. By order of the Academical Board.
Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C. PATRON—THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.
Established to advance the cause of Church Music and the truest interests of its Professors.
Members of the Church of England and Ireland and the Episcopal Church of Scotland are eligible for Election.
Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates), 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members), 15s, per annum; Life Subscription, 5 guineas.
Prospectus and further particulars may be abtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

MUSIC SCHOOL.—CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL for Girls (Limited), 6, Upper Baker Street, Regent's Park.—Head Music Mistress, Miss Macirone, late Professor of Royal Academy of Music. Fee, three guineas per term. Children from 8 to 13 allowed to begin and continue for two guineas per term. Pupils not in the School may pay an entrance fee of one guinea. The fees payable in advance. Pupils wishing to join Violin Class under Mdlle. Gabrielle Vaillant, to send in their names to Miss Macirone. F. J. HOLLAND, Chairman.

ANGLO-FRENCH SCHOOL, FOR DAUGHTERS OF GENTLEMEN, Granville House, Hornsey Rise London, N.—Miss NASH and Madlle. RAYMOND, assisted by a staff of efficient Professors and Teachers, receive Pupils to board and educate. Special attention given to Music. Healthy and pleasant locality. Terms moderate. References kindly permitted to parents of pupils and to the Editor of "The Musical World."

SOUTHSEA. St. Bees' College for Girls and Kindergarten, conducted by Miss Nelson, M.C.P., healthily and pleasantly situated, with good playground, offers every educational advantage with the comforts of a home, and careful supervision. Pupils prepared for all higher examinations. Special attention to Music and preparation for the R.A.M. Class-singing, languages, physiology, drawing, dancing, swimming, musical drill, combined with a thorough English education. Terms, moderate and inclusive.

MR. JOHN GREIG, M.A., Mus. Bac., F.C.O. (passed Exam. for Mus. Doc. Oxon., 1887), teaches HARMONY, COUNTERPOINT, and FUGUE by CORRESPONDENCE. Coached successfully for final Mus. Bac. Oxon, 1886.—Address, 7, Scotland Street, Edinburgh.

SIGNOR NICOLA COVIELLO, the popular Cornet Soloist (Royal Italian Opera, Promenade Concerts, &c.), now booking Concert Engagements (London, suburbs, and provinces). Immensely successful at Promenade Concerts with "The Lost Chord," Levy's "Whirlwind," &c.—3, Sudbourne Road, Brixton.

MR. J. S. KNIGHT (Tenor) for Ballad Concerts, Oratorio, &c—Address, 59, Beauchamp Place, Brompton Road, S.W.

HIGH-CLASS VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC for Evening Parties, At Homes, etc.. by experienced artists: a complete Concert Party if required; terms moderate.—Address K. and B., 59, Beauchamp Place, Brompton Road, S.W.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

PARENTS seeking ENGLISH or FOREIGN SCHOOLS, TUTORS, or GOVERNESSES for their children, are invited to write fully to
J. F. MOON, M.C.P.,
85, NEWMAN STREET, LONDON, W.,
Who will forward prospectuses and every requisite information, free of charge.
Particulars required are: age and sex of pupil, locality preferred (if any), and about what terms will be paid. Housekeepers, Nursery Governesses, and Companions are also recommended. Hours 11 till 3. Saturdays closed

THE UNITED KINGDOM
BENEFICENT ASSOCIATION,

For granting annuities up to £25 to persons of the upper and middle classes in reduced circumstances, who are above 40 years of age, and who are unable from bodily infirmities to earn their own livelihood; and for affording temporary help to candidates in urgent distress.

TO THE GOVERNORS AND SUBSCRIBERS.—The favour of your Votes and Interest is most earnestly solicited on behalf of

MISS CLARA JONNETTE HEMMENS,

AGED 40 YEARS, who has been a Governess, is an Orphan, and affected with a chronic and incurable internal disease, anæmia, and a great state of bodily weakness. She is very incapable of working for her own support, and almost entirely dependent upon a few private friends, having no relatives whatever who can help her.

The case is highly recommended by The Dowager Lady Annaly, Lord Borthwick, The Honble. and Rev. Canon Leigh, Rector St. Mary's, Bryanston Square., W, Lady Lusk, 15, Sussex Square, Hyde Park, W., Lady Morell Mackenzie, 19, Harley Street, W. The Revd. Wm. Tattersall, M.A., Charlton Place, Bishopsbourne, Canterbury, Mrs. Wm. Tattersall, The Revd. G. D. Bowles, M.A.. The Rectory, Wendlebury, Bicester, Oxon, Mrs. Thursby, Harleston, Northamptonshire, Captain E. H. Curtis, H.M. Bengal Cavalry (retired), 139, The Grove, Ealing. W, *Mrs. E. H. Curtis, C. H. F. Routh, Esq., M.D., 52, Montague Square, Hyde Park, W., Mrs. C. H. F. Routh, Mrs. Amand Routh, 6, Upper Montagu Street, Montagu Square, W., W. J. Bellville, Esq., 9a, Porchester Terrace, Bayswater, W., Mrs. W. J. Bellville, James F. Moon, Esq., M C.P., 85, Newman Street, Oxford Steet, W., *Mrs. James F. Moon.
* Will kindly receive the Proxies.

SPECIAL TINNED TUBES.

FOR
TUBULAR PNEUMATIC ORGANS.

MELLOWES & CO., LEAD PIPE WORKS, SHEFFIELD

DRURY LANE.—AUGUSTUS HARRIS,
Lessee and Manager.
EVERY EVENING, at 7.30, concluding at 11.15.
A New Grand Spectacular Drama entitled.
THE ARMADA, a Romance of 1588.
By HENRY HAMILTON and AUGUSTUS HARRIS.
Box-office open daily from ten till six.

MORNING PERFORMANCE of THE ARMADA. In consequence of the great success of "The Armada," and in response to numerous requests, another Morning Performance will be given THIS DAY (Saturday), at 1.30.

THE ARMADA.—The unanimous praise bestowed upon this historical drama and grand spectacle by the leading Press of the country is nightly endorsed by the crowded audience which fills Drury Lane Theatre at each performance.

THE ARMADA EXHIBITION NOW OPEN to all persons booking seats, from eleven a.m. till five p.m. Open to all persons occupying places entitling them to access to the saloon from seven p.m. till eleven p.m., including the 3s. balcony.

LAST NIGHT of the ARMADA, in consequence of the unprecedented preparations for the Grand Christmas Pantomime, "The Babes in the Wood.

BABES IN THE WOOD, BOXING NIGHT, Dec. 26.—Box-office now open.

THE JODRELL THEATRE, Great Queen Street, W.C.—Lessee, Mrs. Churchill-Jodrell. Manager, Colonel H. J. Sargent.—THE ALDERMAN, by James Mortimer. Preceded by A WHITE LIE.—Box-office open ten to five.

THE ALDERMAN.—Genuine Success. A screaming comedy.

THE ALDERMAN.—Enthusiastically applauded.

JODRELL THEATRE.—THE ALDERMAN.—Now being played to crowded houses.

THE ALDERMAN, at 8.45.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1888.

 MSS. and Letters intended for publication must be addressed to "The Editor." Rejected MSS. cannot be returned unless accompanied by stamped directed envelope.

 Advertisements and business communications generally should be addressed to the Manager (MR. WILLIAM PEARCE), while the Proprietor's receipt will be the only recognised one for all payments. Advertising, Publishing, and General Offices: 138a, Strand, London.

Facts and Comments.

The following significant words appeared in the "Daily Telegraph" of the 7th inst.—"The discussion as to whether there is or is not a Wagner bubble, and, if there be, whether it has burst, goes bravely on. It is in the nature of such a controversy to continue, but the parties to it may usefully be asked, in a quiet moment, whether the game is worth the candle. Argument on such a subject will convince nobody and settle nothing. The great fact is that Wagner has lived and worked, and that he was a man of genius, having the merits and defects of his order. He certainly was no 'bubble,' for his teachings remain. Upon these time will work its inevitable process, accepting what in them is good, and there is no little; rejecting what in them is bad, and there is much. Let us leave the work to time, for life is short, though art is long." Upon reading which, Mr. Rowbotham may be imagined as sadly singing:—

> "Blow, blow, thou winter wind,
> Thou art not so unkind
> As man's ingratitude."

The "Neue Zeitschrift für Musik" publishes a letter by Liszt, written on the 17th November, 1869, which cannot fail to be of the highest interest, not less on account of the writer's unique personality, than of its bearing upon recent events in Vienna. In referring to the death of the painter Overbeck, Liszt writes to his friend the Princess Sayn-Wittgenstein:—"I wish and pray, and, indeed, earnestly command, that my interment shall be without any ostentation—as simple and economical as possible. I protest against a funeral like that of Rossini, and even against an assembling of friends and acquaintances, as at Overbeck's. No parade, no music, no procession, and no oration. I will not be buried in a church, but in a cemetery, and I specially forbid that my remains shall be removed from one resting-place to another. I will be buried in no other place than the cemetery of that place in which I may happen to die, and no other service than a Low Mass (no chanted Requiem) in the parish church. The inscription on my gravestone might be, 'Et habitabunt vultu recti cum vultu suo.' This letter has only quite lately been found amongst her mother's papers by the Princess Hohenlohe, who has shown her appreciation of the great Abbé by giving £3,500 for a Liszt Memorial.

"The Romance of Art" is doubtless an attractive phrase, and there are many incidents in musical history which may fairly be claimed as romantic. Madame Judith Gauthier, the author of "Wagner et son oeuvre poetique" is, however, somewhat too romantically inclined. For she has been writing the libretto of a one-act opera, the music of which is provided by M. Benedictus, entitled "La Sonate du Clair de la Lune," in which Beethoven is made to appear on the stage. The stories concerning the "Moonlight" Sonata are pretty enough, and may amuse a certain sort of amateur; but it is impossible to sanction the efforts of Madame Gauthier to drag the Titanic form of Beethoven upon the operatic stage. Beethoven is the Lear of music; that mighty shaken soul is all too grand to be made the puppet of a vivaciously-inclined Frenchwoman. A worthier rest is his:

> "Vex not his ghost. Oh, let him pass! He hates him
> That would upon the rack of this rough world
> Stretch him out longer."

We hear from St. Petersburg that Mdlle. Minnie Hauk made her first appearance there at a concert on the 30th ult., singing excerpts from "Lohengrin," "Carmen," "Mignon," &c., all of which were received with the customary enthusiasm, which reached its culminating point when the lady sang a Russian song by Dargomischsky, after which the force of enthusiasm "could no further go." A less sensational event, but possibly one of more permanent importance, was the production of a newly-published Symphony (No. 5 in E minor, Op. 64), by Peter Tschaikovsky. This took place the evening before Mdlle. Hauk's début at a concert of the Philharmonic Society, which marked its appreciation of the work by electing the composer an honorary member. One would perhaps have thought that a composer so respected and so enormously popular in his own country would have had that honour conferred upon him long ago. Herein is consolation for some of our own composers. A week later another new work of the composer was heard; this is an Overture, entitled "Hamlet." Mr. Tschaikovsky seems so fond of illustrating Shakespeare in music that we cannot help regretting he did not choose one of his works of this class to introduce himself to us on his first appearance here last summer.

Jubilee performances of Berlioz's opera, "Benvenuto Cellini," have, during the last few weeks, been given at three of the most important theatres of Germany, viz., those of Weimar, Carlsruhe, Dresden. It had previously and repeatedly been heard at Weimar and Carlsruhe, as well as at Hanover, Mannheim, and Leipzig, but was now played at Dresden for the first time. In Germany an amount of justice has thus been done to the French master which has not been accorded to him by his own countrymen. Berlioz may, therefore, be said to have had his revenge for the "brilliant failure" (chute éclatante), as he himself termed it, which accompanied the production of this opera in Paris in 1838, and in London in 1853. But how long will English opera-goers of the present generation have to wait for an opportunity of hearing this fifty-years'-old French masterpiece in London?

The principal of the Guildhall School of Music, Mr. Weist Hill, has been presented by the Students of the Guildhall Orchestra with a handsome gold watch and chain bearing the inscription:—

> "To our Principal, Weist Hill, Esq., as a token of esteem and regard."

In answer to several correspondents who have written to enquire concerning the "Technicon," we beg to inform them that the price of the instrument in question is £5. Messrs. Augener and Co., are the sole agents.

The attention of all those who care for the condition of English music may well be directed to the performances of the Westminster Orchestral Society, which gave its first concert of the season on December 5. Throughout the season nothing but compositions by English musicians will be presented, and, in accordance with this plan, the programme of the first concert included Dr. Villiers Stanford's "Festival" overture; Mr. E. Prout's symphony; and Mr. J. F. Barnett's "Pastoral Suite." The next concert will take place on March 13, when the most interesting feature will be the first performance of a Symphony in C, by C. S. Macpherson, the conductor of the society. The value of the work that is being done in this direction can scarcely be over-rated.

Signorina Elvira Gambogi had the honour of appearing on Tuesday last, before Her Majesty the Queen and the Royal Family at Windsor Castle, when she sang several operatic and other songs, with which Her Majesty was pleased to express her warm approval.

"THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL."

It is in nowise derogatory to Mr. Hamish MacCunn's power to say that in his new cantata, "The Lay of the Last Minstrel" (Novello & Co.), traces are to be found of the influence of Dvorak and Wagner. To sit at the feet of such masters is a proof of wisdom; for it is very certain Mr. MacCunn's genius is far too individual ever to become fettered by such scholarship. Again, Mr. MacCunn is content to develop his powers in a gradual and natural way, instead of attempting, as is often the case with young composers, after one prodigious leap to start from the point which was only reached by his forerunners after years of work and progress. It may also be safely asserted that few composers of equal ability have passed through what may be called the "picturesque" period of youth with so dominant an individuality, and owing so little of inspiration to another, as Mr. MacCunn.

It is possible to question the fitness of Scott's poem for musical treatment, even when abridged and condensed to "cantata" length. At its best the story is somewhat deficient in directness, and though there are occasional incidents of a highly dramatic sort, they are not sufficiently sequent for the purposes of such a work as the present. As the story stands the part played by the magic book taken from the wizard's grave, is by no means clear, and the introduction of the final chorus, "O Caledonia, stern and wild," is certainly foreign to the purpose, however appropriate it may be in the original poem. Of the music it is impossible, on the present occasion, to write adequately, inasmuch as Mr. MacCunn's most striking effects are in the domain of orchestral colouring, and, until the work has been performed, it is scarcely possible to do justice to it. It is, however, easy to see in every page of the score the same dramatic intensity, picturesqueness, and melodic beauty, that have up till now distinguished all Mr. Mac Cunn's work. The choral recitative, "But he, the Chieftain of them all," may be taken as an instance of this, in which a bold theme is worked up, with daring harmonies, to a Wagnerian finish; while the dramatic soprano solo, "Sir William of Deloraine," forms an admirable climax to the preceding fanciful and vivacious tenor solo, "Merry Elves." The influence of Dvorak is nowhere seen more plainly than in the chorus, "The clattering hoofs the watchmen mark," which expresses effectively the impetuosity of the words, and the scene at Melrose Abbey, which strikes powerfully the note of mystery, while the sudden change to the major at the last two lines is beautifully suggestive of the rest of Death. In Part II. there is no falling-off in power or significance; indeed, there is so sustained a force in the successive themes, that relief would almost be welcome. In Margaret's solo, "True love's the gift," there is, indeed, a certain descent beneath the high level of the rest, but, as a whole, the vivid colouring, the dramatic power, are equally apparent; and, postponing until after the first performance on Tuesday next at Glasgow further detailed criticism, we may briefly say that the work is emphatically one which will establish more firmly Mr. MacCunn's position as perhaps the most gifted of the younger contemporary composers.

THE BROWNING SOCIETY.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL WORLD."

SIR.—As the last meeting of the Browning Society dealt largely with musical matters, an account of it may not be without interest for your readers. Mr. B. L. Mosely was in the chair, supported on his right by Mr. Alfred Forman, on his left by Dr. Furnival, who read a paper by Miss Helen J. Ormerod entitled "Andrea del Sarto and Abt Vogler." The story of Andrea's life, his outward success and deep inner sense of failure were contrasted with the apparent failure but hidden sense of artistic success which characterised the life of Abbé Vogler.

Andrea was viewed not only as he was but as what he felt he might have been—without Lucrezia, who, Miss Ormerod maintained, had been the evil influence of his life. "Had Andrea in him the genius of those great ones for equal companionship with whom he yearned, and was he crushed by his heartless wife?" she asked. A powerful picture and a masterly analysis of the painter's downward career as a man were given, with the aid of copious extracts from Browning's poem; after which that of "Abt Vogler" was considered. Miss Ormerod very wisely refused to institute a comparison between music and painting, but quoted an interesting conversation she once had with Mr. Gastineau, the water-colour painter. "There will probably come a time," said the old artist, "when music will be too painful for you; and then you will find painting will soothe you." "I believe," said Miss Ormerod, "that it is given to music to create feelings of more intense joy and more acute pain than any other art, but Abbé Vogler reminds us of the recompense for the pain :—

> "Sorrow is hard to bear and doubt is hard to clear,
> Each sufferer says his say, his scheme of weal and woe;
> But God has a few of us whom he whispers in the ear;
> The rest may reason and welcome; 'tis we musicians know.'"

Miss Ormerod was singularly eloquent on the subject of honesty in Art, and strongly condemned the eager race for worldly success which drags so many artists down. She also emphasised the distinction between aim and achievement, but the conclusion drawn from this was not that arrived at by society generally. Miss Ormerod holds with Browning that "'Tis not what man Does which exalts him but what man Would do" (Saul), and with the thought put into the mouth of Vogler by the poet :—

> "All we have willed or hoped or dreamed of good shall exist."

The Chairman, after warmly acknowledging the merits of Miss Ormerod's paper, commented on Browning's knowledge and views with regard to music. Other poets, he said, had generalised more or less eloquently on the scope and essence of the art, but few, if any, had penetrated to the core of the matter as Browning had done. It was not so much his technical knowledge which was valuable (though in this he was better equipped than most poets), but his keen sense of the psychological problems offered by music, and of the emotional meaning of its various combinations. Numerous examples from his works were adduced in support of this view, among them lines from "A Toccata of Galuppi's," "Charles Avison," "Master Hugues of Saxe-Gotha," and "Abt Vogler." Mr. Mosely pointed out also that Browning's, Wagner's, and Schopenhauer's view of the functions of music were identical; e.g., Schopenhauer says: "Music stands apart from all the other arts, in that it is not an imitation of any reproduction of any idea of the things in the world as they are"; Wagner says: "The essence of music is this—that which all other arts only indicate, through it and in it, become unquestionable certainty, absolute and unquestionable truth"; and Browning (Avison):

> "There is no truer truth obtainable
> By man than comes from music."

Other passages also were quoted from Browning and Schopenhauer in proof of this contention. Mr. Mosely referred at some length to the poem, "Master Hugues of Saxe-Gotha," as exemplifying Browning's intimate acquaintance with the structure of a strict fugue. The poet seems to have taken the same view as Richard Wagner with regard to the fugue in its strict form. Neither of them looked with favour on the "expounding, explaining, wrangle, argument, dissertation, rejoinder." Says Browning :—

> "So your fugue broadens and thickens,
> Greatens and deepens and lengthens,
> Till we exclaim, 'But where's Music, the Dickens?'"

Mr. Mosely drew attention to the fact that Wagner had used the strict fugue but once—in the street row in the "Meistersinger." In conclusion he said: "There is one more analogy between Wagner and Browning—their exaltation, their ecstasy, their 'clairvoyance' (according to Schopenhauer), their unconscious creative instinct (according to Hartmann). This is the salient characteristic of their work. What differentiates such men of genius from men of talent is this—the idea seizes hold of them, not they of the idea, and will not relax its grasp till it has compelled them to work it out; whereas with men of talent the idea is sought and elaborated with diligence upon approved æsthetic lines. Wagner and Browning, he claimed, were the leading tragic dramatists of the age. This remark gave rise later to a spirited passage of arms between Dr. Furnival and Mr. Alfred Forman. The former contended that Browning's plays were not dramatic, that his dramas were not actable, while Mr. Forman stoutly maintained the contrary. 'The merits of Browning's plays,' said he, 'are absolute and transcendental—their defects are merely relative..'"

Yours, &c.,
GIGADIBS

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

Mr. E. H. Turpin read a paper on December 3 on "The Instincts of Musical Form." He said that he did not propose to enter the field of technical knowledge, or to treat his subject from the poetic side, but to show that music is not an independent art power, but is one member of the great art family, amenable to certain natural laws and acquired habits of thought which govern all the other members of the sisterhood of art. One division of art dealt with tangible material and appealed to the mind through the sense of sight, as in painting and sculpture; the other employed intangible material, such as sound, and appealed to the mind through the sense of hearing, as in literature and music. In all the arts we found certain great natural laws asserting themselves. Thus, evolution and multiplication of detail, gravitation of detail to central structural points, and the due proportion of the various parts forming a given whole, are apparent in all forms of objectivity, whether tabulated as objects of nature or of art. Broadly viewed, the outlines of form are presentation or exposition, development and recapitulation, or resultant attainment. Such processes have not only grown in the various arts in identically the same manner, but they characterise the operations of nature herself. Mr. Turpin then instituted a comparison between the methods of the poet, dramatist, and novelist, and that of the musician, showing how they were guided by the same principles of form, and pointed out that the lyric, epic, and dramatic qualities were as recognisable in music as in poetry. It was curious that in following the study of human aspiration and actions, the dramatists first succeeded in giving method to the instincts of literary form; not less curious was it that the revolts against the abuse and tyranny of form should have arisen on the stage at different artistic epochs of the world's history, where all must of necessity be artificial. The reforms of Gluck were chiefly confined to deepening expression, and preserving appropriate naturalness. Wagner grasped the truth that the arts had great principles in common, and his giant efforts to bring all the arts into one common focus of action were matters of history. It may be, in course of time, people will be as readily impressed by, and as familiarly acquainted with musical, as with verbal forms and idioms; then indeed, by force of this yet to be created artistic memory will be the full fruition of the philosophic reforms of Wagner. So far as the instincts of musical form were based upon the strength and eternal action of natural laws, certain principles would ever remain for the guidance of coming generations of composers and deserved to be recognised as philosophic impulses, seeking by artistic methods to strengthen the memory, quicken mental perceptions, and enforce impressions by the exercise of logical power.

Dr. Hubert Parry was one of the speakers in the subsequent discussion.

Concerts.

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS

Last Saturday, as at the previous concert, Madame Neruda was prevented by indisposition from being at her post, and her place was again taken by Mr. Straus; Mendelssohn's Quartet in E flat being given instead of the promised Spohr in A major (Op. 93), the rest of the programme remaining unaltered, M.M. Ries, Hollander, and Piatti, completed the quartet; and Mdlle. Janotha, who was the pianist, played with much intelligence and finish, Beethoven's Sonata in E minor, and, as an encore, the variations on "Rule Britannia." In Schumann's Violin and Piano Sonata in A minor that sense of ease born of perfect sympathy between the executants was not attained. But how rarely it is, when one of the instruments in question is the piano! In Schumann's Pianoforte Quartet the same want of absolute smoothness was apparent, and in the first movement an "all abroad" state of things set in for a short time; but, owing to the prominence of the pianoforte part, it is probable that none but those who were thoroughly familiar with the work, or who were following the score, were aware of the fact. Mr. Edward Lloyd, who was in fine voice, sang Gluck's "'Tis thy words," showing by his delivery of the line, "So I only die near thee," which closes the recitative in the stereotyped manner, how the most ordinary phrase can be lifted out of the commonplace. He also sang two of Dvorak's Gipsy songs, repeating the second—the beautiful "Songs my mother taught me." Mr. C. Hopkins Ould accompanied in his usual admirable manner.

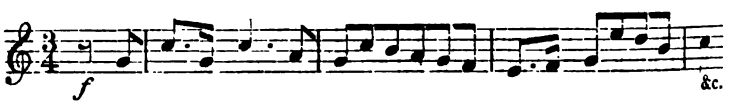
LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Last Tuesday's performance showed a great improvement. Mr. Henschel had his forces well under control, and his bâton for the nonce relaxed its severity. The result was seen in excellent renderings of Berlioz's "Harold' Symphony, Beethoven's "Coriolan" Overture, Wagner's "Träume," and the Hungarian March from Berlioz's "Faust." The date of the concert being the anniversary of the French composer's birthday, there was ample excuse, had such been needed, for the presentation of works from his pen. "Harold in Italy," however, is always well worth hearing; it contains some of its composer's best music—for example, the Pilgrim's March and the "Serenade." The Viola solo, which runs with such beautiful effect through the work, was well played by Mr. Emil Kreuz, not long ago a student at the Royal College of Music. Madame Essipoff gave a brilliant and tasteful reading of Saint Saens' Concerto in G minor. The piece suits her admirably, and she was heard in consequence at her best, which is very good indeed. On Wednesday next the first morning concert will be given. Beethoven's C minor is promised, and Mrs. Henschel will sing.

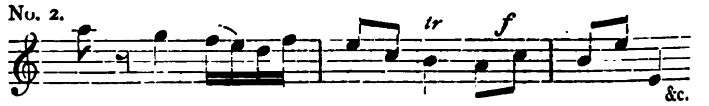
HERR WALDEMER MEYER'S CONCERT.

The second orchestral concert of this now well-known artist, given on Wednesday, will, for many reasons, largely add to his already considerable reputation. His performances of the violin concertos of Beethoven and Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, and of the adagio from Spohr's "9th" were marked by the broad style, intelligent phrasing, admirable technique, and finished, though never exaggerated, expression which had before been recognised. An indication of the golden opinions won by Herr Meyer was afforded by the presence of Dr. Mackenzie, who conducted his own work. Apart from this, however, the occasion was rendered permanently interesting by the first performance of Dr. Stanford's new Concert Overture, "Queen of the Seas," composed in celebration of the Tercentenary of the defeat of the Spanish Armada. This is no pièce d'occasion, doomed to speedy oblivion, but a genial and powerful work, thoughtfully conceived and carried out with the skill and, let us add, the reticence of a master. The leading themes of the overture are three—typifiying respectively the English, Spanish, and Religious elements of the subject which inspired the composer. We subjoin them:—

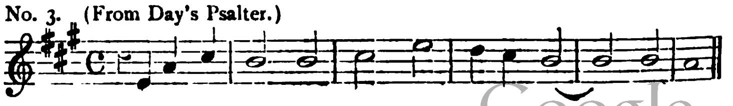
No. 1.



No. 2.



No. 3. (From Day's Psalter.)



In the "working-out" section the three subjects are variously combined in a manner which unmistakably suggests the fight, the English subject (No. 1) finally asserting itself, though by no means in the blustering and swaggering style so dear to the youth of Britain. Dr. Stanford's overture, though to a certain extent descriptive, may safely challenge criticism as a piece of "pure" music. Judged either way, it is a worthy contribution to English art. Dr. Stanford being at the conductor's desk, it goes without saying that his work was sympathetically rendered; but we had also to thank him for an exceptionally good performance of Goetz's charming Symphony in F, and for the general efficiency of the orchestra all through the evening.

THE NOVELLO CHOIR.

Dr. Parry's "Judith," with an excellent performance of which Dr. Mackenzie inaugurated his campaign on Thursday, the 6th inst., was so fully dealt with at the time of its production at Birmingham that we do not hesitate to defer until next week such remarks as we have to offer upon the work itself. Such a course is, moreover, amply justified by the fact that "Judith" will be given again to-day at Sydenham under the same conductor. Opinions based upon a second hearing within little more than a week of the first will naturally be given with greater confidence than it is now possible to feel. It may be said, however, that the public seems to have quite made up its mind that "Judith" is a great work. Unstinted applause, rising at times to a high pitch of enthusiasm, was a distinguishing feature of Thursday's performance. Dr. Parry was several times called to the platform, and choir and principals did their utmost to deserve the appreciation so freely bestowed.

MADAME PATTI'S SECOND CONCERT.

Madame Adelina Patti's second concert was given at the Albert Hall on Tuesday last, when, it is needless to say, the vast building was crammed with an audience anxious to welcome the diva on her return, with added laurels, from the Paris Opera House. Madame Patti chose, as her contributions to the evening's programme, the recitative and aria from "La Sonnambula," "Ah, non credea," and "Ah, non giunge," and Gounod's "Ave Maria," besides joining Mr. Lloyd in the duet, "Tornami à der," from "Don Pasquale." It would be waste of words to describe the manner in which Madame Patti sang throughout; there is but one Patti, and it may easily be imagined that on the present occasion she sang in a way that justified the enthusiasm of the audience, which insisted upon encoring each song. The artists associated with Madame Patti were in every way worthy of the occasion. Madame Sterling sang Cowen's "The reaper and the flowers" and Hullah's "Three fishers." Mr. Edward Lloyd was in excellent form, singing Clay's "I'll sing thee songs of Araby," and the "Cujus Animam" from Rossini's "Stabat Mater"; while Mr. Santley, who seems to have discovered the secret of perpetual youth, sang, in a way that recalled the days of his greatest triumphs, Sullivan's "Thou'rt passing hence" and Shield's "The wolf." A special word of praise should be accorded to Mdlle. Marianne Eissler, whose violin solos were as remarkable as ever for exquisite tone, graceful expression, and highly finished execution. The band, under the able direction of Mr. Wilhelm Ganz, performed, inter alia, Beethoven's "Egmont" overture, and Gounod's "Funeral march of a Marionette."

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

In spite of an excellent programme, last Monday's concert was a decidedly depressing affair. A scanty audience, the absence of Mme. Néruda through continued indisposition, and the foggy weather, were the suitable complements of a somewhat ineffective performance. The concert commenced with Schumann's delightful A minor Quartet, which was tamely played, and had not even the redeeming merit of technical accuracy. A lifeless performance of the first movement was the necessary result of the slow tempo adopted, and Herr Straus seemed almost unable to enter into the spirit of the bright and picturesque finale. The two middle movements went better, but failed to rise above the level of respectable mediocrity. An otherwise good performance of Rubinstein's Trio in B flat was marred by Mme. Essipoff's successful endeavours to prevent the strings being heard. This is the more to be wondered at, as the work is by her own countryman, and one with which she might have been expected to be in fullest sympathy. Mdme. Essipoff is undoubtedly a great artist, but she sometimes sacrifices the higher qualities of artistic expression and reticence to her marvellous technique. This, however, was not the case with renderings of an air by Gluck and a caprice by Scarlatti, which will surely live long in the memory of those who heard them. She also played (in conjunction with Mdme. Fannie Bloomfield) Saint-Saëns's masterly "Variations on a Theme by Beethoven" in a manner which fully justified her European celebrity. Mr. Thorndike was the vocalist and sang an effective Spanish Lullaby (the 'cello obbligato by Signor Piatti) by Gerard Cobb, and three pretty songs by Lassen, but he was so obviously out of voice, that criticism is quite unnecessary.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The Symphony on Saturday last was Mozart's ever welcome "G Minor." Sir George Grove inserted some pertinent remarks in the programme on the change which has taken place since Mozart's day in the expression of emotion—that of grief especially—by means of music. The change, he points out, began with the French Revolution. Beethoven, Schubert, and Schumann "have accustomed us to the relation of their troubles, and the forms of combinations under which they express their grief have become so familiar that it is difficult to recognise the same feeling which they convey (if indeed it exists) under the quieter phrases, the elegant forms, the less remote harmonies, the regular rhythms of the G minor symphony." It were well if this question of progress were better understood by amateurs, since comprehension of its inevitable laws would put a stop both to sneers at that which is called "old fashioned," and to complaints against modern efforts to enlarge the boundaries of symmetrical form. All such superficial views are the outcome of comparisons which we have no right to make, since every healthy style must necessarily reflect the tendencies of its epoch. Mr. Praeger's fine Symphonic Prelude to Byron's "Manfred," which had not been heard here for eight years, was very well received. It is a noble work, full of passion, and embodying with rare felicity the despair and yearning of the central figure, his love for Astarte, and his conflict with the spirits. The love theme is very beautifully treated, and the whole reveals a master hand. It is pleasant to hear that Mr. Manns has underlined the work for performance in Edinburgh on the 7th January next. The other orchestral items were Berlioz's overture, "Les Francs Juges," and the overture to Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Yeomen of the Guard." Of the latter we do not feel called to speak. though something might doubtless be said of its appropriateness in such a programme; nor is it possible on the present occasion to deal adequately with Berlioz's work, of which the composer, writing to Humbert Ferrard (Oct 30, 1829) said: "Nothing, I swear to you, is so terrifically fearful as my overture to the 'Francs Juges.' It is a hymn to despair—the most deplorable, horrible, tender despair that can be imagined." There is, in truth, an almost oppressively colossal sombreness about the work in question, claiming kinship with "the larger utterance" of a bygone time. Its performance on Saturday was adequate, and the same may be said of the rendering, so far as the orchestra was concerned, of Schubert's setting of the Twenty-third Psalm, and of Mr. MacCunn's ballad, "Lord Ullin's Daughter." M. Marsick was the solo violinist, and presented Wieniawski's Concerto in D. His tone is somewhat thin, nor is he to be specially distinguished from the crowd of good soloists who now throng our concert-rooms. Mdlle. Antoinette Trebelli, who was the vocalist, achieved a fair measure of success in Mozart's "Non mi dir" and the Polacca from "Mignon."

Reviews.

INSTRUMENTAL.

Lovers of good music should direct their attention to a series of no less than seventeen books containing over one hundred pianoforte pieces, by a young Spanish composer, Del Valle de Paz. Apart from the novelty of pianoforte music hailing from Spain, these pieces are exquisite little-tone pictures distinguished by grace and poetic fancy, combined with no ordinary musicianship, and they are, with few exceptions, not tinged with Spanish "couleur locale," of which, however charming in itself, we have, since the extraordinary success of "Carmen," had a little too much. They rather breathe the spirit of Schumann and of that delightful and (in this country) unfamiliar composer, Theodore Kirchner, yet with a distinct "cachet" of their own. Their technical difficulty is very moderate, but more suitable specimens for the study of refined expression it would be difficult to name. Let the intelligent performer take up at random, say, the "Fleurs et chansons," Ops. 23 and 39 ("Flowers" which keep their fragrance, and will not fade!) or the "Morceaux de Salon" Ops. 35 and 36 (too good and likewise too easy to justify their title) or the delicious "Canzonette amorose," Op. 44, or the "Idylles," Op. 69, and "Miniatures" Op. 71—a surprising flow of original inspiration being fully maintained to the latest—and he will be sure to ask for the rest, especially as the music is published in Messrs. Augener and Co.'s edition at an almost nominal cost.

Next Week's Concerts.

		P.M.
SATURDAY (THIS DAY) DECEMBER 15.
Saturday Popular Concert	St. James's Hall	3
"The Golden Legend" (Royal Choral Society)	Albert Hall	8
"Judith"	Crystal Palace	3
MONDAY, 17.
Monday Popular Concert	St. James's Hall	8.30
TUESDAY, 18.
"Messiah"	St. James's Hall	8
WEDNESDAY, 19.
Extra Symphony Concert	St. James's Hall	3
THURSDAY, 20.
Royal Amateur Orchestral Society—First Smoking Concert	Prince's Hall	9

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Advertisements of Concerts, &c., will be received up to 4 p.m. on Thursdays, if addressed to the Manager, 138a, Strand, W.C. "The Musical World" is the recognised medium for advertising London, Suburban, and Provincial Concerts, and has no other address whatever for the reception of communications.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE, and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be of the greatest efficacy in every form of disease. Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.

Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT, 78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 3, or by letter

Publishers' Announcements.

NEW PART SONGS FOR S.A.T.B.
By W. W. PEARSON.

'Tis Morn! (Edwin Oxenford)	3d.
The Oyster Dredgers	2d.
Welcome, young Spring	2d.
Off to Sea (Edward Oxenford)	4d.
HUMOROUS PART SONGS.
Three Doughtie Men (30th thousand)	3d.
Three Children Sliding (6th thousand)	3d.
A Ryghte Merrie Geste	4d.
The Snow-white Doe (just published)	4d.
Ben Bowlegs (Edward Oxenford)	3d.
The Carrion Crow	3d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO., 1, Berners Street, W.

ROECKEL'S PATENT PAMPHONIA.

Model Music Staff with Movable Lines, for teaching rapidly the three clefs and general notation.

Particulars and Testimonials post free.

Messrs. CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.

AND ALL MUSICSELLERS.

Publishers Announcements—continued.

LOVE'S GOLDEN DREAM. Lindsay Lennox.

LOVE'S GOLDEN DREAM (Lindsay Lennox). — This charming song will be SUNG by Mr. SIMS REEVES, during the coming season. 2s. net. "A charming new waltz-song, sure to become popular, and will most probably become a rage this season. It is one of those pretty little morsels of which one does not tire in a hurry."—Northamptonshire Guardian. —London Music Publishing Company (Limited). 54, Great Marlborough-street, W.

VIOLIN TUTOR:

PRACTICAL VIOLIN SCHOOL, for Home Students. A Practical Book of Instructions and Exercises in Violin Playing, for the use of Amateurs, Self-learners, Teachers and others. By J. M. FLEMING. 1 vol., demy 4to, cloth gilt, price 7s. 6d.; also in monthly parts, 7d. "Can be heartily recommended to students who wish to lay a solid foundation for good and artistic playing."—Musical Standard.

London: L. UPCOTT GILL, 170, Strand, W.C.

TO COMPOSERS,—RIDGEWAY and CO., Music Publishers 10, Argyll Street, W. undertake the REVISING. PRINTING, and PUBLISHING of Musical Works upon exceptionally low terms. The finest work in the trade. Estimates upon receipt of MSS. IMPORTANT.—Composers' Works included in Catalogue and introduced without extra charge.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE,

By T. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 27, Harley Street, W.

THE VOICE.

A Complete Explanation of the Throat and its Functions in Breathing and in the Production of Voice, will be found in

"ELOCUTION, VOICE, & GESTURE."

By RUPERT GARRY.

Remedies for Clearing and Strengthening the Voice, and for the Cure of Hoarseness, Sore Throat, and other derangements of the Breathing Tubes.

"The section on the Voice is well considered and trustworthy, based as is on the writings of authorities on the question of the Hygiene of the Vocal Organs."—STAGE.

"The Book contains many valuable hints in regard to Voice and Gesture."—VOICE (New York).

POST FREE, 1s. 2d.

London: Bemrose, 23, Old Bailey, E.C., and of the Author, at his residence, 49, Torrington Square, W.C.

IN SIX GRADES,

Price Two Shillings each.

Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:

A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,

By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, bu we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWANN SONNENSCHEIN and CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE;
And all Book and Music Sellers.

The Organ World.

SOME SUGGESTED MODIFICATIONS OF DAY'S HARMONY, TO MEET THE VARIOUS OBJECTIONS RAISED AGAINST HIS THEORY.

PAPER READ BY DR. C. W. PEARCE, F.C.O., BEFORE THE COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

(Continued from page 193.)

With the first proposition we need not concern ourselves, for it concedes the whole point at issue. If we like physical music from choice, then the logical basis of our music is psychical, not physical, and if we succeed in establishing a correspondence between it and physical music it is one of cause and effect. It may present coincidence, it cannot furnish causation, it may illustrate, it cannot explain with regard to the second proposition, that we are born to like physical music. Mr. Cobb observed that the whole position had a semi-ethical, semi-theological air calculated to provoke a smile of surprise, not to say amusement, were it not for the extreme practical importance of the theories which it has been thus invoked to support.

Dealing with the third proposition that because these natural sounds have always formed part of our musical surroundings—so to speak—our ears have grown to like them, Mr. Cobb gave a four-handed arrangement upon the piano of the harmonic chord as far as the 16th Harmonic (it is far too hideous to be reproduced upon this occasion), and went on to say that out of this chord, as out of a mine, we are supposed to have unearthed the various groups of notes which go to form the scale and the chords of psychical music, and apart from this chord, as the natural origin from which our music is derived, our brain must be supposed to be a musical blank, or at least to be musically passive. To obviate all possible objection to this reasoning, Mr. Cobb further assumed that it was the Harmonic Scale rather than the Harmonic Chord which was so familiar to us, and then went on to show how absurd it was to maintain that our psychical scale could have been evolved from the physical scale even supposing that ever since there was a human ear to listen to it, some colossal Alpine horn blown by a giant of the hills had been perpetually droning out the world over, the scale of nature even up to the 48th harmonic.

In addition to Mr. Cobb's argumentative reasoning against the derivation of our modern scale from natural supposed phenomena, it is possible to reduce this assumption to still greater absurdity. Let us take the sister art of painting as an analogous example. What should we say to any Royal Academician who insisted upon teaching us that all the glowing colours now exhibited upon the walls of the Burlington House were derived, nay more than derived, were obtained by some subtle process of chemical solution from the rainbow which appeared to Noah when he came out of the Ark! Yet this is not worse than the astounding dogma poor musical students are requested to swallow,—viz., that the whole system of music from the days of Ecclesiastical plain song to the chromatic gorgeousness of Beethoven, Spohr, Berlioz and Wagner has been evolved, suggested and inspired by the mathematical harmonies of a stretched string or an inflated organ pipe!

The many interesting phenomena, therefore, with which musical acoustics present us are to be dealt with in their relation to the brain precisely as we deal with other problems of the same class—they may and can explain difference, they cannot account for, much less compel difference. The brain is as free and autocratic in this corner of its empire as in any other, and if music of this nature—part that is of a system of operations in which psychic choice holds sway—then the logical origin of music is most unquestionably psychical and not physical; and theories which take as their basis the axiom that what is physically provided and physiologically received is necessarily productive of certain psychic effects are not theories which can meet with approval from an educational point of view.

MORE ABOUT CHURCH MUSIC.

In "Church Bells" on this subject the writer, S. A. LEWIS, observes:—

As one of many, who have suffered much at times from 'Congregational singing,' I know there is much to be said on what I will call the unpopular side of the question, and I trust you will, with your usual generosity, permit me to advance a few arguments in favour of good, intelligent, and devotional choir singing, as distinguished from bad, unintelligent, and, consequently, undevotional singing by the congregation.

Let me premise that all worship to be real must be a matter of heart feeling, as opposed to mere outward expression. This applies to all parts of worship—whether prayer, praise, or hearing the Word. If it be conceded that—

"Prayer is the soul's sincere desire, Uttered or unexpressed,"

the same concession must logically be made as regards praise, and it cannot, therefore, be deemed more essential to praise than to prayer that it must necessarily be loud-mouthed; in both cases it is the assent of the heart to the external act which constitutes true worship, otherwise those who are unable from physical defect or other cause to give actual utterance to their worship cannot be said to worship at all —a position, which I venture to say, no one will take up.

That our worship should be performed both with heart and voice I dare not deny, but as our public prayers are offered silently, our hearts going up in unison with the audible utterances of the minister, so I contend that certain portions of the sacrifice of praise may be worthily offered by a devout listener, whose heart is attuned to the melody of the pealing anthem or the tuneful canticle, carefully and reverently sung by the recognised exponents of the service of song. Such a listener, though his lips move not, enters fully into the spirit of the exhortation, "Sing ye praises with understanding," which I take to imply not only an understanding of the spiritual significance of the act, but also an understanding of the method of performing it.

It seems to be taken for granted by most advocates of congregational singing, pure and simple, that every one has a "singing" voice, and, moreover, that every one knows how to use it. How far this is from being the case! How many worthy people are there, who, if requested to sing in a drawing-room, bashfully decline on the plea of lack of voice, want of musical knowledge, and so forth, yet how many such persons do not hesitate to utter the most discordant sounds at Church. That which they know is not good enough to offer for the amusement of their friends is deemed quite good enough for the worship of Almighty God.

It is very well for the clergy and organists, seated at a respectable distance from such disturbing influences, to pronounce in favour of "congregational singing," but let such be located service after service in close proximity to some lusty vocalist, whose notions of harmony differ from those of the composer, and who indulges in excruciating variations upon the music as sung by the choir, and I am sure they would confess that such congregational singing is not conducive to devotion in those worshippers situated within range of the sound of his efforts.

Some time since such a singer as I refer to took a pew immediately behind mine. This gentleman was the possessor of a peculiarly strident but penetrating bass voice, which vibrated upon the sensory aural nerves in a painful manner; but he was a zealous singer, and his idea of harmony was limited to two intervals, viz., tonic, dominant; tonic, dominant; tonic, dominant; and these two intervals, and no others, he persistently shouted within two feet of my ears throughout every chant, hymn, kyrie, &c., &c. I ask, what could be the effect upon the devotion of neighbouring worshippers of such congregational singing as this?

Again, I once attended matins at Westminster Abbey. It was my misfortune to be seated next to an elderly lady, who, in shrill, quavering tones, accompanied the choir in everything except the despised "ornate settings" of the Te Deum, Benedictus, &c. This lady was also another zealous singer, for, when by some mischance she failed to find the Psalms for the day, she continued to pipe out an inarticulate sound upon an open vowel, but without uttering a single word. Can this kind of singing by any stretch of charity be deemed to be "singing praises with understanding?" How welcome was the sense of relief when the canticles were sung with the expression and skill by the choir to "settings" in which my neighbour could not attempt to take part!

One more experience. I once attended evensong at a large parish church. In the pew next behind sat one of three hearty singers. Not one single Amen did he suffer to pass by, but from first to last he accompanied every musical item in a voice about as melodious as a coffee mill in full swing, a little louder, and more "raspy," if anything. I need hardly say that for myself and friend the whole service was simply spoilt by this congregational singer. A few days later I heard from one of the regular worshippers at the church in question, that this hearty vocalist was known as the "tin-kettle," his noisy contributions to the services being so notorious that it was found impossible to let the pews in the near neighbourhood of his sitting. Will the most enthusiastic advocate of congregational singing maintain that this person, who, to say the least, was little short of a nuisance to other worshippers, added anything to the glory of God by his strepent efforts, which had the effect of silencing everybody near him, for it was impossible to joint in chant or hymn in company with such an inharmonious vocalist?

Probably your readers will think me very un-Christian for wishing to check, in the least degree, the humble outpourings of my fellow-creatures in the sanctuary, and will count me no better than a heathen for my pains. With due deference to their opinion, I can but think that God is more glorified by one who devoutly listens while those set apart for the work offer to Him their best efforts to make His praise to be glorious than by one who is so fond of the sound of his own voice that he drowns every one else in a very flood of noise and jargon.

That this kind of singing is not uncommon I know, for, in my capacity of sidesman at my parish church, I hear much of it as I pass about among the congregation, and, to a normally musical ear, it is not only distracting, but also utterly destructive of real devotional feeling, and I claim that those who have been endowed by God with some degree of musical taste, and who feel that music is a proper vehicle of religious fervour, are entitled to offer their worship in peace, undisturbed by such hindrances as I have feebly described. Now as to the remedy.

This lies chiefly in the hands of the clergy, who alone possess the opportunity of addressing their congregations upon such matters, and who, therefore, are in the best position to advise them as to the conduct of their portion of the services, and to lead them up to a better appreciation thereof. I can do no more than briefly suggest a few bare outlines of "reform." 1. Church choirs should be trained to their highest capacity, so that their function may be performed in the best possible manner to the glory of God. 2. That the clergy should endeavour to publicly regulate the singing by requesting the congregation to sing only at certain parts of the services. Without venturing to dogmatise upon the subject, I might suggest, e.g., that in the Psalms and Canticles (when the latter are sung to chants) it might very well suffice for the congregation to join in at the Glorias only. This would be in pursuance of the rule followed in the prayers, when the people are silent except during the concluding assenting Amen. 3. Printed requests to the above effect might be distributed in lieu of those which we meet with in some churches requesting the congregation indiscriminately to "join in the singing." 4. It would be an immense advantage if the clergy would in a kindly manner suggest to their congregations that only those who are able to "sing from music" should attempt to sing in harmony. Others would do well to confine themselves to singing the air in a subdued tone of voice, thus conforming to the spirit of the general exhortation, wherein they are asked to accompany their minister "with a pure heart and humble voice." 5. The congregation should be publicly requested to stand during the singing of the anthem. For some years past the contrary practice has been gaining ground, based, probably upon the mistaken idea that because the singing is confined to the choir the congregation have no part or lot in it; the fact being that the anthem is the highest tribute of praise offered on behalf of the congregation during the whole service, and should therefore be the subject of their recognition in the way indicated. Not to stand during this portion of Divine service is, to my mind, to be guilty of irreverence. 6. The congregation might also from time to time be reminded that shouting is not singing any more than whispering the prayers is praying, both of which disconcerting practices are all too common.

Many other suggestions might be made, but here I must stop.

AN EIGHTEENTH CENTURY MUSIC BOOK.

A correspondent, writing to "Church Bells" on Church Music observes:—"The 'Compleat Psalmodist,' fourth edition, by John Arnold, Philo-musicæ (London, 1756). It consists of four parts, each with its own title-page and separate paging, though all in one volume of 422 pages, small octavo. The First Part is called the introduction, being a short treatise on music, including a great variety of subjects, from the gamut to composition in five, six, seven, and eight parts, and the rudiments of what is now known as the Tonic Sol-Fa Notation. As a sort of appendix to this introduction there is a copious dictionary of musical terms. This part, introduction and dictionary, have been so abundantly thumbed that the leaves are all loose. The Second Part contains 'A set of Services commonly called Chanting-tunes, together with four-and-twenty excellent Anthems composed of solos, fugues, and choruses, after the Cathedral manner.' The Third Part 'being proper for parish-clerks, and useful to country congregations . . . . for the use of country choirs') gives one or more extracts from each of the 150 psalms in Sternhold and Hopkins' version, almost invariably of four verses, and with accompanying tunes. The Fourth, and much the smallest part, contains twelve hymns and canons. It may be worth while to give a list of the hymns: 'While shepherds watch'd,' 'Rejoice, rejoice, ye mortals, all rejoice' (for Christmas), 'A Virgin unspotted,' 'Mourn, mourn, ye Saints' (Good Friday), 'Christ from the dead is raised,' 'Jesus Christ is risen to-day,' 'He's come; let every knee be bent' (Whit Sunday), 'Lord, tune our souls with one accord' (Trinity) a hymn on the joys of Heaven—'Never weather-beaten sail more willing bent to shore,' the Angel's Hymn, a metrical version of Luke ii. 14, and comment thereon. In this quaint old book we seem to have an eighteenth-century forecast of Mercer's Psalter and Hymn-book, with a treatise on music besides. I am not quite sure whether the vast quantities of hymns that we now possess are altogether an improvement on the rough but pathetic psalms which used to content our forefathers. But besides the change from psalms to hymns, there has been, since the middle of the last century, a change quite as great in the arrangement of psalm and hymn-tunes. In Arnold's book the air is always in the tenor; the treble equally with the 'contra,' and 'bassus' is an accompaniment. Does this imply that our country singers in those days were chiefly men, instead of, as at present, children?" The writer is possibly wrong with regard to the tenor being the leading part, as in the sixteenth century, and led astray by the habit a hundred years ago of writing psalm and hymn-tunes, &c., on the score with alto at the top, the tenor next, then the treble above the bass, so that the two bottom lines, with the addition now and then of a few small notes, formed the accompaniment, and the treble occupied the place of the tenor as being next to the bass.

"Part 2 begins with 'The Order of Performing the Divine Service in Cathedrals and Collegiate Chapels, commonly called Chanting-Tunes.' The first rule or rubric stands thus: 'The Confession and Absolution being read by the Priest in one continued solemn tone, the Priest and Choir repeats the Lord's Prayer, thus,' then follows a musical stave for the Lord's Prayer, monotoned on D. 'O Lord, open,' &c., and its response, on the lower A. The first note of 'O Lord, make speed,' &c., is D; the rest, with the response, Gloria, &c., on F. The reciting notes for the versicles and in Litany, are almost exactly as in Mercer, except that the Lord's Prayer sinks to D in the versicles, and in the Litany to D for all except 'But deliver,' which goes down to B. All this is set in the bass clef and unharmonised. But in the 'Second Service' the responses to the Commandments, and the Gloria before the Gospel, are harmonised, the air being here, as in the psalm-tunes, in the tenor. The Litany is to be sung 'by two of the choir in the middle of the church, near the Bible desk, the whole choir answering,' &c 'The second service is begun by the Priest, who reads the Lord's Prayer in one grave tone, the deeper (if strong and audible) the Swell Organ (Compass Co to a3).—Bourdon, 16 ft., wood; Open diapason, 8 ft., metal; Stopped Diapason, 8 ft., metal; Salicional, 8 ft., metal; Aeoline, 8 ft., metal; Fugara, 4 ft., metal; Fluite Harmoique, 4 ft., metal; Cornet, 3 rks., metal; Cornopeon, 8 ft., metal; Oboe and Bassoon, 8 ft., metal.

Choir Organ (Compass Co to a3).—Viola, 8 ft., metal; Dulciana, 8 ft., metal; Melodia, 8 ft., wood; Flute d'Amour, 4 ft., wood and metal; Violina, 4 ft., metal; Piccolo, 2 ft., metal; Clarionet, 8 ft., metal.

Pedal Organ (Compass Cl to C—a curiously deficient compass in these days)—Open diapason, 16 ft., wood; Bourdon, 16 ft., wood; Posaune, 16 ft., wood; Octave Bass, 8 ft., wood; Violoncello, 8 ft., wood.

Mechanical Registers—Great to Pedal Coupler; Swell to Great Coupler; Choir to Pedal Coupler; Swell to Pedal Coupler; Swell to Choir Coupler; Choir to Coupler; Tremolo.

Pneumatic Push Buttons.—Choir Organ Forte, Swell Organ Forte, Fortissimo Full Organ.

Pedal Movements.—Couplers; Great Organ Forte; Choir Organ Forte; Swell Pianissimo; Swell Organ Forte; Great Organ Forte; Choir Mezzo Forte; Reeds.

Crescendo and Decresendo.—A mechanical contrivance to draw all the stops of the organ one after the other, commencing with the softer one, reaching full organ, and then decreasing in the same manner.

Balanced Swell Pedal.—Total number of pipes, 2049. All the stops of the organ to be supplied with the Wirsching Improved Pneumatic Action.

Sydney, N.S.W.—Dr. Charles Vincent has been specially desired by Mr. G. Lardelli, F.C.O., organist of St. Matthew's Church, Sydney, N.S.W., to inspect and report on the organ, which has just been built from his specification for that church, and now standing in the factory of the builder, Mr. August Gern, of Notting Hill. The scheme is as follows:—

Great Organ.—Open Diapason, Lieblich Gedact, Principal, Flauto Traverso, 56 pipes each; Dulcina, 44 pipes.

Swell Organ.—Hohl Flute, Viole de Gamba, Gemshorn, Piccolo, Trumpet, 56 pipes each; Voix Celestes, tenor C, 44 pipes.

Pedal Organ.—Bourdon, Flute Bass, 30 pipes each.

Couplers.—Swell to Great, Swell to Pedals, Great to Pedal, Octave on Great, Swell Sub to Great, Tremulant.

Self recovering Pedal, Great to Pedal. Self-recovering Pedal, Tremulant in and out. Two Composition Pedals to Great, two ditto to swell.

Gern's Tubular Pneumatic System throughout.

SUMMARY.

Great Organ: 5 stops, 268 pipes.—Swell: 6 stops, 324 pipes.—Pedal: 2 stops, 60 pipes.—Couplers: 6 stops.—Total: 19 stops, 652 pipes.

It is stated that Mr. Gern is well-known as a specialist in tubular-pneumatic work, which in this organ is on a 3½-inch pressure. It is stated that the touch is light, the pipes speak instantaneously, and the repetition is perfect. The distinctive character of each stop, the effective couplers (pneumatic), especially the swell sub. to great, the steadiness of the wind under the most severe tests, and the general workmanship, are reported as especially worthy of notice.

RECITAL NEWS.

Esher Parish Church—The third of the series of organ recitals was given on Nov. 19, when Mr. Adkins, the organist, was prevented from playing by an accident, Mr. Sewell, F.C.O., taking his place. Mr. D. Price, A.R.C.M., was the vocalist:—Sonata in F minor (1st movement), Rheinberger; Andante in D, Silas; Fugue on the name of Bach, Liszt; Air, with Variations, Rea; Concertstück, Töpfer; Symphony in G (Largo), Hayden; Concerto No. 5, Handel. The fourth of the series, on Nov. 26, Mr. Adkins, F.C.O., presiding at the organ, and Mr. D. Price the vocalist:—Overture to Samson, Handel; Offertoire, J. F. Barnett; Melody and Andante, Silas; Dirge (in memoriam), J. E. Adkins; Sonata No. 2 (Largo) Beethoven; Theme in A, with nine Variations and Finale Fugato, Smart.

St. John, Ladywood, Birmingham.—The first of a series of Organ Recitals was given by Mr. H. Taylor, F.C.O., on Wednesday evening, Nov. 21. Programme: Festive March in D, Smart; Introduction, Air, and Variations, in A, Hesse; Sonata in D Minor, No. 6, Mendelssohn (Choral with Variation, D Minor, Fugue, D Minor, Andante, D); Fantasia, E Minor, Merkel; Communion in F, Grison, Grand Chœur in B flat, Dubois.

Bow and Bromley Institute, on Saturday, December 1st, 1888. The following programme was rendered by Miss Florence Baker (Pianoforte) and Mr. Ralph Norris (Organ), Rondo from Concerto, E minor, Chopin; Adagio and Allegro vivace (Concerto in A minor), Grieg; Serenade and Allegro Giogoso, Mendelssohn; Fantasia on popular airs, Moscheles.

Bradford, Yorkshire.—At the White Abbey Wesleyan Chapel, a Recital on the occasion of the re-opening of the Organ was given on December 1, by Dr. Chas. Joseph Frost, F.C.O. Sacred solos were sung by Miss Emilie Norton and Madame Armitage and Anthems by the Chapel Choir. The programme included Fantasia in E flat, St. Saens; Andante in A, Henry Smart; Marche Funebre (by request), Gigout; Fantasia (introducing storm effects), Chevalier Newkomm; La Carita, Rossini; Organ Solo (introduction and variation upon Mendelssohn's well-known Hymn Tune, "Hark! the herald angels sing"), C. J. Frost; Fantasia Concertante, Petrali; Preghiera, Capocci; Overture in E, Morandi.

The organ has recently undergone entire re-construction by Mr. James Murgatroyd, of Bradford. All the keys and key action, pedal action, swell draw stop action, choir draw stop action, couplers, swell sound board, swell box, and pedal sound boards, are quite new. The old pipes have all been retained; the swell pipes have all been carried down from Tenor C. to C C. The following is a specification of the instrument:—

Great Organ.—Double Open Diapason, wood and metal; Open Diapason, metal; Dulciana, metal; Stop Diapason, wood; Principal, metal; Fifteenth, metal; Mixture, 2 ranks, metal; Trumpet, metal.

Swell Organ.—Bourdon, wood; Open Diapason, metal; Stop Diapason, wood; Salcional, metal; Voix Celeste, metal; Principal, metal; Mixture, 3 ranks, metal; Oboe, metal; Horn, metal; Tremulant.

Choir Organ.—Lieblich Gedact, wood; Gemshorn, metal; Viol de Gamba, metal; Flute, wood; Clarinette, metal.

Pedal Organ.—Grand Open Diapason, wood; Bourdon, wood.

Couplers.—Choir to Pedal; Swell to Pedal; Swell to Great; Swell to Choir; 3 Composition Pedals to Great Organ; 2 Composition Pedals to Swell organ.

NOTES.

At St. Peter's, Eaton Square, Special Services are being held during Advent. The church is thrown open, and no tickets are required. On Thursdays, December 6 and 13, Spohr's "Last Judgment" was sung, with organ accompaniments by Mr. Sergison, organist and choirmaster. On Thursday, the 20th, at the same hour, a selection will be given at 8 p.m., and on Monday, the 24th (also at 8 p.m.), there will be a carol service.

Lately, at a concert given in Wollaston School, the parishioners of Wollaston took the opportunity of presenting a testimonial to Mr. H. M. Jackson, who for more than twenty years has occupied the position of organist of the Parish Church. In the interval between the first and second parts of the programme, Rev. S. Gilbanks said during the twenty years Mr. Jackson had been organist of Wollaston Church he had courteously, faithfully, and conscientiously discharged the duties of his office. He had very great pleasure in asking Mrs. Gilbanks to present to Mr. Jackson an illuminated address, a purse of gold, and a handsome timepiece and ornaments, in addition to a liqueur stand, the gift of the choir.

The December musical arrangements at St. Marylebone Parish Church, on Thursdays, 13th and 20th, include renderings of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise."

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS CALENDAR.

On Tuesday next the Library will be open from 7 to 9.

January 8—F.C.O., Examination (Paper work). Jan. 9—F.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). January 10—F.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). January 11—Diploma Distribution. January 15—A.C.O., Examination (Paper work). January 16—A.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). January 17—A.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). January 18—Diploma Distribution. February 5—Dr. F. J. Sawyer, F.C.O., will read a paper on "The History of the Theory of Harmony." March 5—Lecture. April 2—Lecture. April 29—Annual College Dinner. May 7—Lecture. June 4—Lecture. July 16—F.C.O., Examination (Paper work). July 17-18—F.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). July 19—Diploma Distribution. July 23—A.C.O., Examination (Paper work). July 24-25—A.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). July 26—Diploma Distribution. July 30—Annual General Meeting.

Candidates for the forthcoming Examination should send in their names before January 1.

Further arrangements and particulars will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Secretary.

95, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury.

(From a Photograph by the London Stereoscopic Company.)

MADAME BELLE COLE.

Madame BELLE COLE, the famous American contralto, was born among the Chautauqua Hills, of a family which has long been honourably distinguished in the musical world. Madame Cole received her first musical education from her father, to whose thorough and careful tuition she doubtless owes much of her success. So early did her education commence, that she was able to sing comparatively difficult music at sight before she could read a book with ease, and at the age of 14 she directed a class for sight-singing, which numbered over sixty members, and at a concert given by this class, Madame Cole appeared as a solo violinist. On leaving her country home, Madame Cole proceeded to Jamestown, N.Y., where she studied at Institute Hall, under Professor Love, and subsequently under the most celebrated maestri of New York. Madame Cole is one of the few contraltos—if, indeed, she be not the only one—who commenced their career as sopranos, for it was as a high soprano that Madame Cole's first teachers trained her, her voice at this time extending to F in alt. Her first important engagement was in the season of 1883, when she was the leading contralto in Theodore Thomas's famous company on their Trans-continental tour, and she was selected by the late Leopold Damrosch to create the contralto part in his work "The Sulamith," and she has since sung at all the great American festivals and Concerts, such as the Philharmonic Society Concerts at New York and Brooklyn, and the Worcester, Gilmore, and Cleveland Festivals. Having conquered the American world Madame Cole became ambitious of vanquishing England also, and arrived in London in May, 1887. She received her first English engagement from Mr. Barnby, who heard her sing one evening in a private drawing-room, and at once engaged her to sing the "Elijah" music at Eton College. Her first appearance in London was made at a Crystal Palace concert, and she has since that time attained success with an altogether phenomenal rapidity. It would be superfluous to recount achievements which are fresh in the reader's memory, but we may add that Madame Cole, amongst her future engagements, will sing in Mancinelli's "Isaias" at the Albert Hall, and will start, in January next, on a two-months tour with Madame Minnie Hauk.

Swell Organ (Compass Co to a3).—Bourdon, 16 ft., wood; Open diapason, 8 ft., metal; Stopped Diapason, 8 ft., metal; Salicional, 8 ft., metal; Aeoline, 8 ft., metal; Fugara, 4 ft., metal; Fluite Harmoique, 4 ft., metal; Cornet, 3 rks., metal; Cornopeon, 8 ft., metal; Oboe and Bassoon, 8 ft., metal.

Choir Organ (Compass Co to a3).—Viola, 8 ft., metal; Dulciana, 8 ft., metal; Melodia, 8 ft., wood; Flute d'Amour, 4 ft., wood and metal; Violina, 4 ft., metal; Piccolo, 2 ft., metal; Clarionet, 8 ft., metal.

Pedal Organ (Compass Cl to C—a curiously deficient compass in these days)—Open diapason, 16 ft., wood; Bourdon, 16 ft., wood; Posaune, 16 ft., wood; Octave Bass, 8 ft., wood; Violoncello, 8 ft., wood.

Mechanical Registers—Great to Pedal Coupler; Swell to Great Coupler; Choir to Pedal Coupler; Swell to Pedal Coupler; Swell to Choir Coupler; Choir to Coupler; Tremolo.

Pneumatic Push Buttons.—Choir Organ Forte, Swell Organ Forte, Fortissimo Full Organ.

Pedal Movements.—Couplers; Great Organ Forte; Choir Organ Forte; Swell Pianissimo; Swell Organ Forte; Great Organ Forte; Choir Mezzo Forte; Reeds.

Crescendo and Decresendo.—A mechanical contrivance to draw all the stops of the organ one after the other, commencing with the softer one, reaching full organ, and then decreasing in the same manner.

Balanced Swell Pedal.—Total number of pipes, 2049. All the stops of the organ to be supplied with the Wirsching Improved Pneumatic Action.

Sydney, N.S.W.—Dr. Charles Vincent has been specially desired by Mr. G. Lardelli, F.C.O., organist of St. Matthew's Church, Sydney, N.S.W., to inspect and report on the organ, which has just been built from his specification for that church, and now standing in the factory of the builder, Mr. August Gern, of Notting Hill. The scheme is as follows :—

Great Organ.—Open Diapason, Lieblich Gedact, Principal, Flauto Traverso, 56 pipes each; Dulcina, 44 pipes.

Swell Organ.—Hohl Flute, Viole de Gamba, Gemshorn, Piccolo, Trumpet, 56 pipes each; Voix Celestes, tenor C, 44 pipes.

Pedal Organ.—Bourdon, Flute Bass, 30 pipes each.

Couplers.—Swell to Great, Swell to Pedals, Great to Pedal, Octave on Great, Swell Sub to Great, Tremulant.

Self recovering Pedal, Great to Pedal. Self-recovering Pedal, Tremulant in and out. Two Composition Pedals to Great, two ditto to swell.

Gern's Tubular Pneumatic System throughout.

SUMMARY.

Great Organ: 5 stops, 268 pipes.—Swell: 6 stops, 324 pipes.—Pedal: 2 stops, 60 pipes.—Couplers: 6 stops.—Total: 19 stops, 652 pipes.

It is stated that Mr. Gern is well-known as a specialist in tubular-pneumatic work, which in this organ is on a 3½-inch pressure. It is stated that the touch is light, the pipes speak instantaneously, and the repetition is perfect. The distinctive character of each stop, the effective couplers (pneumatic), especially the swell sub. to great, the steadiness of the wind under the most severe tests, and the general workmanship, are reported as especially worthy of notice.

RECITAL NEWS.

Esher Parish Church—The third of the series of organ recitals was given on Nov. 19, when Mr. Adkins, the organist, was prevented from playing by an accident, Mr. Sewell, F.C.O., taking his place. Mr. D. Price, A.R.C.M., was the vocalist:—Sonata in F minor (1st movement), Rheinberger; Andante in D, Silas; Fugue on the name of Bach, Liszt; Air, with Variations, Rea; Concertstück, Töpfer; Symphony in G (Largo), Hayden; Concerto No. 5, Handel. The fourth of the series, on Nov. 26, Mr. Adkins, F.C.O., presiding at the organ, and Mr. D. Price the vocalist:—Overture to Samson, Handel; Offertoire, J. F. Barnett; Melody and Andante, Silas; Dirge (in memoriam), J. E. Adkins; Sonata No. 2 (Largo) Beethoven; Theme in A, with nine Variations and Finale Fugato, Smart.

St. John, Ladywood, Birmingham.—The first of a series of Organ Recitals was given by Mr. H. Taylor, F.C.O., on Wednesday evening, Nov. 21. Programme: Festive March in D, Smart; Introduction, Air, and Variations, in A, Hesse; Sonata in D Minor, No. 6, Mendelssohn (Choral with Variation, D Minor, Fugue, D Minor, Andante, D); Fantasia, E Minor, Merkel; Communion in F, Grison, Grand Chœur in B flat, Dubois.

Bow and Bromley Institute, on Saturday, Decemb
1888. The following programme was rendered by Miss Flo
Baker (Pianoforte) and Mr. Ralph Norris (Organ), Rondo from Co certo, E minor, Chopin; Adagio and Allegro vivace (Concerto minor), Grieg; Serenade and Allegro Giogoso, Mendelssohn tasia on popular airs, Moscheles.

Bradford, Yorkshire.—At the White Abbey Wesleyan Ch a Recital on the occasion of the re-opening of the Organ was December 1, by Dr. Chas. Joseph Frost, F.C.O. Sacred sol sung by Miss Emilie Norton and Ma by the Chapel Choir. The program
St. Saens; Andante in A, Henry S quest), Gigout; Fantasia (introdu komm; La Carita, Rossini; Organ upon Mendelssohn's well-known Hy angels sing"), C. J. Frost; Fantasia
Capocci; Overture in E, Morandi

The organ has recently undergon
James Murgatroyd, of Bradford. A action, swell draw stop action, choir sound board, swell box, and pedal s old pipes have all been retained; th ried down from Tenor C. to C C.
the instrument :—

Great Organ.—Double Open Diap metal; Dulciana, metal; Stop Diapas metal; Mixture, 2 ranks, metal; Trum

Swell Organ.—Bourdon, wood;
wood; Salcional, metal; Voix Celeste, ranks, metal; Oboe, metal; Horn, meta

Choir Organ.—Lieblich Gedact, metal; Flute, wood; Clarinette, metal.

Pedal Organ.—Grand Open Diap

Couplers.—Choir to Pedal; Swell
3 Composition Pedals to Great Organ:

NO

At St. Peter's, Eaton Square,
ing Advent. The church is thr
On Thursdays, December 6 and sung, with organ accompanim choirmaster. On Thursday, th will be given at 8 p.m., and on there will be a carol service.

Lately, at a concert given in of Wollaston took the opportun
H. M. Jackson, who for mor position of organist of the P
the first and second parts said during the twenty year laston Church he had co discharged the duties of his asking Mrs. Gilbanks to address, a purse of gold, an in addition to a liqueur st

The December musica
Church, on Thursdays,
Mendelssohn's "Hymn of

COLLEGE OF

On Tuesday next the L

January 8—F.C.O., Exa
Examination (Organ Pla
(Organ Playing). January
A.C.O., Examination (Pa
(Organ Playing). Jan
January 18
F.C.O., wil
Harmony."
Annual C
July 16—
Examinati
July 23—
Examinat
July 30

Cand names h

Fur

The programme included:—Overture, "Oberon," Weber; ncerto for violin and orchestra, No. 2 in D, Wieniawski; Symphony, 4 in B flat, Beethoven; and Ouvertura di Ballo, Sullivan. Iver M'Kay was announced as the vocalist, and M. M. Marsick lo violinist.

Next Tuesday evening Mr. MacCunn's new cantata, "The Lay of e Last Minstrel," will be given, notice of which will be given in xt week's issue. The artists engaged are Madame Nordica, Miss race Damian, Messrs. Andrew Black, and Iver M'Kay. At this ncert also will be performed (for the first time in Scotland) the me composer's ballad for orchestra, "The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow." he conductors for this concert are Mr. Hamish MacCunn and Mr. oseph Bradley.

MISCELLANEOUS CONCERTS.

THE BARNSLEY ST. CECILIA SOCIETY gave a performance of Samson" on Thursday last. The principals were Miss Julia Jones, iss Yates, Mr. Houghton, and Mr. W. Riley. Miss Jones's full prano voice showed to excellent effect in all the airs. Her coms is extensive, and her distinctness of enunciation might well be pied by many older singers. Miss Yates, Mr. Houghton, and Mr. y acquitted themselves in a most praiseworthy way. The chorus, ich numbered over 150 voices, was satisfactory.

THE MISSES BATEMAN AND MOWBRAY'S RECITAL.—A pianoforte al of an original character was given on the 7th inst., by Marian Bateman and Miss Esther Mowbray; the peculiarity that only duets or pieces for two pianos were performed. Of atter class were Mozart's Sonata in D, Schumann's Andante and ions in B flat. The duets were by Schubert (including one of larches Caracteristiques, which, strange to say, are not found in Grove's catalogue of Schubert's works), Schumann, Gade, an, Dvořàk, and Brahms. It will be seen that almost every of duet was exemplified, and it is gratifying to be able to add young ladies displayed as much ability in the execution, as the selection, of their pieces. The ensemble was excellent out, and a better rendering of the group of different pieces, ch the concert concluded, could hardly have been desired; the f Brahms's Hungarian Dances, to name only one instance, ressed with rare delicacy and truth. The hall was well l the audience showed marked appreciation. There is in such a mass of admirable music in the duet form scarcely med in public and comparatively little played in private, ncerely trust that these young ladies will be encouraged to in the path they have opened out, for there is no good y duet-playing should not be as popular a feature of t programmes as duet-singing. In the intervals of the ing, Miss Farmer sang songs by Brahms, Bishop, Arne, ing a voice better than her style, and ably accompanied n Farmer.

N A. ST. O. DYKES'S RECITAL took place on the after-December 7 at Prince's Hall, when a large audience o welcome the young performer, who is, if we are not son of the late well-known Precentor of Durham Cathe- beautiful hymn tunes have given a distinct colour to glish church music. It would be premature to decide r. Dykes will succeed in accomplishing the same desirable e present generation of pianoforte players; and we shall rselves for the present with the record of a performance in ndant evidence was given of the possession of a highly technique, a powerful tone, and a large share of artistic The programme included Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 27, Schumann's "Fantasie," Op. 18, an adequate selection from antic school, and Bach's Organ Fugue in A minor, the fitness for such a purpose is doubtful. We shall look forward with to hearing Mr. Dykes again.

RR VON CZEKE, the Hungarian violinist, gave a concert at the hall on Saturday last. The concert-giver displayed his usual , and was ably supported by the Misses Zukie, Flower, rick, and Paton, and Messrs. Connery and Koch, vocalists, Kosminsky (pianoforte), and Mr. Langsey ('cello). The con- tors were Miss Mathilde Wolff and Mr. Lawrence.

THE PEOPLE'S PALACE, MILE END ROAD.—A concert was given here on December 10, when the artists were Miss Adela Duckham

Correspondence.

THE DAY THEORY OF HARMONY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL WORLD."

DEAR SIR,

Miss Prescott, in her letter in your issue of the 1st inst., takes exception to my considering the A flat chord, in her example from Rossini, as belonging to the key of E flat, and says she cannot see why the Neapolitan Sixth in G minor should be borrowed from the submediant (i.e., the key of E flat), while that in C comes from the subdominant (i.e, the key of F minor), as alleged by me, in reference to another example, at a meeting of the Musical Association. Unwittingly, Miss Prescott has herself supplied and virtually approved my answer to her objection, inasmuch as, only a few lines previously, she endorses Professor Macfarren's obviously correct teaching, that chords belong to several keys, and that the only way to find out to which they belong at a particular point is to examine their surroundings. Precisely so; and this is just what I did in the cases in question. I may add that Miss Prescott does not correctly represent me in adducing the statement, as if it were mine, that the Neapolitan Sixth in G minor is borrowed from the submediant. My contention is that it is not in G minor, and the borrowing of it from another key does not change its tonality.

Miss Prescott's raison d'être of the common chord on the minor second of the scale—viz., that it has been used by good composers with good effect—is practically sufficient for those who, like herself, take honourable place in such goodly company; but it does not afford any explanation to the student, whom systems should teach. Now, if the 17th "upper partial" is claimed as the root of the common chord under consideration, why not similarly with each of the previous upper partials, 5, 7, 11, 13, and 15? They all involve, more or less, admitted objections, but at least they all have prior claim to the 17th to furnish sounds "in the key"! On the other hand, while Dr. Day's system uncompromisingly demands a root or roots for every other chord, if his adherents relax in this solitary instance, because they see no better way, we still must pin them to Dr. Day's thesis that every note in a key, whether diatonic or chromatic, must exist before it can be used, and so they must cull the three notes of this particular chord somehow thus, in the key of C:—

A flat, 17th upper partial of G.
F, 7th upper partial of G.
D flat, 17th upper partial of C.

—in which case the F would be in untruthful intonation with the other notes, and all three would be at variance with the diatonic scale. Other derivations on the Day system would give no better results, but the chord must be accounted for somehow by his disciples. Such tentative processes remind one of Dean Swift's Peter, Martin, and Jack, who, because they could not find authorization in their father's will, totidem verbis, for what they wished, tried for it totidem syllabis; failing also in this, they then tried tertio modo, totidem literis, when, finding one particular letter wanting, they substituted another for it!

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES E. STEPHENS.

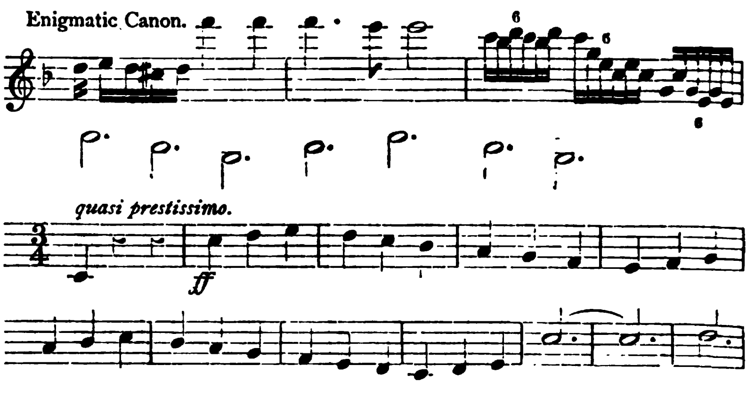
37, Howley Place, Maida Hill, W.
December 3, 1888.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL WORLD."

SIR,—With reference to your recent notice of Mendelssohn's canons, allow me to send you one which has lately been shewn to me by my friend, Mr. Paul David, son of Ferdinand David, to whom the Canon was in the first instance addressed by Mendelssohn. It is on a strip of paper, apparently half of half a sheet of "Bath." It has been folded across, and tucked in and wafered like a note. The address on the outside is "An Herrn Concertmeister David Oder an Herrn C. Weisse, Wohlgeboren, bei Tische" (i.e. at dinner).

David and Weisse had evidently sent Mendelssohn a delicacy from their dinner, for on the other side of the paper we find the words "Dass das Nusstorte ist bescheinige ich mit meiner Namensunterschrift Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy isst sehr dankbar." (That the almond cake exists I certify with my signature F.M.B. eats very thankfully).

Then follows the Canon, with a large formal red seal before it.



I commend it to the ingenuity of your readers. They will notice that the 12 bars, from the signature $\frac{3}{4}$ (which apparently abolishes the B flat) are from the Trio to Beethoven's Quartet in E flat, Op. 74. Whether the mysterious minims which stand under the first three bars are a continuation of the minim phrase which ends the Canon or not, I do not presume to judge. I have given the whole as it stands on the autograph. I am sometimes tempted to fancy it may be a mere hoax.

Yours obediently,
Dec. 12. G. GROVE.

PROVINCIAL.

MANCHESTER, Dec. 11.

At Sir Charles Hallé's seventh concert, December 6, Herr Hess, the leader of the orchestra, appeared as solo violinist. We have previously had occasion to mention this young artist in terms of high praise, and his latest appearance has only shown more clearly the almost complete mastery which he has obtained over his instrument. His bowing is of quite unusual grace, and the tone which he produces, though perhaps less sonorous than that of some virtuosi, is pure and beautiful. His technique almost rivals his style, and we especially admired the clearness and precision of his staccato playing. Moreover, Herr Hess is a thorough musician, and has a refined conception; no one could doubt this who heard him play Spohr's Ninth Concerto. We have, we believe, heard a more poetical rendering of this work, but it was by an artist with whom most violinists would feel it an honour to be compared, and to whom Herr Hess need have no shame in acknowledging himself second. His reception was most enthusiastic, and after his second solo ("Introduction," and "Rondo Capriccioso," by Saint Saëns) he was not allowed to rest until he had given an encore. There were two vocalists, neither of whom have appeared at these concerts before. Of these Madame Sandon claims the first place, and this by no means solely on account of her sex. It may be mentioned that though this was her first appearance in Manchester on the concert platform, she sang in "Faust" during the last visit of the Carl Rosa Opera Company, taking the part of Siebel, in which she was very successful Her voice is one of remarkable range, and though really a contralto, it includes the mezzo-soprano register, and even to some extent the soprano. It is also of very considerable volume, and of good quality, massive rather than rich. Her vocalisation is in many respects excellent, the intonation is accurate, and her method of production indicates careful training. In Meyerbeer's "O Figlio mio" we thought that her low notes occasionally suffered through being declaimed with more vigour than was necessary, considering how very well her voice carries. But the solo as a whole was admirably given, and this in spite of the fact that Madame Sandon was evidently suffering from nervousness, a misfortune which we held responsible for the rather excessive vibrato noticeable. In two little Italian songs, "Si tu m'ami" (Pergolesi), and "E m'e venuto" (Gordigiani), she was still more successful, and thoroughly deserved the hearty recall which she received. We have no doubt that the Manchester public will welcome further opportunities of hearing so gifted and careful a singer. With regard to the other vocalist, Mr. C. Banks, we must confess to having been greatly disappointed. There are undoubtedly good qualities about his voice, and the huskiness which was observable may have been only temporary. But it is throaty to an unpleasant degree, and he has a jerky style of singing which struck us as being highly inartistic. It is only fair to add, however, that the local papers for the most part speak of him in terms of guarded commendation. Amongst the orchestral pieces were Beethoven's Second Symphony, and two Légendes, by Dvoràk.

EDINBURGH, December 11, 1888.

The Carl Rosa Opera Company concluded a more than usually successful, but very brief, season of a single week here on Saturday evening last. To add to the ordinary attractions of Mr. Rosa's visits, which are seldom less than ample, there were on this occasion not only two entirely new works, so far as Edinburgh is concerned —Meyerbeer's "Robert the Devil" and Halevy's "The Jewess"—produced, and one or two artists (notably the talented young American soprano, Miss Fabris) hitherto strangers to our audiences, heard; but the great satisfaction was also afforded of welcoming, in the person of Madame Gaylord, back to her former place in the company an old favourite who has for some time been regretfully missed.

Throughout the entire series of seven performances, there cannot be said to have been a single instance of an unworthy or weak representation; while, in more than one case, a really high level of excellence was attained. Although "The Jewess" drew together the largest audience of the week, by far the most noteworthy rendering was that accorded to "Carmen" on Saturday night, with Madame Burns, Mr. M'Guckin, and Mr. Crotty in the three principal rôles. A better all-round performance of Bizet's bright and romantic work it would be difficult to conceive; and all who had the good fortune to assist at it will long remember the treat they enjoyed. At the close of the performance the house signified its appreciation and approval of the efforts that had been made for its entertainment by recalling Madame Burns and her two fellow artists four times before the curtain. The other works during the week, besides those already mentioned, were Wallace's "Maritana," Balfe's "Bohemian Girl," and Thomas's "Mignon."

The engagement of Miss Fabris was recognised on all hands as a conspicuous gain to the strength of the company. Both vocally and histrionically she proved herself in such parts as Isabella in "Robert the Devil," and the Princess Eudocia in "The Jewess" to be unquestionably an artist of no mean order; and her subsequent professional career will not—here at least—fail to be watched with much sympathy and interest.

Miss Fanny Moody still succeeds in holding her place in the affections of the students, who, on all occasions on which she appeared, received her with enthusiasm. On Friday night Miss Moody, assisted by a few of the leading local amateurs, gave a concert in aid of the funds of the Students' Union, the completion of which is somewhat delayed in consequence of a lack of sufficient pecuniary means. It is needless to say that Miss Moody, on the occasion in question, was made the recipient of an ovation of a most flattering kind, and was presented also, on behalf of the students, with a handsome bracelet in token of their appreciation of her kind and generous assistance. At the close of the concert the horses were removed from Miss Moody's carriage, which was then hauled to her hotel by a detachment of youthful admirers, while the main body formed themselves into a somewhat boisterous escort by the way. Before bidding them good night, Miss Moody obligingly sang her friends some verses of a popular melody, which appeared to afford them much satisfaction, and had moreover the desired effect of causing them to disperse decorously. A word of commendation is due to Mr. Rosa's orchestra and chorus. Considering the great amount of fatigue inseparable from the production of so many difficult works in so short a space of time as that available, the services rendered by both orchestra and chorus were, under the able conductorship of Mr. Goosens and Mr. Claude Jaquinot, conspicuously praiseworthy and excellent in every respect.

To-night, the first of Mr. Paterson's series of orchestral and choral concertstakes place in the Music Hall, and your readers may expect to have some notice of it next week.

GLASGOW, Tuesday, Dec. 11.

The Glasgow Choral Union opened their season on Thursday evening, 13th inst. The orchestra, consisting of 75 performers, was conducted by Mr. August Manns.

The programme included:—Overture, "Oberon," Weber; Concerto for violin and orchestra, No. 2 in D, Wieniawski; Symphony, No. 4 in B flat, Beethoven; and Ouvertura di Ballo, Sullivan. Mr. Iver M'Kay was announced as the vocalist, and M. M. Marsick solo violinist.

Next Tuesday evening Mr. MacCunn's new cantata, "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," will be given, notice of which will be given in next week's issue. The artists engaged are Madame Nordica, Miss Grace Damian, Messrs. Andrew Black, and Iver M'Kay. At this concert also will be performed (for the first time in Scotland) the same composer's ballad for orchestra, "The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow." The conductors for this concert are Mr. Hamish MacCunn and Mr. Joseph Bradley.

MISCELLANEOUS CONCERTS.

THE BARNSLEY ST. CECILIA SOCIETY gave a performance of "Samson" on Thursday last. The principals were Miss Julia Jones, Miss Yates, Mr. Houghton, and Mr. W. Riley. Miss Jones's full soprano voice showed to excellent effect in all the airs. Her compass is extensive, and her distinctness of enunciation might well be copied by many older singers. Miss Yates, Mr. Houghton, and Mr. Riley acquitted themselves in a most praiseworthy way. The chorus, which numbered over 150 voices, was satisfactory.

THE MISSES BATEMAN AND MOWBRAY'S RECITAL.—A pianoforte recital of an original character was given on the 7th inst., by Miss Marian Bateman and Miss Esther Mowbray; the peculiarity being that only duets or pieces for two pianos were performed. Of the latter class were Mozart's Sonata in D, Schumann's Andante and Variations in B flat. The duets were by Schubert (including one of the Marches Caracteristiques, which, strange to say, are not found in Sir G. Grove's catalogue of Schubert's works), Schumann, Gade, Volkman, Dvoràk, and Brahms. It will be seen that almost every style of duet was exemplified, and it is gratifying to be able to add that the young ladies displayed as much ability in the execution, as taste in the selection, of their pieces. The ensemble was excellent throughout, and a better rendering of the group of different pieces, with which the concert concluded, could hardly have been desired; the nuances of Brahms's Hungarian Dances, to name only one instance, being expressed with rare delicacy and truth. The hall was well filled, and the audience showed marked appreciation. There is in existence such a mass of admirable music in the duet form scarcely ever performed in public and comparatively little played in private, that we sincerely trust that these young ladies will be encouraged to continue in the path they have opened out, for there is no good reason why duet-playing should not be as popular a feature of our concert programmes as duet-singing. In the intervals of the piano playing, Miss Farmer sang songs by Brahms, Bishop, Arne, &c., exhibiting a voice better than her style, and ably accompanied by Mr. John Farmer.

MR. JOHN A. ST. O. DYKES'S RECITAL took place on the afternoon of December 7 at Prince's Hall, when a large audience assembled to welcome the young performer, who is, if we are not mistaken, a son of the late well-known Precentor of Durham Cathedral, whose beautiful hymn tunes have given a distinct colour to modern English church music. It would be premature to decide whether Mr. Dykes will succeed in accomplishing the same desirable end for the present generation of pianoforte players; and we shall content ourselves for the present with the record of a performance in which abundant evidence was given of the possession of a highly finished technique, a powerful tone, and a large share of artistic feeling. The programme included Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 27, No. 1, Schumann's "Fantasie," Op. 18, an adequate selection from the romantic school, and Bach's Organ Fugue in A minor, the fitness of which for such a purpose is doubtful. We shall look forward with interest to hearing Mr. Dykes again.

HERR VON CZEKE, the Hungarian violinist, gave a concert at the above hall on Saturday last. The concert-giver displayed his usual ability, and was ably supported by the Misses Zukie, Flower, Petherick, and Paton, and Messrs. Connery and Koch, vocalists, Miss Kosminsky (pianoforte), and Mr. Langsey ('cello). The conductors were Miss Mathilde Wolff and Mr. Lawrence.

THE PEOPLE'S PALACE, MILE END ROAD.—A concert was given here on December 10, when the artists were Miss Adela Duckham (solo vio'inist), Miss Mary Symons (solo pianist), Miss C. Dowle, Ma. A. Glover, and the Gem Quartet Party. Mr. Orton Bradley, musical director. Miss Adela Duckham was enthusiastically encored for each of her solos, "Zigeunerweisen" (Sarasate) and "Fantasie on Yankee Doodle" (Vieuxtemps), and repeated both of them. Miss C. Dowle's three songs were "Sweet September," "Little Maid of Arcadee," and "Roberto o tu che Adoro" for the last of which she was encored. The Gem Quartet Party were much appreciated.

Miss Dora Barnard's Concert.—Miss Dora Barnard gave a concert at the Steinway Hall on Thursday of last week, which, although, as a whole, was too "studentish" in tone, presented some features of considerable interest. The concert-giver's voice, which is of good quality and compass, was well displayed in Meyerbeer's "Noble Signor" and Balfe's "The Green Trees Whispered," each of which was sung with much refinement and taste. Mr. Septimus Webbe gave brilliant readings of Liszt's Study in B flat and a Mazurka by Godard; and the rest of the programme included songs by Mr. Frank May, some clever violin solos by Miss Cecilia Gates, and a highly paternal rendering by Mr. W. H. Cummings of songs by Sterndale Bennett.

Mrs. George Cox's concert.—A concert was given by Mrs. George Cox on Thursday last in the handsome drawing-rooms of Mrs. Elgood, 81, Ladbroke Grove. The vocalists included Miss Marie Curran, Madame Hughes Paltzer, Mr. Claude Ravenhill, and Mr. A. D. Saxon. Miss Curran, of whose singing we have more than once spoken in high terms, once more proved herself a distinct acquisition to the concert-room, and her excellent voice, refined method, and artistic earnestness should earn her a good position. Madame Paltzer sang charmingly Godard's "Chanson de Florian" and Logé's "Relics." Mr. Ravenhill gave an expressive rendering of the "Salve Dimora," the violin obbligato to which was extremely well played by Miss Dinelli, and Mr. Saxon, the young American baritone, sang with much spirit Logé's "Fidelis" and Moir's "Best of all." Mrs. George Cox's pianoforte solos were played with much grace and refinement, and to her skill as a teacher efficient testimony was borne in the persons of her pupils, Miss Finnis and Miss Bradley.

The Fraser Quintet.—The accomplished and charming young ladies composing the Fraser Quintet gave on Thursday last a concert at the Portman Rooms in aid of the Railway Officers and Servants' Association. To describe in detail the pleasant performances of this gifted family would now be superfluous, inasmuch as there are few amateurs acquainted with the excellent ensemble produced by the young performers. On the occasion in question, Vincent's "Cavatina" was perhaps the most successful item in a programme which was throughout warmly appreciated, and amongst the solos special mention may be made of the performance by Miss Stella Fraser of Papini's "Saltarello;" by Miss Mabel Fraser of De Bériot's "Tremolo," and the singing, by Miss Violet Fraser, of "Robin Adair." Assistance was also given by Madame Marion MacKenzie, whose rich voice and sympathetic style found scope in Cowen's "Because," by Madame Madeline Hardy, and Mr. Alfred Moore.

An entertainment was also given on Tuesday by the Fraser Quintet at Brompton Hospital, the chief feature of which was an exceedingly good performance of Virginia Gabriel's amusing operetta, "Widows Bewitched." The part of the Marquise Monalby was very cleverly played by Miss Violet Fraser, the other rôles being satisfactorily filled by Miss Elsie Evans, Mr. Henry Yates, and Mr. Oscar Baird. The operetta was preceeded by a short musical programme which included an excellent rendering of Brahms's "Hungarian Dances."

Eyre Arms Assembly Rooms.—A concert was given at the Eyre Arms Assembly Rooms on Thursday of last week. Miss Marie Hooton and Messrs. Charles Rose and Charles Copland were the vocalists, the band of the Royal Horse Guards (Blue), under Mr. Charles Godfrey, supplying the instrumental part of the programme. Miss Hooton, a promising young artist, gave great satisfaction, but perhaps the rendering by Messrs. Rose and Copland of the duet from Halévy's "Reine de Chypre" was the artistic success of the evening. Mr. Arthur E. Godfrey was solo pianist and conductor.

Mr Claude Trevor's Matinee took place on Monday in the presence of a large and fashionable audiance, and he was assisted by a number of well-known artists. Miss Helen D'Alton was particularly successful in a song "Passing Thoughts," by the concert giver, which was magnificently sung, and Miss Marie Douglas scored a great success in some violin solos. The great feature of the concert was, perhaps, the singing of Signor Mhanes, whose exquisitely artistic and sympathetic style was much admired, so much so that on several occasions he had to repeat the songs set down for him. Mr. Claude Trevor also sang. In his first song he was obviously too nervous to do himself justice, but in "More and More" he won a well-deserved encore. His voice is a light baritone of agreeable quality, and his pronunciation is well nigh perfect—every word being heard at the farthest end of the hall.

Kingston-on-Thames.—A highly successful chamber concert was given at the Albany Hall on Friday last in aid of the Parish Church restoration fund. The concert commenced with Schumann's Pianoforte Quintet, played by Messrs. Pollitzer, Morris, Stehling, Scott and Weber, in a manner which fully justified the great reputations of the distinguished artists and amateurs who interpreted them. and it is only right to add that the numerous audience showed at once their appreciation of Schumann's glorious music, and its admirable rendering. Perhaps the greatest success of the evening was achieved by Messrs. Pollitzer and Morris. In their brilliant performance of a duet by De Bériot for two violins, virtuosity of the highest order was united to most artistic phrasing and expression. Messrs. Seaward and Beddome played with much taste and refinement a nocturne by Behr, and a fantasia on Rossini's "Semiramide," for flute and clarinet, and Miss Agnes Larkcom and Mr. Frank Connery sang in excellent style songs by Bishop, Félicien David and Gounod. An admirable performance of Mozart's perennial Clarinet Quintet, the clarinet part played by Mr. Leonard Beddome, with great beauty of tone and delicacy of phrasing, concluded a concert which Kingston will not soon forget.

Steinway Hall.—Mr. Max Heinrich and Mr. Emanuel Moor gave the first of three vocal and pianoforte recitals on Friday last. Mr. Heinrich sang, with much refinement and excellent expression, "The Wanderer," and other songs of Schubert, a charming song by Jensen, and three of Mr. Moor's composition, of which "Winter Night" was the most acceptable. Mr. Moor is a talented pianist, with great executive powers and a fine memory. His rendering of pieces by Liszt, Chopin, and himself, among the latter of which a Gavotte and a Nocturne may be favourably mentioned, gave considerable pleasure, but we cannot praise his reading of Beethoven, whose Sonata "Appassionata," was given with little or no perception of its beauty and meaning.

Madame Essipoff gave her third and last recital on Wednesday at Steinway Hall. The gifted artist was in excellent form, the brilliance and delicacy for which she is famous being especially conspicuous. The reading given of Schumann's Fantasia in C, however, was decidedly the pianist's own, though everyone could admire her spirited rendering of the "March" movement. Nothing could have been more charming than Madame Essipoff's playing in the "Soirées de Vienne," of Schubert, or in pieces by Chopin, Schütt, and Paderewski.

Mr. Harold Savery's Second Concert at the Lyric Hall, Ealing, on Saturday evening, was attended by a fairly full audience, whose ardour was in no wise damped by the unpropitious weather without. Miss Louise Phillips struggled valiantly against a severe cold; and though in anything but good voice, she gave musicianly renderings of Clay's "She wandered down the mountain side," Mary Carmichael's graceful air "From the Red Rose," and Sullivan's "Where the Bee sucks." The honours of the evening, however, were awarded to Mr. W. Nicholl, Mr. Herbert Thorndike, and Mr. Frank Braine. The hall is not too large for Mr. Nicholl's voice, and the light and shade of his truly artistic singing were not lost on the audience, who insisted on encoring Tosti's "Vorrei Morire," and the ever-fresh "Kathleen Mavourneen." An equally favourable reception was given to Mr. Herbert Thorndike's rendering of the "Toreador's Song" from "Carmen," and Hope Temple's popular ballad "In Sweet September." Mr. Frank Braine recited in easy colloquial style the story of "How Bill Adams won the Battle of Waterloo"; he failed, however, to give to his impersonation of Lord Dundreary the touch of amiable imbecility which characterised Mr. Sothern's utterance of the criticisms on Poor Richard's Proverbs. Mr. Savery sang in excellent style Gounod's "Nazareth," and Stephen Adams' "Star of Bethlehem." Miss Frances Hipwell and Mr. Julian Egerton, whose mastery of the clarinet might have been displayed on worthier subjects than those of his choice, also contributed to the programme; and efficient renderings of several choruses and part-songs were given by a carefully trained choir under the baton of the concert-giver.

LETTERS UPON THE POETRY AND MUSIC OF THE ITALIAN OPERA."*

LETTER IX. (continued.)

The sound of a little flute, for example, resembles the singing of birds, not from its shrillness merely, but on account of a certain quality of sound common to both, which every ear is sensible of, but which we have no words to express. It is by this quality of sound that we distinguish the voices of persons, though speaking, perhaps nearly on the same pitch, and discriminate different instruments while playing the same musical notes; and the Italians have, therefore, very properly termed it il metallo della voce. Again, motion in bodies, though not common to motion in music, in all its extents, is, in some respects, the same; in others similar, or, at least, analogous. Slow and quick, with regard to succession, with all the possible degrees between their perceptible extremes, are common to both. The same may be said of regular and irregular; and, where these fail, analogies can be effected by different means, as striking as circumstances of positive sameness or resemblance. Gliding, as it is sometimes practised, both by the voice and by certain instruments, is the same in music as in bodies, it being in reality the effect of that motion in some body acting on another. The notes of music, however, being each, by its nature, stationary, cannot, strictly speaking, be said to glide; yet the idea of a gliding motion is easily conveyed by a certain number of notes. In the same manner, soaring, sinking, and even level motion, are equally easily expressed; and though, to be sure, a note cannot be said to turn or run round like a body, yet a succession of notes may be found that may give an idea of circular motion, the difference between these motions in music and in bodies being something like the difference between these circles—

O O

Setting aside, then, the more obscure analogies in music, which are felt, perhaps, only in consequence of a certain organisation, or a degree of imagination not common to all men, it is surely evident that resemblances and analogies may be produced by means of sounds, and of their rhythm and arrangement, to everything in nature, which we perceive in consequence of sound and motion. Thus the whistling of the wind, the noise of thunder, the roaring and dashing of the sea, the murmurs of a stream, the whispers of the breeze—the solemn waving of a lofty pine, the forked motion and momentary appearance of lightning, the grand swell of a billow, the rapidity of a torrent, the meanders of a rivulet, or the smooth gliding of a silent stream, must, even to those who have not a musical ear, appear all within the compass of musical imitation, for this plain reason, that positive resemblance is, in fact, the ground of this imitation. Nor does the analogy seem much strained, when we say that music may imitate the tread of a giant, the light and nimble footsteps of a nymph, or even the motion of those fanciful beings whom Shakespeare has described as "chasing, with printless feet, the ebbing Neptune."

(To be continued.)

---

* "By the late Mr. John Brown, painter. Edinburgh, 1789."

The publish analysing some lished testimoni
proprietors.
lished testimoni
in the company threatened by t puts on a bold f easily; they ha pose to turn on feature of this worthless nostru
this view of the proprietors of th headed—" The
Mr. William
W.C., was affli swelled to twice and his feet so s
him till he appli
contents of two
Mr. C. H. P
Overseer of the sufferer from neu trying various re
Oil, the use of w
Mr. Edward said:—" There was completely u
rubbings with th
Mr. Henry J said:—" I had r hardly able to wa
Mrs. Wolfsb
Orphan boys, 17,
been used in the rheumatism."
Mr. Charles
—" Having for
St. Jacobs Oil, w
Henry and A
Aged Christian B that rheumatism and many old lad agony, now enjoy
Mr. N. Price, that I had straine
mission, yielded l
Mr. J. Clark,
" Although I was
I was able to stan
Mr. J. Wilkin
matism in his fe
St. Jacobs Oil dro
Robert George
Road, Canonbury, efficacy of St. J neuralgia."
Rev. Edward S
parishioners, unde
Mr. E. J. Feus
medical gentlemen
the-Sea, near Lon
St. Jacobs Oil pra
This journal co
satisfaction to us, medicine which is above investigation, reputation, that H steamers, are neve board."

ADVANCES
ARRANGED on LIFE POLICIES, REVERSIONS, ANNUITIES
SETTLED INCOMES, and every kind of negotiable SECURITY.
BILLS DISCOUNTED.
W. AUSTIN & CO. BANK CHAMBERS,
44, HAMMERSMITH ROAD, KENSINGTON, W.

NICHOLSON & CO.,
Organ Builders,
PALACE YARD, WORCESTER.
ESTABLISHED 50 YEARS. SPECIFICATIONS & ESTIMATES SENT FREE.

EDWARD I
RECTORY H
24, C
GOO
ALBERT BLUE
STYL
TOURIS
DRESS SUITS F
SCOTCH TWEE
EDWARD IVIMEY

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice.

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

Without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s, 9d ; also in bottles for abroad.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings

FOR

VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,
ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,

Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

Vins de Champagne

ARTHUR ROEDERER, Reims.

MAISON FONDEE 1876

SODEN MINERAL PASTILLES.

TRADE MARK. TRADE MARK

FOR THROAT IRRITATION COUGHS & COLDS.

"9, HARLEY STREET,

"I regard them as extremely valuable in obstinate Catarrhal affections of the Throat."

MORELL MACKENZIE, M.D.

FOR BRONCHITIS ASTHMA & CATARRHAL AFFECTIONS.

SPECIALLY RECOMMENDED BY Sir Morell Mackenzie WHOSE TESTIMONIAL IS WITH EACH BOX

The Advertiser who wants to spend £1, or the Advertiser who is willing to invest £1,000, will find every information in SELL'S WORLD'S PRESS Year 1888, for ADVERTISERS which includes the Advertisers' Reference Book, 1,850 pages, 2s. The ABC Directory, and Philosophy of Advertising, post free, price Sixpence. ADDRESS:—"SELL, LONDON."

ESTABLISHED THREE QUARTERS OF A CENTURY.

A. S. MALLETT, ALLEN & CO.,

CONTRACTORS TO

HER MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE,

Type Music Printers,

LITHOGRAPHERS, &c.

PORTRAITS. (Speciality.)	WINDOW BILLS.	STATIONERY.
POSTERS.	BOOKS.	SHOW CARDS.
	CATALOGUES	PLANS, &c., &c.

68 & 70, WARDOUR ST., LONDON, W.

TELEGRAPHIC ADDRESS—"ASMAL, LONDON."

CASSON'S

PATENT

Organ-Building System.

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c., See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The Late Mr. J. STIMPSON
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A
Mr. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—

CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN COMPANY, LIMITED,

DENBIGH.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Stndio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO.

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had but little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me, or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

To Mr. Ainsworth. BURNHAM-HORNER, F.R. Hist. S.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and Organ student who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music or organ arrangement, with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is, as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours, I. B. THORNTON,

Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them ; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly, HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.

To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilitate the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number), each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS,

BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

Ascherberg Piano Depot,
211, REGENT STREET, W.

A LUXURY

A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY

NO LONGER UNKNOWN IN ENGLAND.
BARBER & COMPANY'S
FRENCH COFFEE,
As Used in Paris,
In its Highest Perfection,
TENPENCE PER POUND.
(See that you have none other.)
2lb. (Sample) in tins sent free per
Parcels Post for 2s. 4d.,
Or 5lb. for 5s. 6d.
Postal Orders from 1s. 6d. to 10s. 6d.
May now be had from all Post Offices.

A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY

This is the choicest and most carefully selected Coffee, "Roasted on the French Principle" and mixed with the Finest Bruges Chicory.

2-lb. Sample Tins sent per Parcels Post to any Post Town in the United Kingdom for 2s. 4d.;
5 lb. in Tins for 5s. 6d.

ONFA CONGO

ONFA
ONFA
ONFA
ONFA

NEVER Sold in England before at the price.

The Pick of the Season's Growth.

BARBER & CO.'S

RICH SIRUPY

ONFA CONGO.

ONFA
ONFA
ONFA
ONFA

ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE PER POUND.

A TEA abounding in Strength and High Quality Never Sold before in England at the Price.

COMPARE

It with that Sold by others at Two Shillings.

6½ lb. sent by Parcels Post for 10s. 9d. to any Post Town in the United Kingdom and Channel Islands.
4½ lbs. for 7s. 6d.; 2½ lb. Samples for 4s. 3d.

BARBER AND COMPANY,

274, REGENT CIRCUS, OXFORD STREET, W.
61, BISHOPSGATE STREET, CITY.
11, BORO' HIGH STREET, S.E.

ALSO

02, WESTBOURNE GROVE, W.
42, GREAT TITCHFIELD STREET, W.
KING'S CROSS, N.

BRIGHTON, HASTINGS, MANCHESTER, BRISTOL, LIVERPOOL, PRESTON, AND BIRMINGHAM.

Postal Orders, from 2s. 6d. to 10s. 6d, may now be had for One Penny from all Post Offices,
Cheques to be crossed "London and Westminster."

Printed by A. S. Mallett, Allen & Co., London, and Published by William Pearce, at 138a, Strand, W.C., to which address all communications must be sent

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1836.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 68.—NO. 50. SATURDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1888. PRICE {3d. Unstamped. 4d. Post Free.

THE

KARN AMERICAN ORGANS

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,
WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs, equal to, if not surpassing all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

New Illustrated Catalogue and Price Lists Free of the
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:
THE SCHREIBER PIANO COMPANY,
3, NEWMAN MANSIONS, NEWMAN ST., LONDON, W.

W. G. THOMAS'S PIANOS!!

ARE the BEST and cheapest in the market. Professors and others will find an advantage by sending for the Free Illustrated lists. Splendid Iron-framed PIANOS, full-compass trichord, in Walnut Wood Cases, at popular prices. Packed FREE. Contracts taken for large quantities. Old Pianos bought for Cash, or taken in exchange.

W. G. THOMAS. Pianoforte Manufacturer,
Gospel Oak Grove, Malden Road, Kentish Town, London, N.W

PIANOS, PIANOS
Harmoniums, and American Organs,
ON THE THREE YEARS' SYSTEM

Pianos ..	...	from 10s. 6d. per month.
Harmoniums ...	„	5s. od.	„
American Organs	„	7s. od.	„

Any Instrument sent home on receipt of first Instalment.

OUR UPRIGHT IRON GRAND, Trichord, Double Check Repeater Action, Celeste Pedal, 15s. per month.

This is a thoroughly sound and elegant Instrument, warranted in every respect.

Other Classes equally cheap.

Write for Catalogue to
SHENSTONE, SHENSTONE & CO.,
Steam Works: GRANGE ROAD, LEYTON, E.
Show Rooms: 70, Hackney Rd. 87, St. Peter's St., Islington; & 29, Kennington Pk. Rd

Special Notices.

CONCERT MANAGEMENT. Mr. Basil Tree (Successor to Mr. Ambrose Austin), St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, is open to undertake the management of Concerts.

SHOREDITCH TOWN HALL, Old Street, E.C.—A GRAND EVENING CONCERT, in aid of the Funds of the Sabbath Meals Society, will take place on Tuesday. January 8, 1889, at 8 o'clock. Artists: Miss Marie Vagnolini, Miss Rose Jacobs, Miss Meredyth Elliott, Mr. Iver McKay, Mr. Robert Long, and Mr. Donnell Balfe. Violin, Miss Maude Woolf. Recitation, Miss Carrie Lawrence (Mrs. Hyam). Accompanist, Mr. Arthur Fagge. Conductor, Mr. Henry Klein. Tickets, 5s., 3s., and 1s., of Mr. Samuel M. Lion, 23, Compton Terrace, Highbury, or 36, Bethnal Green Road, E., and Messrs. Monington and Weston, Pianoforte Manufacturers, 3, Holborn Viaduct, E.C.

UNIVERSITY of MELBOURNE.—Ormond Professorship of Music.—The Council of the University, having founded a Professorship of Music, to be called the Ormond Professorship, CANDIDATES for the APPOINTMENT are requested to forward their applications, with testimonials, to the Agent-General for Victoria, 8, Victoria Chambers, Westminster, not later than the 10th of January, 1839. Full information as to salary, tenure and duties of the Professor, can be obtained on application at the above address.

GRAHAM BERRY, Agent-General for Victoria.

SIGNOR NICOLA COVIELLO, the popular Cornet Soloist (Royal Italian Opera, Promenade Concerts, &c.), now booking Concert Engagements (London, suburbs, and provinces). Immensely successful at Promenade Concerts with "The Lost Chord," Levy's "Whirlwind," &c.—5, Sudbourne Road, Brixton.

TYROLEAN VOCALIST (SPECIALITY).—Mr. JOSEPH HOFFMANN (Own Compositions, Author of "De Schweizer Girl," "De Organ Girl, "De Schneiderline," "Mine Flute," "The Disappointed Lover, etc., etc.)—38, MILDMAY ROAD, N.

Knighthood of the Legion of Honour, 1878. Knight Commander of Villa Viraga, 1883. Gold Medals at the Principal International Exhibitions.

JOHN BRINSMEAD & SONS'

PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS RETURNED FROM HIRE, may be purchased at GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

JOHN RINSMEAD AND SONS, Pianoforte Manufacturers, 18, 20, 22, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W. Lists free.

THE "EMPRESS" PIANOS

ARE the best value in the market. Workmanship cannot be surpassed. Touch and tone unequalled. Professors and others are invited to inspect these beautiful instruments. Prices from 20 guineas. Ten years' guarantee with every instrument. Messrs. Chudleigh Bros., 140, Strand, London.

£10 10s. PIANOS.

PIANOFORTES (High-class) for the Million, £10 10s. Full compas, 7 octaves. Warranted. THE LONDON MUSIC PUBLISHING COMPANY (Limited) Originators of the "Ten Guinea" Pianoforte.
54, Great Marlborough Street, W.

Musical World Portraits.

DEC. 29 - - - - - - - MISS ANNIE DWELLEY

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, or £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the Manager of THE MUSICAL WORLD, 138*a*, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, HAMILTON TERRACE,
ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N. W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.,
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, FINSBURY PARK VILLAS,
GREEN LANES, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI,
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor).
12, WESTBOURNE PARK TERRACE, W.

Mr. F. ST. JOHN LACY,
(Professor of Singing. Composer, and Vocalist (Baritone),
FITZROY MANSION, CHARLOTTE STREET,
FITZROY SQUARE, W.

Mr. H. MARTIN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor)
Address—7, WIMPOLE ST., CAVENDISH SQ., W.

Mr. LOUIS N. PARKER, A.R.A.M.
(Composer, Conductor, Lecturer),
SHERBORNE, DORSET.

Mr. G. W. L. MARSHALL-HALL
Gives essons in Composition and Dramatic Singing,
151, RUCKLIDGE AVENUE,
WILLESDEN JUNCTION, N.W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts)
BOSWORTH HOUSE, HUSBAND'S BOSWORTH,
RUGBY.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o NOLAN & JACKSON.

Miss JULIA JONES (Soprano) begs that all communications respecting Oratorios, Concerts, &c., will be addressed to 4, St. Thomas's Road, Finsbury Park, London, N.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorio),
41, WELBECK ST., CAVENDISH SQUARE, W

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, PORTSDOWN ROAD, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concerts and Oratorio),
29, ALBANY STREET, REGENT'S PARK, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio)
2, SEDGMOOR VILLAS,
Private Lessons given. CAMBERWELL, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
(Ballad, Oratorio, etc.)
31, MONMOUTH RD., BAYSWATER, LONDON, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, NORFOLK SQUARE, HYDE PARK, W.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts),
56 DUCHESS RD., EDGBASTON, BIRMINGHAM.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 36, ALBION PLACE, HYDE PARK W.; or to Mr. N. VERT, 6, CORK STREET, W.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. ALFRED MOUL (sole agent),
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. ALFRED MOUL,
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.,
Or, 270, ELGIN AVENUE, MAIDA VALE, W.

Mr. IVER McKAY
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concerts),
1, MILNER SQUARE, LONDON, N.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio),
OLD TRAFFORD, MANCHESTER.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio),
28, DEVONSHIRE STREET, ISLINGTON, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
GOTHIC LODGE,
LORDSHIP LANE, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, ST. STEPHEN'S AFENUE,
SHEPHERD'S BUSH, W

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
40, STANLEY GARDENS, BELSIZE PARK, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Operas, Concerts. and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. ROOSEVELT SCHUYLER,
55, BEAVER ST., NEW YORK CITY.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, UPPER MOUNT STREET, DUBLIN.

Mr. RAPHAEL GORDON
(Operas, Concerts, and At Homes).
c/o Signor ODOARDO BARRI,
60, MARGARET STREET, W.,
Or, 97, TALBOT ROAD, BAYSWATER, W.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. VERT, Esq., 6, CORK STREET.

Mr. FREDERICK KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, CANFIELD GARDENS, S. HAMPSTEAD.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
EGREMONT, CROXTED ROAD,
WEST DULWICH, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert),
63, STAFFORD PLACE,
BUCKINGHAM GATE, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, etc.),
30, LANCASTER ROAD, NOTTING HILL, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorios, and Operas),
70, PORTSDOWN ROAD, MAIDA VALE, W.

Harp.

Mr. W. T. BARKER
(Concerts, At Homes, Receptions),
49, EBURY STREET, BELGRAVIA, S.W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22A, DORSET STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified." 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
"YELBANA," 99, ANERLEY ROAD,
Pupils visited and received. ANERLEY, S.E.

Miss FREDA MARSDEN,
Solo Violinist (Concerts, At Homes, etc.),
Address. c/o Mr. CHARLES WOOLHOUSE,
81, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella (Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST,

Telegraphic Address: "HEALEY'S AGENCY," LONDON

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Madame WILSON-OSMAN (A.R.A.M.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert), (Soprano)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Miss AMY FLORENCE (Soprano),
(pera, Concerts, Oratorios, At Homes),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W

Miss FLORENCE EMERSON (Soprano)
(Concerts, Oratorio, At Homes, Etc)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY.
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W, B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Miss FALCONAR (Contralto),
(Oratorio Concerts Etc.)
24, OPPIDANS RD, PRIMROSE HILL, N.W
or Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor),
28, BELSIZE ROAD, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W

Mr. HENRY PHILLIPS (Tenor),
Sole agent, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio)
Business Manager, W, B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone),
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W, B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Herr WALDEMAR MEYER (Solo Vlnst)
Concerts, At Homes, Etc.)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET,
REGENT STREET, W

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Tenterden Street, W.—
Patrons The QUEEN and the ROYAL FAMILY.
Principal—Dr. A. C. MACKENZIE.
THE NEXT FORTNIGHTLY CONCERT, FEBRUARY 9.
The LENT TERM will begin on MONDAY, JANUARY 21. Entrance Examination, Saturday, January 19, at 11. JOHN GILL, Secretary.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, Kensington Gore, London.
Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.
President—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director—SIR GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL D.
FIFTEEN OPEN FREE SCHOLARSHIPS will be competed for in March. Last day for receiving applications January 20.
Forms of application and particulars may be obtained of the Registrar, Mr. GEORGE WATSON, at the College. CHARLES MORLEY, Hon. Sec.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and EXAMINATION, etc., and the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music Instituted 1872.
President, THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.
SESSION, 1888—9.
LENT TERM commences JANUARY 14, 1889.
Students (Professional and Amateur) are received for a complete Course of Musical Training, or for a Single Study. The following is a list of the subjects taught: Harmony and Counterpoint, Form and Orchestration, Composition, Musical Acoustics, Pianoforte, Organ, Figured Bass Playing, Transposition, etc., Solo Singing, the Art of Pianoforte Accompaniment, Violin, Violoncello, Double Bass, Flute, Oboe, Clarinet, Harp, Horn, Orchestral Class, Vocal and Aural Physiology (Lectures), Voice Production Class (Lectures), Elocution.
Prospectuses, Form of Application, etc., and all particulars can be obtained from the Secretary, Trinity College, London, W.
By order of the Academical Board.
Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C. PATRON—THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.
Established to advance the cause of Church Music and the truest interests of its Professors.
Members of the Church of England and Ireland and the Episcopal Church of Scotland are eligible for Election.
Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates), 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members), 15s. per annum; Life Subscription, 5 guineas.
Prospectus and further particulars may be abtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

MUSIC SCHOOL.—CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL for Girls (Limited), 6, Upper Baker Street, Regent's Park. —Head Music Mistress, Miss Macirone, late Professor of Royal Academy of Music. Fee, three guineas per term. Children from 8 to 13 allowed to begin and continue for two guineas per term. Pupils not in the School may pay an entrance fee of one guinea. The fees payable in advance. Pupils wishing to join Violin Class under Mdlle. Gabrielle Vaillant, to send in their names to Miss Macirone. F. J. HOLLAND, Chairman.

ANGLO-FRENCH SCHOOL, FOR DAUGHTERS OF GENTLEMEN, Granville House, Hornsey Rise, London, N.—Miss NASH and Mdlle. RAYMOND, assisted by a staff of efficient Professors and Teachers, receive Pupils to board and educate Special attention given to Music. Healthy and pleasant locality. Terms moderate. References kindly permitted to parents of pupils and to the Editor of "The Musical World."

SOUTHSEA. St. Bees' College for Girls and Kindergarten, conducted by Miss Nelson, M.C.P., healthily and pleasantly situated, with good playground, offers every educational advantage with the comforts of a home, and careful supervision. Pupils prepared for all higher examinations. Special attention to Music and preparation for the R.A.M. Class-singing, languages, physiology, drawing, dancing, swimming, musical drill, combined with a thorough English education. Terms, moderate and inclusive.

MR. JOHN GREIG, M.A., Mus. Bac., F.C.O. (passed Exam. for Mus. Doc. Oxon., 1887), teaches HARMONY, COUNTERPOINT, and FUGUE by CORRESPONDENCE. Coached successfully for final Mus. Bac. Oxon, 1886.—Address, 7, Scotland Street, Edinburgh.

MR. J. S. KNIGHT (Tenor) for Ballad Concerts, Oratorio, &c— Address, 59, Beauchamp Place, Brompton Road, S.W.

HIGH-CLASS VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC for Evening Parties, At Homes, etc., by experienced artists: a complete Concert Party if required; terms moderate.—Address K. and B., 59, Beauchamp Place, Brompton Road, S.W.

OL PARENTS
GOVERNE

Who will forwa
Particulars about what tern panions are alsc

BENE
For granting a reduced circum
bodily infirmiti

TO THE GO and Intere
MISS
AGED 40 YEAR
chronic and in weakness. She entirely depend

The case is Borthwick, The Square., W, L
Mackenzie, 19,
Place, Bishopsb
M.A.. The Rec
Northamptonshi
The Grove, Eali
Montague Squar
6, Upper Mon
Porchester Terr
M C.P., 85, Ne

SI

MELLOWI

HOLLO
These Remedies and are pronou
testimonials ledged by of d Manufactured
N.B.—Advice gra

DRURY
BOXIN

BABES IN Charles La
Andrews, Reuber
Payne (clown), F
Grey, and Harrie

THE JODR
Mrs. Churc
NING, at 8,45,
A WHITE LIE.

PATTI ROS
her first app
by a specially sele
in one act, entitle production on any

PATTI ROS

PATTI ROS

PATTI ROS

PATTI ROS

JODRELL T

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1888.

⁂ MSS. and Letters intended for publication must be addressed to "The Editor." Rejected MSS. cannot be returned unless accompanied by stamped directed envelope.

⁂ Advertisements and business communications generally should be addressed to the Manager (MR. WILLIAM PEARCE), while the Proprietor's receipt will be the only recognised one for all payments. Advertising, Publishing, and General Offices: 138*a*, Strand, London.

Facts and Comments.

An American firm of pianoforte manufacturers, Messrs. Behming and Son, have recently been holding high festival, the occasion for which was afforded by the completion of the 25,000th instrument turned out from their factory. No doubt the contemplation of this record is pleasant to the firm in question; but it is an appalling thing to those—and they are many—who share the opinions of M. Gounod and Dr. von Bülow on the piano-plague, which has assumed terrific proportions. Egyptians surely endured no worse infliction; for after all, what is a frog in your bedroom compared to the piano which is in every house, and from which there is no refuge though one should fly to the uttermost parts of the earth! For this record is doubtless equalled or approached by many other firms throughout the world, and it may be presumed that before long the pianoforte will be planted amidst Greenland's icy mountains, and the burning sands of Africa, so that all places shall be filled with the sound thereof and, the young lady who "plays a little" shall be queen of all.

Hèrold's opera "Zampa," is to be produced during the approaching season at Milan, when the principal rôle will be taken by M. Maurel. To what Walt Whitman calls "the average man," "Zampa" is a name of terror, since, but a few years ago, the overture was the favourite item in the repertoire of the young ladies, referred to above, who played a little, and played in couples.

Some time ago we commented in these columns on the means adopted by the clergy of an Italian village to interrupt a theatrical performance. Fitting sequels to that tale of disgraceful bigotry are supplied by the various stories in circulation concerning the recent prohibition of "La Tosca" in the Netherlands, and the ecclesiastic curses hurled from the pulpits of Utrecht against those who ventured to attend the performances of Sarah Bernhardt; and of the Cathedral scene in "Faust," which by order of the Burgomaster of the Agra is now excised whenever the opera is performed. Against such intolerance as this, argument is of course vain and equally useless is the attempt to discover any rational ground for it, since the scene in question is beyond doubt of the most profound spiritual significance. The trouble and grief of the stricken Marguerite, as she listens to the accusations of Mephistopheles, almost hidden in the shadows, and who seems to be the voice of her conscience made audible, is in itself a sermon more convincing than any that could be preached by Batavian stupidity or Italian ignorance.

Seldom has a musical event of equal and similar importance been received with such unanimous favour as the production of Gounod's "Romèo et Juliette," which, besides pleasing both public and critics, and helping to replenish the coffers of the management, has filled M. Gounod with an unbounded delight, in token whereof he has written a most amiable letter to MM. Ritt and Gailhard. "Nowhere in the world," says the enthusiastic composer, "could one have a more beautiful "ensemble musical." And Madame Patti, too, has been so moved by her reception in Paris that the imaginative Gallic journalist has lately announced the diva's intention of giving up her Welsh castle in order to buy the château of Chenonceaux. The Parisian mind finds it hard to separate the spheres of fiction and journalism.

Nor is French art criticism always an entirely admirable thing. Like the little girl in the nursery rhyme, when it is good it is very, very good; but when it is bad it is "horrid." Saint Beuve, Baudelaire, Gauthier—these are critics indeed; but what shall be said of the writer in "L'Europe Artiste," who, in referring to a concert at which M. Devrîes sang an extract from Wagner's "Walkyrie," speaks of the work in question as "musique incompréhensible," to which the artist could lend no impressiveness.

The attention of our readers is invited to the following letter, with the object of which we entirely sympathize:—

SIR,—May we trespass on your valuable space on behalf of an old and deserving musician who is now in want. We refer to Edward Panormo, who is about to enter his seventy-eighth year. He is the last of the celebrated Pamormo family so famed for their manufacture of violins and guitars. This venerable gentleman is in very delicate health and quite unable to support himself or aged wife. References can be given to several well-known musicians. Subscriptions are being received by Messrs. Harper Bros., of Ship Street, Brighton; or by yours truly,

Harrison and Son,
Dec. 17, 1888. 14, Queen's Road, Bighton.

The "Sainton Dolby" prize at the Royal Academy of Music has been awarded to Miss Hannah Jones. There were twenty candidates.

Messrs. Klein and Co., of 3, Holborn Viaduct, have submitted to us a specimen of their new candle-reflectors, an ingeniously simple adaption of an old idea which will probably find favour with all, but with musicians in especial. The advantages claimed for the reflector are its steadiness, safety, and adaptability. For the pianoforte or music-stand it is likely to be extremely useful.

It is reported that the ingenious M. Eiffel, who is now so busily perpetrating the monstrous tower in Paris, proposes to fix upon its topmost height Aeolian harps, automatic trumpets, and all kinds of "musick" that can be acted upon by the wind. At certain regular intervals these will be set to work, and the inhabitants of Paris will be cheered in their toils, or soothed in their slumbers, by the dulcet strains wafted from the iron heights. Were it not that the performances will occur at various times during the day or night, M. Eiffel might christen his hideous erection "Memnon," though it is the rising wind, not the rising sun, which will smite the monster into song. Were we Mr. Ruskin, we might base on all this some highly moral observations, and find therein a quite perfect illustration of the aims of the Nineteenth Century. But we are not Mr. Ruskin.

Herr Joachim will, during the present month, celebrate at Berlin, the fiftieth anniversary (let not the awful word Jubilee be spoken) of his first public appearance, made, at the age of nine, in December, 1838. No "Temporal King" could receive such hearty congratulations as will be offered to Herr Joachim by every musician. A propos of this interesting occasion, it may be remarked that, at the Lower Rhine Festival, Herr Joachim will play a new concerto of his own composition. The rest of the programme will include one of Beethoven's Masses, as well as his "Ruins of Athens;" Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri;" Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night;" Berlioz's "Queen Mab" scherzo; and three Symphonies, viz., Beethoven's C minor; Schubert's B minor; and Brahms's First.

Mr. Hamish MacCunn's new Cantata, "The Lay of the last Minstrel," will be given at the Crystal Palace, on Feb. 19, when the soloists will be Madame Nordica, Miss Marie Curran, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Andrew Black.

Mr. Avon D. Saxon, a "recently imported" American baritone, whose appearances in England have, so far, been highly successful, has been engaged by Mr. Carl Rosa for his season at Liverpool where Mr. Saxon will make his first appearances early in January, as the Toreador in "Carmen," and the Count in the "Bohemian Girl."

Under the title of "Twelve Lyrics," Messrs. J. B. Cramer and Co. will shortly publish an album of songs (ten solos and two duets), by Mr. A. Goring Thomas. The words are by Mr. Harold Boulton, who may be congratulated on the poetical merit and rhythmic variety shown. In these respects his poems are distinctly out of the common. Those familiar with Mr. Thomas's graceful and distingué style will not be disappointed with this, his latest offering to amateurs of taste. There is so much to admire in each of these songs that we hesitate to single any one for special mention, especially as their merits differ rather in kind than in degree. Some are ambitious and dramatic, others simple and tender, others again are fanciful and dainty; but all are marked by melodious charm and refinement, and, in the accompaniments, by singular taste and skill.

Miss Grace Damian will give a concert at Princes' Hall on January 9, at which she will make her last appearance before her departure to Canada with Madame Albani. She will be assisted by, amongst others, Madame Mary Davies, Madame Clara Samuell, Mr. Barrington Foote, and Mr. Arthur Oswald.

Correspondence.

THE DAY-MACFARREN THEORY OF HARMONY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL WORLD."

DEAR SIR,—When Mr. Stephens reminds us of upper partials, 5th, 7th, 11th, 13th, 15th, and 17th, I frankly confess he is far above me—in fact, he is up in the realms of minute sounds, audible only to the bees and the ants. I do not know that we should object to the 5th harmonic for a root, as he says we do; we have not yet used it for a chord in the key; but we certainly use it as the tonic of a related key. Many of Beethoven's second subjects will testify to this.

His contention that all chords of a key, as used in modern music, must be in perfect tune with their corresponding notes in the harmonic chord of Nature, goes back to my former objection—viz., that opponents of the Day theory wish to drive it, and music with it, to the dreary level road of an exact science—to make chords according to mathematical principles. When we think that acousticians have said we must have eighty notes in the octave in order to get every one in tune, we feel inclined to quote Euclid, that mathematical musician of the past, and say "which is absurd."

I am reminded of another acoustician, a musician, too, who confessed once: "When I go into the orchestra now, I hear nothing but the beats, I lose the music."

Look, as I said before, at other arts; for the principles of art are the same in all, though music seems so much separated from others. Was there not a picture a few years back of a beautiful maiden in some hapless plight? She was by a tree, and at her feet there grew a daisy. A subsidiary idea it was, but carrying on the main thought as a type of her maidenly nature. I can fancy the mathematical objectors gazing at this daisy, magnifying glass in hand, and saying, "There ought to be twenty-five petals in circle round the yellow centre, but there are only twenty-one or twenty-two; it is a little indistinct, and we cannot count the leaves that press against the ground. It is out of tune! It cannot be a daisy at all."

However, I am satisfied with the striking resemblance which the few spots of paint bear to a daisy; it suggests the little flower and its whole character to my artistic perception, such as it is. I do not want a botanical drawing in such a place.

In the same way the few notes selected by the composer as one of the fundamental discords bear such a strong resemblance to the natural chord, and suggest to our artistic musical perceptions the quality of chord that is hovering more or less distinctly in all Nature's musical sounds. Our sense takes them for it, and receives them in its place.

Doubtless there is, and must be, great difference of opinion among different artists as to how much Nature should be copied in Art. One man will have a model arranged for everything in his picture, while another works entirely from memory. All, however, perceive that arrangement, or composition, must be applied by their artistic minds, or the picture fails to be a work of art, and becomes mere mechanical drawing.

Mr. Stephens contends that such imperfect representation of nature as a part of art may be well for a composer, but is not sufficient for a student, "whom systems should teach." To my mind, the moment an art-student enters into an examination of nature for the purposes of his art—in music, the moment he touches the solution of the dominant 7th, and its followers—he should be prepared with the motto I quoted in my first paper on this subject, "Nature is not Art, but Art is Nature seen through the human mind."

May I make another quotation from the old friend of the theory whose name is coupled at the head of this? "Acoustics have no more to do with music than the anatomy of the elephant has to do with pianoforte-playing!" Are you not surprised—you who are among the mathematical objectors? The anatomy of the elephant has a great deal to do with pianoforte-playing, for without it we should not have those "beautiful cold keys" that some poet has spoken of. But a great deal of cutting, smoothing, and selection has to be carried out before the elephant's tusk can be manipulated by the pianist. I think the mathematical musician's theory would be best carried out if the whole tusks were arranged in order for the keyboard—8 feet in the bass up to 2 feet in the treble. Fancy the giant performer necessary for such an instrument! Even a Rubinstein or a Menter would be aghast at it. I will say no more, but cheerfully concede the last word to my friendly opponent.

Yours truly,

December 15, 1888. OLIVERIA L. PRESCOTT.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL WORLD."

DEAR SIR—With the exception of the performance of the "Merry Wives," by the pupils of the Royal College of Music, and one just given at the Avenue Theatre of the "Bohemian Girl," I believe there has not been a single performance of opera in English in London this year. And yet we are supposed to be such a musical people, and so much attached to our national opera!

I am, &c.,

35, Stanley Gardens, South Hampstead. W. W. LINTON.
December 15, 1888.

"THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL."

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

GLASGOW, December 19.

The first performance of Mr. Hamish McCunn's new dramatic cantata, "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," took place here last night in St. Andrew's Hall. The choral portion of the work was given by the Glasgow Choral Union, and the solos were taken by Madame Nordica, Miss Damian, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Andrew Black. The exigencies of time and space will prevent me from adding much to the review of the score which appeared in your columns last week, but I may, at the outset, record an admirable performance of a work which excited the utmost enthusiasm. The cantata opens with a short orchestral prelude, during which is introduced the chief theme of the opening chorus, "Nine and twenty Knights of fame," and it is an excellent example of Mr. McCunn's judicious employment of the leit-motif. Another example is the stately phrase referring to the dead Lord Walter, and which may be called the "Chieftain's theme," while the motive which dominates the entire poem, telling of love's conquest over pride, is expressed in a phrase not less beautiful. The concluding scene of the first part, which describes the visit of Sir William of Deloraine to Melrose Abbey, is both dramatically and musically, one of the most important numbers, and shews at its clearest Mr. McCunn's singular power of vivid orchestral colouring. Especially significant of the supernatural character of the scene is the use of the trombones, trumpets, and contra-fagotto, which give out strangely weird phrases in the bass, while two horns sustain a wailing melody, founded on the "Mighty Book" theme. An admirable contrast to the lurid mystery of this scene is supplied by the peace and beauty of the number with which the second part opens, descriptive of the lovers' meeting. This is interrupted by a vigorous passage, in which the meeting of the two knights is admirably set out. The scene is then abruptly changed to Margaret's room in Branksome Tower, which is succeeded by the fiery chorus "'Tis the beacon blaze of war!" From this to the penultimate number, the music increases in vigour and intensity, reaching its climax in the simple, but exceedingly impressive chorus, "'Tis done! 'tis done! that fatal blow." I cannot but question the fitness of the concluding recitative and chorus, "O Caledonia, stern and wild"; but this is a small blot on a work which seems to me one of superlative merit, and which places Mr. McCunn on an enviably high position. Nor do I doubt that every musician in London, who may hear the work on its production at the Crystal Palace (which, I understand, is fixed for February 16), will endorse this opinion. It only remains for me now to say, that the artists engaged did their utmost with the music allotted to them. Madame Nordica declaimed her solos with the highest dramatic power, and Miss Damian's excellent voice and style were well displayed in Margaret's music. Mr. McKay was in fine voice, and Mr. Andrew Black, whose singing has greatly improved, won much applause. The band and chorus were also entirely satisfactory. At the conclusion of the work the young composer was the recipient of a wildly enthusiastic ovation.

MUSIC A DEVELOPMENT OF SPEECH

BY G. W. L. MARSHALL-HALL.

The ultimate use of music was foreshadowed by the savage who perceived that he could convey to his fellows his wants and emotions by means of the vocal sounds which in all probability preceded speech. The nerve centres excited by various emotional stimuli contract the muscles, and this in the case of those of the chest and larynx produce sound. Such movements, at first accidental and purposeless, become in time inseparably associated with the emotional state which originated them, and so become an index or expression of it.

Language must therefore have been gradually formed by using certain sounds to express certain thoughts or emotions, and then, by varying these, to indicate modifications of the thoughts and emotions.

The consciousness of man is capable of a trifold division, viz., Sense, Thought, and Emotion.

Speech utilises the sense of hearing to convey (1) thought, (2) emotion. Its lowest use is the mere expression of thought, its highest is the endeavour to arouse noble emotion. This it accomplishes (1) indirectly through the thought, (2) directly through the senses.

Let me give an example.

To ejaculate the word "bread" to an Englishman is to cause the image (or thought) of a certain substance to enter his brain, without, however, causing in him any emotion. If the same sound be uttered to a Frenchman it will arouse neither thought nor emotion, for he has not been taught to associate that particular series of sounds with any definite object.

But let the sound "oh!" be emitted in a suffering tone, and the emotions of every human being will be awakened. The word itself will convey no thought to them, but sympathy will be aroused. All will be aware that a sound so pronounced indicates suffering.

If the word "bread" be ejaculated in a like manner, all the world will understand that the speaker is suffering, but only the Englishman will know that the suffering is connected with bread.

The concrete thought "bread" is produced purely by the peculiar noise, by the peculiar concussion of the different parts of the mouth, and the word only becomes capable of portraying emotion by imparting to it musical sound, that is to say, melody in its primitive form; and each modification of such melody will produce a distinct emotion quite independently of the word or thought to which it is imparted.

Thus the chief emotion of a song is produced by the music, each phrase having its distinct, peculiar passion. The words cannot alter this emotion. They either, if not in keeping with it, jar on our perceptions, so that we say the music doesn't "suit" the words; or they help to intensify the emotion by drawing a mental picture of the action which gave rise to it.

At once a glimmering of the real use and purpose of music is seen. Music does not portray thought; it does not attempt to represent it as a book, a table, or any concrete idea for which speech altogether suffices; but where speech stops short, music advances, embodying in its illimitable combinations and juxtapositions of sounds every minute shade of emotion in the human breast.

The noblest office of speech is to aid in this elevation of man above the brute beast, which can only be done by educating his emotions.

Man has given a name to every object, every action, and, as far as he could, to his most powerful emotions, in order that at any moment he may call these to remembrance. In many cases he has tried to convey to the mind a more exact impression of the object by imitating its chief characteristic in sound. Thus the word "scrunch" very well imitates the sound of the action so named. For the same purpose rhytm was introduced. All words of more than one syllable have a certain rhythm, and when the rhythms of many words are blended together into clearly perceptible, corresponding periods, we call the speech "poetry." The more images (i.e., words previously understood) can be grouped together, the greater the poet's chance of influencing the emotions. This effort to procure a yet more powerful agent by which to arouse the emotions has been developed in music in precisely the same way as melody. A "theme" is formed of one or more rhythms,[*] and can be used in musical prose or poetry. The former is a series of rhythmical phrases not proportioned one to another; the latter is a series of rhythmical phrases proportioned to a nicety. Really noble recitative—in which the phrases must be rhythmical—is the simplest form of musical prose, which has, however, been developed enormously in instrumental music; and one of the most powerful instances of tone poetry is the Scherzo of Beethoven's C minor Symphony.[†]

To give a further example of how music imparts emotional power to speech, I beg leave to quote the following speech from one of my own music-dramas:—

> "O fearful strait! . . . .
> Is it more honour honour to forego,
> And by so doing safeguard England's freedom?—
> Or, holding honour in my clenchéd grip,
> To lightly vault life's fence, and thereby shun
> The horrid stain which else shall poison peace
> And pluck existence bald,—to o'erskip shame,
> But, by so doing, England plunge in woe?"

It will be sufficient to analyse the third line. The emotion is here portrayed by speech through the thought, and through the threefold use of the sense of hearing.

Each word conveys a thought to the reader, an action, or an object; by combining these in a certain way a picture is drawn. A man stands tightly grasping something in his fingers, about to leap over a fence into the vast unknown. By the tightness of his grasp we know the something is precious; his attitude betokens doubt, as described by the "or"; easiness of performance of the action which he is considering, is portrayed by the simile of vaulting a fence. The hesitation, and the fact that it is life's fence portray the gravity of the donbt. And from putting these facts together we are enabled to, more or less, imagine the emotion which is agitating him. This is where speech, to a great extent, fails; it relies on a vivid imagination, which is possessed by few, for its effect. It, however, endeavours to supply the deficiencies of the imagination in some degree through the senses.

---

[*] i.e., Accent groups.

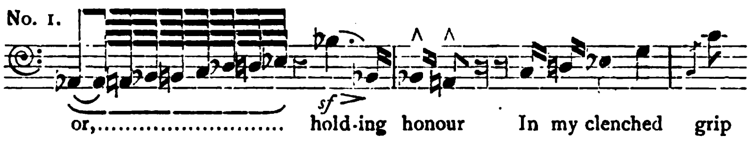
[†] Thus those who do not understand music (by which they mean proportioned rhythm), directly the rhythms cease to be proportioned declare that "there is no tune!" Just as a man might declare that there is no sense in a prose writing, because the rhythm of the words is not proportioned.

It portrays the force with which the fingers were clasped, by imitating the sound made by suddenly tightening them on a compressible object. Compare the actions and words "clench" and scrunch" and note the similarity. The thought would have been much the same if "closed hands" had been substituted, but "clenched grip" appeals more powerfully to the emotional perception. Then the force which the rhythm imparts to the sentence seems to draw us with it, we feel that a pause, a climax must come, the tension must cease, which happens on the word "lightly."

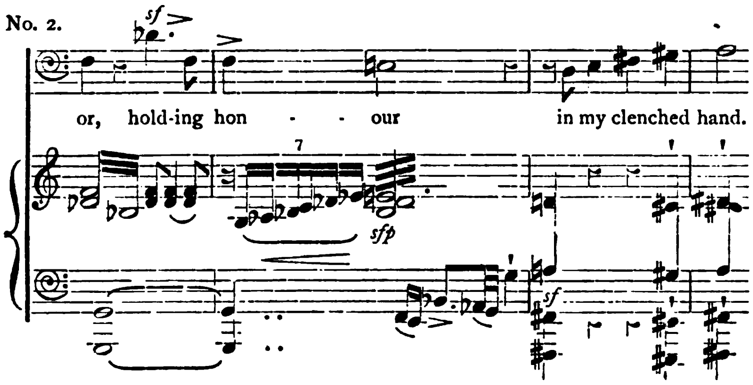
Finally the melody of speech is imparted to the words by the voice, and we at once become aware that a new, wonderful, living element has entered them, which effects what the presentation of the thought alone was incapable of. The emotion which he had before to imagine, is actually presented to us without any effort of our own, for every inflection of voice produces a corresponding shade of emotion.

I noted down, as far as our fixed scale would allow, the melody of the voice of an actor who spoke the above lines with powerful and natural dramatic effect, together with the rhythm, and was much struck with its great resemblance to my own emotional representation of it in music.

No. 1.



No. 2.



The rhythm is identical, and the tendencies of the voice much the same, but no actor will ever be able to produce the same degree of emotion in his hearers as the singer, at liberty to use the full beauty of his voice to express himself, and with the minds of his audience already tempered by the orchestra. A musician will not need the words, he will feel the emotion through the music. In fact, whereas only those particular notes, in that particular order, are able to arouse the particular emotion, it would be possible to quite change the thought, as expressed in words without affecting the emotion in the least degree. So imperfect is speech.

Thus speech, having endeavoured to arouse emotion by the use of thought, by drawing mental pictures, finds these means inadequate, and assumes to itself as much of melody and rhythm—i.e., music, as its inherent imperfections will allow.

At this point began the true cultivation of music as tone-poetry. It is unnecessary to trace its gradual development, which was of necessity carried on by a small minority of the world, the foreigners, so to speak, often never understanding, or losing sight of, its real purpose, in the sensual delight which accompanied it. Just as though a man, having learnt to pronounce a few words, meaningless to himself, were to occupy himself by ejaculating these sounds, pleased at their agreeable effect on his ears. The world is already tiring of this purposeless amusement, and a great movement seems to be setting in with regard to music; men are beginning to see that it is wrth otheir while to learn to understand the new speech.

What language through the thought, and through an imperfect use of the senses, has begun, music is completing, by making a more thorough use of these very senses. Man having noted the various inflections and melodies of the speaking voice, and the imperfect attempts at rhythm in speech, has developed them, to a comparative perfection. So that now, without using thought at all, he is enabled to call up every possible passion, and write it down in black and white. Every true musical phrase depicts an emotion, and every new tone-poet adds to the vocabulary. Where music, leaving its own sphere, tries to vie with speech, and depict concrete thought, it fails miserably, and becomes mere buffoonery. Berlioz, in particular, attempted to force this unnatural office on music, and where he does so, excites our wonder that he did not use words, which were so admirably adapted for his purpose.

(To be continued.)

Concerts.

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS

Madame Neruda was welcomed back with peculiar pleasure, last Saturday, as the first piece on the programme was Mozart's Quartet in D minor, commonly known as "No. 2"—a work in which her graceful individuality always makes itself felt in the happiest manner.

Miss Agnes Zimmermann chose for her solos Schumann's Nachtstuck, No. 4, and Toccata, Op. 7. The latter work was taken at a very rapid pace, the difficulties in the way of maintaining which, all pianists must have duly appreciated. This result, combined with smoothness of execution, and clearness of phrasing, is perhaps all that the most exacting critic ought to expect, and it is idle to contend that there lies even passionate feeling waiting for expression beneath the formal and scholastic exterior.

Mendelssohn's Variations in D, for Piano and 'cello, Op. 17, came next in order, and were evidently much enjoyed by the (for a Saturday Popular) extremely small audience, and Schumann's Pianoforte Trio in G minor closed the scheme. Schumann's Pianoforte Trios are by no means among the most easily grasped of his works, and we cannot say that the performance, especially as regards the first movement, was altogether masterly.

Mr. Santley, accompanied with skill by Mr. Sidney Naylor, was the vocalist. His rendering of Brahms's exquisite "Wie bist du, mein Königin" was something to dwell in the memory, especially the lingering tenderness of the reiterated "wonnevoll!" "Unüberwindlich," also by Brahms, which followed, sounded b'oisterous and even coarse, by comparison. His second selection was Scarlatti's noble melody, "O cessate di piagarmi" and a very clever Italian song by Gounod, "Ho messo nuovo corde"—clever because the Italian spirit has been caught with rare felicity. Mr. Santley, too, appeared to be transformed into a Neapolitan as he sang. The song was encored.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

By far the most enjoyable feature of the last Monday's concert was Mozart's Trio in E flat for pianoforte clarionet, and viola, a work, the first two movements of which exemplify to the full, some of the master's most characteristic qualities. Artless grace and almost childlike simplicity are in the first movement combined with that rare inventiveness which knows how to extract the utmost variety of effect from the slenderest materials. A turn, and an arpeggio on the common chord! One cannot help reflecting on the dreary result which most modern composers would produce with such a theme for sole capital. The Minuet is a worthy companion to that in the Symphony in E flat, made familiar to amateurs by Schulhoff, but its Trio is infinitely more significant than the orchestral one. Miss Fanny Davies, who is always particularly successful in Mozart's works, Mr. Lazarus and Mr. Hollander were the interpreters of Mozart's dainty imaginings, to which they did full justice. The lady was heard later in Mendelssohn's "Presto Scherzando," and also accompanied Brahms' Gipsy Songs, given here for the third time, by Mr. and Mrs. Henschel, Miss Little, and Mr. Shakespeare. An encore was, with great persistence, demanded, but without avail. The concert opened with Mendelssohn's Quartet in D, Op. 44, in the performance of which Madame Nerunda, Messrs. Ries, Hollander, and Piatti were worthily associated.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The first of two afternoon Symphony Concerts took place on Wednesday at St. James's Hall. The scheme included Wagner's "A Faust" overture,and that to "Tannhaüser,"Grieg's charming music to Peer Gynt, Beethoven's C minor Symphony, and two songs, sung with her usual refinement and sympathy, by Mrs. Henschel. There was much to admire in Mr. Henschel's reading of the Symphony; dynamic gradations were well attended to, and the general spirit of the various movements was well conveyed. But a little more attention should have been given to the details of the score, many of which were treated in the slovenly fashion common to even the best orchestral players when they are not carefully watched. Vigour and precision are all very well, but they are not everything. Grieg's delicate scoring was treated in the most affectionate way, however; nothing was wanting. Mrs. Henschel's songs were Handel's "Lusinghe più care," and Mr. Henschel's beautiful setting of Victor Hugo's "Adieux de l'hôtesse arabe."

KENSINGTON ORCHESTRAL AND CHORAL SOCIETY.

An excellent performance of Cowen's "Rose Maiden" was given at the Town Hall on Friday last. Considering that the orchestra consists, with only three or four exceptions, entirely of amateurs, Mr. Buels deserves much credit for the admirable ensemble. The chorus, if not quite balanced, sang well, "'Tis thy wedding morning," being encored. Miss Evelyn Carlton (Soprano), and Mr. J. Bartlett (Tenor), gave their solos very effectively, and Mr. Bradford (Baritone) and Miss Annie Dwelley (Contralto) gave the greatest satisfaction, the rendering by the lady of "Ask of yon ruined Castles" being perhaps the best thing in a generally good performance. The second part consisted of selections by the orchestra and part songs by the choir and a wellplayed pianoforte solo by Madame Strebelle.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Advertisements of Concerts, &c., will be received up to 4 p.m. on Thursdays, if addressed to the Manager, 138a, Strand, W.C. "The Musical World" is the recognised medium for advertising London, Suburban, and Provincial Concerts, and has no other address whatever for the reception of communications.

TO COMPOSERS,— RIDGEWAY and CO., Music Publishers 10, Argyll Street, W. undertake the REVISING. PRINTING. and PUBLISHING of Musical Works upon exceptionally low terms. The finest work in the trade. Estimates upon receipt of MSS. IMPORTANT.—Composers' Works included in Catalogue and introduced without extra charge.

ROECKEL'S PATENT PAMPHONIA.

Model Music Staff with Movable Lines, for teaching rapidly the three clefs and general notation.

Particulars and Testimonials post free.

Messrs. CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.

AND ALL MUSICSELLERS.

Publishers' Announcements.

NEW PART SONGS FOR S.A.T.B.
By W. W. PEARSON.

'Tis Morn! (Edwin Oxenford)	3d.
The Oyster Dredgers	2d.
Welcome, young Spring	2d.
Off to Sea (Edward Oxenford)	4d.
HUMOROUS PART SONGS.
Three Doughtie Men (30th thousand)	3d.
Three Children Sliding (6th thousand)	3d.
A Ryghte Merrie Geste	4d.
The Snow-white Doe (just published)	4d.
Ben Bowlegs (Edward Oxenford)	3d.
The Carrion Crow	3d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO., 1, Berners Street, W.

VIOLIN TUTOR.

PRACTICAL VIOLIN SCHOOL, for Home Students. A Practical Book of Instructions and Exercises in Violin Playing, for the use of Amateurs, Self-learners, Teachers and others. By J. M. FLEMING. 1 vol., demy 4to, cloth gilt, price 7s. 6d.; also in monthly parts, 7d. "Can be heartily recommended to students who wish to lay a solid foundation for good and artistic playing."—Musical Standard.

London: L. UPCOTT GILL, 170, Strand, W.C.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of
A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR
THE VOICE,
By T. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.
London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 27, Harley Street, W.

THE VOICE.

A Complete Explanation of the Throat and its Functions in Breathing and in the Production of Voice, will be found in
"ELOCUTION, VOICE, & GESTURE."
By RUPERT GARRY (Editor of "GARRY'S ELOCUTIONIST").
Remedies for the Cure of Hoarseness, Sore Throat, etc.
7TH THOUSAND. POST FREE, 1s. 2½d.
London: Bemrose, 23, Old Bailey, E.C.; and of the Author, at his residence, 49, Torrington Square, W.C.

IN SIX GRADES,
Price Two Shillings each.
Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.
THE MUSICIAN:
A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,
By RIDLEY PRENTICE.
CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWANN SONNENSCHEIN and CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE;
And all Book and Music Sellers.

The Organ World.

SOME SUGGESTED MODIFICATIONS OF DAY'S HARMONY, TO MEET THE VARIOUS OBJECTIONS RAISED AGAINST HIS THEORY.

PAPER READ BY DR. C. W. PEARCE, F.C.O., BEFORE THE COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

(Continued from page 197.)

Accordingly the first step to be taken with Day's book, if is to be placed upon an equal footing with educational treatises on other subjects—is at once to sweep it clean of all reference whatever to the Harmonic Series of nature. I am well aware that to do this, is at first sight equivalent to abolishing the book altogether, but such is not really the case. Day has two sides to his book. He is pre-eminently psychical but he tries to be physical as well. The one object of this paper is to show the untruth and worthlessness of Day's physics, and to prove that when his book is stripped of its pretended and false science, his psychics still remain, not only uninjured by the separation, but immensely improved; and, by this means, fit in every respect for adoption as a trustworthy educational text-book for the use of musical students. We shall then be able to see what it was which really attracted Professor Macfarren and other distinguished musicians who have supported Day, and we may also indulge the hope that when the physical part of Day's book has been completely swept away, other musicians who have long been forced to hold aloof from it by their natural love of truth, may be brought to confess that they have all their lives unconsciously acknowledged the accuracy of the psychical part of the same because this—and this only—has (to use Sir George's words) been "authorised by the practice of the greatest masters and confirmed by practical experience."*

Startling as it may seem to old and tried adherents of Day and Macfarren, there can be no doubt about it, but that the time has come for an entire rejection of purely natural phenomena as a basis for the psychical study of music; indeed, as Mr. Cobb argued, this ought to have been the case long ago. It is perhaps not too much to say, that if Day had only lived some seventeen years or so longer to have witnessed the discoveries made by Helmholtz, and to have read the great German physicist's "Treatise on the Sensations of Tone," he would have considerably modified his own Treatise on Harmony.

To some extent, Day may be said to have improved upon, extended, and developed the older treatise of Rameau; but compared with the results obtained by the penetrative genius of Helmholtz, his physiological basis is poor in the extreme. As Mr. Lecky points out—"Day's definition of chords and scales are merely formal: he tells us how to find the various intervals on the keyboard, but does not attempt to explain how these intervals are obtained. He divides chords into consonant and dissonant, but does not say in what consonance and dissonance consist, as Helmholtz does." Again, Mr. R. H. Bosanquet, M.A., and Mr. Cobb clearly show that Day's great error as a theorist is his utter disregard for the partial tones of all the notes in the chord, save of that note which he calls the root. Even Macfarren saw this weak point, and acknowledges in his Third Royal Institution Lecture that if "every note of every chord might be supposed to furnish its harmonic series, and each of these its harmonics in turn, all sounds would comprise all other sounds, tonality would be at an end, and Babel would reign supreme." True enough! But this is an awkward admission to make after the dogmatic statement which opens the preceding paragraph of the same lecture: "the phenomenon that every musical sound generates others, is the basis of the free style of harmony." If we are told that the harmonics of the root are co-existant with their generator, and these are further spoken of as sounds verily "throbbing in the air," who shall describe the phenomenon—or rather the miracle by which the upper partials of the other notes of the chord shall be silenced? Again, Day cannot really explain the minor third, major third, perfect fourth, perfect fifth, major sixth, or minor sixth, because, strictly speaking, not one of these intervals in its simple (not compound) form is a natural harmonic of any root. He acknowledges this with regard to the minor third and he calls it an "arbitrary not a natural third." Accordingly, in all chords varying one iota in form with that of the harmonic chord of nature, Day is compelled to fall back upon a theory of implied or imaginary roots. In the difficulty with the minor third, Day is really far behind Rameau in his scientific observation, for as Dr. C. Hubert Parry remarks in his article on "Harmony" in Grove's Dictionary, the old French theorist "does not take his minor third as represented by the nineteenth upper partial, which is very remote, but justifies the minor chord on the principle that the minor third as well as the root note generates the fifth (as both C and E♭ would generate G) and that this community between them makes them prescribed by nature." This is, in a measure, precisely what Helmholtz does. Moreover, Day does not attempt to explain why the ear should perceive any peculiar character or function in the root which would distinguish it from all the other notes of the chord; and in deriving a chord like that of the German sixth from two roots, such as the dominant and supertonic of the key, he offers no explanation why the five absentees from his family of nine implied notes are mercifully kept from disturbing the peaceful harmony of their four brethren who are present in the chord.

(To be continued.)

---

* Preface to First Edition of "Six Lectures on Harmony."—Longmans, 1867.

SPECIAL HYMNS.

An eminent clerical authority writes to a church paper:—

I believe that there is a very strong desire amongst many devout Church-people that Special Hymns should be substituted for the Venite at Morning Prayer, upon certain festivals. The festivals to which I refer are Advent, Christmas, Circumcision, with the civil new year, Epiphany, Ash Wednesday, Palm Sunday, Good Friday, Easter Even, Ascension Day, Whit Sunday, Trinity Sunday, and, I must add, Rogation Days.

The Cathedral Psalter (Novello) gives special hymns for nine of these festals, to be used instead of the Venite.

I enquired, by letter, of the late Dean of Westminster, by what authority he did this most excellent thing, and just two months before his death I received the following reply, with his signature attached:—

"I use the hymns as Ordinary, by the same title—neither more nor less—as that of a Bishop in his diocese. Either Bishop or Ordinary can appoint other psalms in place of those usually employed, as provided for in the Act for the Amendment of the Act of Uniformity, cap. 3, and I think there is a more special clause somewhere by which psalms may be substituted for those of the day, on the approval of the Bishop or Ordinary.

"With regard to the Venite, I follow the arrangements in the Prayer-book, by which a hymn composed of verses from the Psalms is substituted for it in the Ascension service."

Now, it must be beyond question that the Dean is correct in hinting that as Ordinary he has no more power than a Bishop who is Ordinary (as our Bishops are).

But if so, then, unless the Dean is altogether at fault in his interpretation of the law, there is nothing to hinder any bishop of a diocese who may think it right so to do, from giving permission within his diocese for the use of hymns, taken from the Holy Scriptures, on certain occasions, to be used instead of the Venite.

There seems to be very much that may be urged in favour of their doing so, and it is just possible that their attention has not been drawn to the interpretation of the law, as given both in writing and in practice by the late Very Reverend Dean of Westminster.

I feel sure that many good Churchmen would greatly rejoice to be enabled to use some other hymn than the Venite, or some few festivals during the year.

REFORM IN CHURCH MUSIC.

A writer in "Church Bells" observes:

I am deeply interested in everything connected with the services of our Church, including congregational singing, and I can fully enter into the mental agony he has undergone (speaking musically) in his experiences of vocal discord, &c., that he has heard in the various churches he has attended. But much as I agree with him in some of his remarks, he has not convinced me that the distraction he or others may have occasionally met with ought to stop congregational singing; neither do I think it would be wise to suggest to the members of a congregation when they were to sing and when to be silent.

I write as one connected with a village church, and feel sure that if this was done, it is probable some of the voices would soon be heard in the neighbouring chapel.

Your correspondent, Mr. Lewis, in his remedy, has given some excellent rules for the guidance of the clergy in the proper working of a choir; let me suggest one more in favour of congregational singing. Let the clergy ask such members of the congregation who can sing, and wish to sing, to join the choir practice; they would then be prepared to take their part in the services on the Sunday, and would, at any rate, render the Doxology more distinctly than his friend, "the Tin-kettle," appears to have done. I hope I am right in thinking that a congregation, as a rule, if they have not a musical ear and voice, have the good taste to be devout listeners.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS EXAMINATIONS.

The following are the conditions of the College examinations, here reprinted as a matter of general interest to organists:—

To obtain the certificate of an Associate, the following tests must be passed:—1. The Candidate will perform an Organ Piece of his own selection.—2. The Candidate will be required to read a Hymn Tune at sight.—3. The same Tune must be transposed at sight into any key or keys specified by the Examiners.—4. A Figured Bass must be harmonised at sight upon the key-board.—5. A given Melody must be harmonised in four parts on paper, and without the aid of an instrument.—6. A Figured Bass must be harmonised on paper, and without the aid of an instrument.—7. Simple counterpoints, in not more than four parts, must be written.—8. The Candidate must be prepared to modulate (on paper) to or from given keys or chords.—9. The correct answers to fugal subjects will be required.—10. The Candidate's general knowledge will be tested by questions on the general structure of the Organ; on the combination and contrasting of the various registers; on the chief causes of Casual Derangements of Mechanism; on Form (or Plan) in Musical Composition; on the Orchestra; on Musical History; on Harmony, Acoustics, and other branches of Musical Knowledge.

To obtain the certificate of a Fellow, the following tests must be passed:—1. The Candidate will perform an Organ Piece of his own selection.—2. The Candidate will be required to play at sight a fragment of Organ Music specially prepared for that purpose.—3. The Candidate will play a Chant (he may choose between an Anglican and a Gregorian), as if accompanying a given Canticle or Psalm.—4. The Candidate will be required to extemporise upon a given Musical Phrase.—5. A given Melody must be harmonised at sight upon the key-board.—6. The Candidate must play from a Vocal Score, written in Bass, Tenor, Alto, and Treble Clefs.—7. A given Melody must be harmonised in four parts on paper, and without the aid of an instrument.—8. An unfigured Bass (or a Ground Bass) must be harmonised on paper, and without the aid of an instrument.—9. Counterpoints of various kinds must be written.—10. The Candidate must score a given passage for Full Orchestra.—11. A Fugal Exposition upon a given subject must be written in four vocal parts.—12. The Candidate's General Musical Knowledge will be tested by questions on the subjects required in the case of Associates; but these questions will be of a more advanced character.

All Candidates for Examination, if not already elected to Membership, are required to become Members of the College. Candidates for Membership are proposed by two members of the College, and elected by the Council at any ordinary meeting. The subscription for Membership is an annual payment of One Guinea, to be paid on election, and renewed at Midsummer each year. Proposal Forms can be obtained from the Secretary.

It is required that Candidates first obtain the certificate of an Associate, before they enter for that of a Fellow.

Those Candidates who fail at the first Examination, may attend at the next Examination ensuing without additional fees.

Those Candidates who, though not succeeding in the whole Examination, may yet have acquitted themselves to the satisfaction of the Examiners at either the Organ Examination or the Paper Work, may, on re-examination, be exempt from that portion of the Syllabus, and in such cases the Candidates entitled to such exemption will receive a Certificate, granting the exemption allowed for the succeeding Examination.

University graduates in Music of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, or Dublin, are exempt from Paper Work. They may also present themselves as Candidates for Fellowship without previously becoming Associates; but in this case they will be required to perform an Organ Piece, to transpose at sight, and to read from a Figured Bass at the key-board, in addition to the ordinary tests.

Ladies and Foreigners are eligible for Examination.

The Candidates are neither required to use given text books, nor are they called upon to exclusively base their work upon any given methods or theories.

All Candidates for Examination must send in their names at least one week before the first day of Examination, the latest date for receiving names for the next Examination will be........................ and the following fees are payable at the same time:—Members' Annual Subscription, One Guinea; Examination Fee, Two Guineas. On obtaining a Diploma, a further fee of Two Guineas is payable.

The Hood, worn by Fellows of the College (brown silk, lined with light blue), price 30/-; the College of Organists' Gown (plain stuff with pointed sleeves), price 35/-; and cap, price 11/- (to be worn on special occasions), can be obtained at the College.

An optional Preliminary Examination on Paper Work (by letter only) has been instituted for the convenience of Members of the College, on payment of a fee of Ten Shillings and Sixpence, for which purpose the papers used at the previous Examination will be forwarded on application. Candidates may also harmonise melody, and render in four parts, figured bass of Paper Work at Organ; both to be worked out on paper in vocal score.

Past Examination Papers can be obtained at the College, as well the Scheme of the Organ upon which the tests are played, 1d.

The next Examination will take place during January 8, 9, 10 for Fellowship, and on January 15, 16 and 17 for Associateship.

JOSEF LABOR.

We have had many distinguished blind organists as Stanley, Mather, etc., and we have now some notable players as Alfred Hollins and Mr. H. Schivier, F.C.O., who labours under the great affliction of blindness with marked success. Now we have a visitor with us, Josef Labor, who is a well-known blind organist and was born in Harrowitz (Bohemia), June 29, 2842. He became blind in his earliest childhood. In 1849 he was received as a pupil in the Austrian Imperial College for blind people (students). In 1857 he became a pupil of the Vienna Conservatorium, where he studied the pianoforte under Pinkhert, and harmony and counterpoint under Simon Sechter. He also heard Professor Hanslick's lectures on the History of Music at the University. In 1863 he gave three concerts in Vienna with great success. In 1864 he went on a concert tour, accompanied by his mother, when he played at Prague, Dresden, Leipzig, and Hanover with very great success. When in Hanover an important event of his life took place. The great protector of arts (music in particular), King George V. of Hanover, appointed him his "Kammervirtuose," and offered him an annuity for life. In 1865 he gave some successful concerts in England, and on February 8, 1866, he played with great success at the Gewandhaus, Leipzig. In 1867 he went to Vienna with the royal family of Hanover. In 1869 and 1870 he gave concerts at St. Petersburg and Moscow. So far Labor as only appeared in public as a pianist. He now studied his favourite instrument, the organ, under Johannes Herbert, for some years, and in 1878 appeared for the first time as an organist in a sacred concert given by the "Männergesangverein" in Vienna. Since then he has constantly been playing the organ publicly in Vienna (Gesellschaftder Musikfreunde), Leipzig, Münich, and other places, where he introduced (or rather revived) compositions for the organ by the old masters, Muffat, Buxtehude, &c. Of Labor compositions only a Fantasia, a Scherzo in canon form, and a Pianoforte Quintet have been published. The Imperial "Hofkapelle" (Vienna) has repeatedly performed compositions by him. Mr. Labor is now London, and projects some concerts under the patronage of Princess Frederica of Hanover, and other distinguished persons.

RECITAL NEWS.

CHRIST CHURCH, LUTON.—An Organ Recital was given by Mr. H. S. Webster, A.C.O, (Organist of the Parish Church, Kingswalden), on Wednesday, November 28. Vocalist, Mr. George Lund. Programme: Toccata and Fugue in D minor," Bach; "Lied ohne Worte, No. 18," Mendelssohn; "Concerto in B flat, No. 2," Handel; Air, "His Salvation is Nigh," S. Bennett; "Offertoire in C," L. Wely; "Blumenstuck," Volkmann; "Hero's March," Mendelshon; Solo, "Come unto Me," Coenen; "Offertoire," Batiste; "Hallelujah," Beethoven.

ST. ANDREW'S, UNDERSHAFT.—What is called a missionary cantata, "St. Andrew" for choir and congregation, was performed for the first time at the Church of St. Andrew Undershaft, E.C., on St. Andrew's Day. The composer (Mr. W. M. Wait) presided at the organ, and Mrs. Wallis at the pianoforte, and the efficient choir sang the cantata in a manner which gave entire satisfaction to the large congregation present, and who joined in singing the hymns therein. The Rev. W. Frazer Nash, who selected the words, gave an explanatory address.

ST. MARY'S CHURCH, NORTH PETHERTON.—An Organ Recital by Mr. T. J. Dudeney, L.R.A.M., F.C.O., on Tuesday, November 27. Programme: Sonata in F. minor, Op. 65, F. Mendelssohn; Andante in G, G. A. Macfarren; Allegretto in B flat, Earnest Slater; Andante Con Variazioni E Fuga, T. J. Dudeney; Aria in F, J. S. Bach; Andante in D, E. Silas; Hallelujah Chorus from "Messiah," G. F. Handel.

CHRIST'S CHAPEL, DULWICH COLLEGE.—An interesting carol service on Christmas Eve, and a service with the assistance of the Dulwich stringed orchestra on the afternoon of the first Sunday in the New Year are among the arrangements of the season of Christmas.

NEWBURY.—A new organ was opened on December 14 at Greenham Church, by F. de G. English, Esq., B.A., F.C.O. (organist of Godalming parish church), with the following programme:—"Fixed in his everlasting seat," Handel; Andante (Violin Concerto), Mendelssohn; Fugue, St. Ann, Bach; Air with Variations in B flat, Haydn; Carillons de Dunkerque, Carter; Grand Solemn March, Smart.

PARK HALL, CARDIFF.—Organ recitals have been given by Mr. E. H. Lemare, F.C.O. Programme, November 23:—Part 1. Marche Cortege, "Irene," Gounod; Serenata, Braga; Fugue in D major, Bach; Allegretto in F minor and Toccata in F (5th Symphony), Widor. Part 2. Prelude "Lohengrin" Wagner; Fantaisie de Concert, "O Sanctissima Lux; Andante avec Variations, Lemmens; Selection, "Faust," Gounod. Programme, Dec 7th. Part 1. Kaiser Marsch, R. Wagner; Graceful Dance, (From the incidental music to Shakespeares's Henry VIII.), Sullivan; Toccata et Fuga in D minor, Bach; Morceau de Concert (Prelude,) Theme, Variations et Final), Guilmant. Part 2. Storm Fantasia Lemmens; Gavotte in A flat, E. H. Lemare; Overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai.

HOLY TRINITY CHURCH, SWANSEA.—An organ recital was given on December 6, by Mr. C. Milton Bill, F.C.O. Programme: Andante and Allegro (Cuckoo and Nightingale Concerto), Handel; Lamentation (by desire), Guilmant; descriptive sketch, "Vesper Bells," Walter Spinney; descriptive piece, "The Harvest Home," Walter Spinney; Allegretto in B flat, Scotson; Offertoire in G, Wely.

GODALMING PARISH CHURCH.—An organ and violin recital was given on December 21, by Mr. F. de G. English, B.A., Oxon., F.C.O., and Mr. E. O. Haenni. Programme: Grand Chœur in D. Guilmant; Duetto (Songs withou Words), Mendelssohn; Concerto in G. minor (Allegra—Variations on a ground-bass—Fugue), Handel; Violin Solo, "Auf Flügeln des Gesanges," Mendelssohn; Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Andante in C, No. 3, Smart; Violin Sonata in A (Andante—Allegretto), Handel; Barcarolle (4th Concerto), Sterndale Bennett; Nazareth, Gounod.

ST. MARY'S, BRYANSTON SQUARE.—This programme was performed at Trinity Church, Marylebone, on the 15th ult., and repeated by request at St. Marys, as under, on Saturday December 12. Sonata III. (Op. 65.), Mendelssohn; Communion in F, Grison; Aria "He counteth all your sorrows," Mendelssohn; Storm, Fantasia, Lemmens; Andante in A flat, W. S. Hoyte; Grand Fugue in A minor, Bach; Aria, "Be thou faithful unto death," Mendelssohn; Andante in G, R. Steggall; Offertoire in F minor, Batiste. Organist, Mr. Reginald Steggall, A.C.O. (Balfe Scholar Royal Academy of Music). Recitals on December 19th, and after the Sunday Evening Services during Advent. "Last Judgment," on December 13th and 20th. Organist on December 19, Mr. E. Barnes (Organist of Holy Trinity, Paddington).

HOLY TRINITY CHURCH, BOW ROAD.—The vicar and churchwardens of Holy Trinity, Mile End, have arranged for Sunday afternoon recitals. The first was given on Advent Sunday at a convenient hour, 3 to 4 o'clock. On the occasion in question, the church was fairly well filled with an attentive congregation. After a short prayer by the vicar, the following programme was gone through, viz.:—"Song of Peace," Roeckel; "Jerusalem the Golden" with Variations, Spark; Allegretto from the "Hymn of Praise," Mendelssohn; Fugue in G minor, and Finale Intermezzo, "Macbeth," Bach; The organ music was interspersed with vocal selections, including "Lord God of Abraham," from "Elijah"; Sacred Song, "Jerusalem," by Parker; and a very effective "Eia Mater," from a Stabat Mater, composed by Dr. W. H. Hunt. The organ music was rendered in an able and musicianly manner by the organist of the church, Mr. J. C. Bishop whose playing of the G minor Fugue of Bach was specially noteworthy.

LIVERPOOL.—Recitals were given by Mr. W. T. Best, at St. George's Hall, on November 29 and December 1:—Prelude on the Eighth Gregorian Tone, Rheinberger; Andante (Six Concert Pieces, No. 5) Best; Prelude and Fugue in A major, Bach; Seranade, "Mira la bianca luna," Rossini; Pensée Musicale, in C sharp minor, Op. 94, Schubert; Overture, "Raymond," Thomas; Overture, "La Part du Diable," Auber; Air, "Zefferetti lusinghieri" (Idomeneo), Mozart; Organ Sonata, No. 2, D minor, Best; Cantilène Pastorale, Grison; Finale in E major, from the Orchestral Suite, Op. 52, Schumann.

LEEDS.—Recently Spohr's Oratorio, "The Last Judgment," as a Church service during Advent, was sung at the Leeds Parish Church. The force of this impressive work must have been strongly brought home to the large congregation which filled the Parish Church. The soloists were Miss Cockroft (soprano), Master Ferrand (contralto), Mr. Blagbro (tenor), and Mr. Browning (bass), Mr. Armstrong (alto), also lending assistance in the concerted pieces. Dr. Creser was at the organ. After the concluding chorus the congregation joined in the singing of the Advent hymn, "Great God what do I see and hear."

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.—On the first Tuesday in Advent week Spohr's "Last Judgment" was, as usual, given as a portion of a special evening service, One important alteration only was made in the ordinary course of these celebrations. Hitherto it has been the custom at St. Paul's to perform the accompaniments upon the organ, and Sir John Stainer's masterly rendering has been a prominent feature of the rendering. Upon the present occasion, however, an orchestra was employed. For the rest, the vocal parts, solos as well as choruses, were again undertaken exclusively by the Cathedral choir. The oratorio was prefaced and followed by a special form of evening prayer, and was listened to with becoming reverence by an enormously large congregation.

EAST PARISH CHURCH, ABERDEEN.—A Recital was given by Dr. Pearce, Organist of Glasgow Cathedral, assisted by the choir, on Dec. 13. Programme: Fantasia F minor, Mozart; "Andante with variations from the Septet,', Beethoven; Prelude and Fugue (G major), J. S. Bach; Andante with variations—Symphony in D, Haydn;

Marche à la Romain, J. N. Hummel; Grand Dramatic Fantasia, "A Concert on a Lake, interrupted by a Thunderstorm," Chevalier Sigismund Neukomn; Berceuse, Guilmant; Marche Militaire, Gounod. The organ built by Messrs. Wadsworth, Brothers, of Manchester, has two manuals and pedal and 27 stops.

ST. MARY'S, BRYANSTON SQUARE.—An organ recital in aid of the Organ and Choir Fund was given on December 5, 1888. Programme:—Sonata I., Mendelssohn; Fugue in G minor, Book III., Bach; Le dernier sommeil de la Vierge, Massenet, and Cantiline Nuptiale, Dubois; Toccata in G, Dubois; Canzone, Guilmant; Grand Chœur in D, Deshays. Organist, Mr. C. E. Jolley, Mus. Bac. Oxon, F.C.O.

ECCLESHALL.—An organ recital was recently given in the Parish Church by Mr. John E. Jeffries, organist of Walsall Parish Church, who played the following organ solos:—Introduction and Allegro, Symphony in D, Haydn; Adagio and Finale, Sonata in E minor, Mendelssohn; Allegro Cantabile, Fifth Organ Symphony, Widor; Festal March in C, Hatton. Mr. D. Harrison, Vicar Choral of Lichfield Cathedral, sang three sacred arias by Handel, Beethoven, and Sterndale Bennett. The Eccleshall Choral Society gave two choruses from Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus."

CHRIST CHURCH, HENDON.—An organ recital was given by Mr. H. A. Wheeldon, F,C.O., on Sunday, November 25, when he played the following programme:—Marche Triomphale, Deshayes; Pastorale, Wely; Theme Varied, Rheinberger; Adagio, Palicot; Grand Chœur, Guilmant.

WANDSWORTH, S.W.—Programme of Recital at Parish Church, by Mr. H. W. Weston, F.C.O., on Advent Sunday. Marche du Sacre, Meyerbeer; Andante and Variations, (Holsworthy Church Bells), Wesley; Organ Concerto in F. (No. 5, Set 1), Handel; Marche Religieuse on a theme by Handel, Guilmant.

LIVERPOOL.—Mr. Burstall, F.C.O., the organist of the Pro Cathedral at Liverpool, notes a contemporary, with scanty means has effected wonders in the way he has trained the choir. The services are as well rendered as in most Cathedrals of the old foundation, and better attended on the whole, while the Rev. Colin Bell, the succentor, has an excellent voice. On St. Luke's Night, and again Thursday night, Gaul's sacred cantata, The Holy City, and a new Te Deum by Mr. Burstall, a work of considerable originality and power, were admirably rendered by a choir of nearly one hundred voices. A correspondent of the Liverpool Mercury very properly draws attention to the fact that not a single honorary canon was present except the Rector, from whose purse came the greater part of the funds for maintaining the Cathedral service, a fact of which in a recent sermon Canon Eyre, himself no mean musician, spoke out strongly.

HOLY TRINITY CHAPEL, NEW YORK.—The sixteenth annual meeting of the choirs of Trinity Parish, held in Trinity Chapel, West Twenty-fifth Street, was held on November 22. When Dr. Gilbert, F.C.O., began the organ prelude—an original andante—the crowd about the doors and in the aisles was so dense that it was necessary to clear a passage. Then came out 160 surpliced men and boys, representing Old Trinity, Trinity Chapel, St. Paul's, St. John's, and St. Chrysostom's, in about equal numbers, and followed by the rector, Dr. Dix, and the clergy of the parish.

They made a striking picture as they moved slowly around the church and up the aisle to their seats in the chancel. The Rev. William B. Frisby beautifully intoned the brief prayers and responses that preceded the anthems. The cxlvii. psalm was chanted to a vigorous double chant in F, by the Rev. C. Hylton Stewart, Precentor of Chester, and the Magnificat in E, by Dr. J. V. Roberts, of Magdalen College, Oxford—a very effective setting—was well sung. The music selected gave the listeners a good idea of Anglican church music from Robert Fairfax's sturdy work, "Save, Lord, and hear us," which was written four years before Columbus discovered America, down to Macfarren's vigorous yet graceful "A day in Thy courts," and a scholarly work composed for the occasion by Dr. Gilbert. Mr. A. H. Messiter of Trinity Church conducted the combined choirs, and the general musical effect was very gratifying. The almost military discipline that prevails among some of the choirs has considerable influence on their musical training. Perhaps the most enjoyable work of the evening was John Battishill's deservedly famous anthem, composed in 1778, "Call to Remembrance," in which St. Paul's mixed choir sang the solo parts very satisfactorily. The rest of the pieces performed were John Redford's (1540) "Rejoice in the Lord Alway," Robert Creyton's (1860), "Praise the Lord," Jeremiah Clarke's "Praise the Lord." S. S. Wesley's (1849) "Thou wilt keep Him," and Sir Robert P. Stewart's (1860) "If ye love Me." The postlude was one of Handel's fugues, played by the organist, Dr. Gilbert. A nicely printed book of the festival stated that "At the previous festivals of the Trinity Parish Choirs, examples were given of the various schools of ecclesiastical compositions, namely, Italian, German, French, and some native compositions. On the present occasion works are presented by Anglican writers, embracing a period of four hundred years. Selections might have been made from authors before this period, such as John Dygon, of Canterbury, A.C. 1430; John of Dunstable, 1450; William Cornishe, 1465, and others, but our illustrations will, perhaps, be sufficient to show that Church music received considerable attention much earlier than is generally supposed."

NOTES.

"Church Bells" prints an ancient Flemish dialogue carol with English translation and musical arrangement by Mr. A. H. Brown, so well-known in connection with revivals of plain song and other ecclesiastical music.

The "Musical Standard" is about to issue a series of engravings of leading organs, with interesting information concerning both instruments and players.

Among the rare books announced on sale by Messrs. Young and Sons, of 12, South Castle Street, Liverpool, are the accounts of the Handel Commemoration performances at Westminster Abbey, in 1784 and 1834, and at the Pantheon in the former year, with seldom attainable particulars.

The Gloucester Cathedral organ, now being enlarged, etc., will not be ready as soon as expected, but will probably be in use early in January, when the popular musical services are to be resumed.

At the recent annual meeting of the choir of the Chelsea Congregational Church, Mrs. A. J. Layton, F.C.O. was presented by the members with a carved music stand, and a silver-mounted bâton, as a tribute of respect and esteem on the completion of her twentieth year as organist.

Those anxious to know who really hold reliable diplomas should procure Mr. John Warriner's "List of qualified Musicians," recently published by Novello and Co. It is to be hoped such encouragement will be given to the author as will justify a yearly issue of this useful little work.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' CALENDAR.

On Tuesday next, Christmas Day, the Library will be closed and will not be re-opened until January 22.

January 8—F.C.O., Examination (Paper work). Jan. 9—F.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). January 10—F.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). January 11—Diploma Distribution. January 15—A.C.O., Examination (Paper work). January 16—A.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). January 17—A.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). January 18—Diploma Distribution. February 5—Dr. F. J. Sawyer, F.C.O., will read a paper on "The History of the Theory of Harmony." March 5—Lecture. April 2—Lecture. April 29—Annual College Dinner. May 7—Lecture. June 4—Lecture. July 16—F.C.O., Examination (Paper work). July 17-18—F.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). July 19—Diploma Distribution. July 23—A.C.O, Examination (Paper work). July 24-25—A.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). July 26—Diploma Distribution. July 30—Annual General Meeting.

Candidates for the forthcoming Examination should send in their names before January 1.

Further arrangements and particulars will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Secretary.

Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury.

(From a Photograph by the London Stereoscopic Company.)

MR. DONNELL BALFE.

Mr. Donnell Balfe, the well-known basso cantante, was born in the city of Pittsburgh, U.S.A., on August 11, 1856, and is consequently in his 33rd year. As a boy he exhibited signs of musical power, and sung in the Church of the Holy Trinity, Pittsburgh, as leading soprano. At the age of 18 he placed himself under the care of M. Tetedoux, the principal maestro of his native town, and subsequently studied under Antonio Barilli, of Philadelphia, and commenced his career as a public singer in the season of 1878. In 1884, Mr. Balfe came to London, making his first appearance at the Crystal Palace, where the spirit and power with which he rendered Schumann's "Two Grenadiers," and Schubert's "Wanderer," produced an immediate and lasting impression. Since then Mr. Balfe has established for himself a high reputation; his remarkable compass, which extends from the lower D flat to the upper B flat, being not the least striking feature of his artistic equipment.

PROVINCIAL.

Birmingham, December, 17.

Dr. Hubert Parry's Festival Oratorio "Judith" was given by the Festival Choral Society on the 13th, with full band, organ and chorus of 450 performers and the following principals; Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Charles Banks, Mr. Henry Pope, Masters Lionel Wynne and Frank Lambert; Organist, Mr. C. W. Perkins, and Conductor, Mr. Stockley, as usual. The attendance was by far the best for some time past, and we sincerely hope that the result will show an influx of "Moïse et les prophètes" into the treasury, as Frederick the Great used to name the "needful." A second hearing of Dr. Parry's work fully endorses our first verdict, and we justly confirm our opinion in stating that "Judith" is an earnest, scholarly and impressive work, which gains at every hearing. The accompaniments were given by our local orchestra with commendable finish, fine attack, and due regard to light and shade. The choruses in the first act lacked fire, ensemble, and purity of intonation, but improved greatly as the work proceeded, and the sopranos, weak at first, came out grandly in the second act and concluding scenes. Miss Anna Williams, who sang the principal soprano-music at its first production, again assumed the title rôle, singing with her accustomed artistic care the difficult part allotted to Judith. Mme. Hilda Wilson's rich and pure contralto voice was heard to great advantage in the touching scene with her children. The beautiful ballad "Long since in Egypt's plenteous Land" was admirably declaimed; equally impressive was her singing in the dialogue between the children, in which she was well assisted by Masters Wynne and Lambert. Our townsman, Mr. Charles Banks, was the recipient of a perfect storm of applause on the conclusion of the great bravura air, "God breaketh the battle," which he gave in true Handelian fashion. His voice possesses that rich timbre for which Sims Reeves was famed, and which has so quickly placed Mr. Banks in the ranks of our foremost tenors. The messenger's music was given by Mr. Henry Pope (a conscientious and able artist) with dignified impressiveness, and perfect intonation. We hardly need dwell upon the judicious conducting of Mr. Stockley, which was a foregone conclusion. Mr. Perkins, the Town Hall organist gave the necessary help on the organ when called upon. The principal closing musical event of the year 1888, will be the "Messiah," which is announced for the 26th inst. The weekly concerts of the Clef Club will terminate for this season to-morrow, when the following items will form the principal feature of an unusually interesting programme :—Schubert's Pianoforte Quintett, Sterndale Bennett's Pianoforte Sextett, and a suite for pianoforte and violin, by Mr. J. D. Davis, a young musician of considerable talent, who studied at the Conservatoire in Brussels and at Frankfort. Birmingham will be well represented at the forthcoming conference of the National Society of Professional Musicians to be held at Cambridge during the first week in January. The following local members will probably be present: Dr. Heap, Mr. Gaul, Dr. Wareing, Mr. T. Troman, Mus. Bac., Mr. Charles Linn, Mr. W. Pearce, and Mr. and Madame Oscar Pollack.

EDINBURGH, December 18.

Two of Mr. Paterson's series of six orchestral and choral concerts have taken place during the week just ended, but neither of them reached that standpoint of excellence which is naturally looked for when, as the advertisements have it, a "famous orchestra" is brought all the way from London for the entertainment of Scottish amateurs. Want of sufficient rehearsal was, as a matter of fact, distinctly apparent in almost every work of importance essayed.

At the opening concert, on Monday the 11th inst., the chief orchestral number was Beethoven's Fourth Symphony in B flat. But the main interest of the performance seemed to centre in the appearance of Miss Macintyre for the first time in an Edinburgh concert-room, and of which this concert was the occasion. All her songs were well and acceptably rendered, and she met with an unmistakeably hearty and appreciative reception from an unusually crowded room.

M. Marsick, the solo violinist of the evening, and another new comer, also received an agreeably warm welcome. His playing of Wieniawski's Concerto in D, Op. 22, No. 2, proved to be one of the most enjoyable things of the evening.

In connection with Mr. Paterson's second concert, on Monday last, a somewhat perplexing episode occurred. At the hour when the concert should have commenced the only representative of the band in the orchestra was the librarian; Mr. Manns and the rest of the performers being, as was announced, still on their way from Glasgow, owing to a breakdown on the railway a few miles from Edinburgh. Fortunately, Madame Nordica, who was the vocalist engaged, had arrived, and most obligingly consented to keep the audience amused till Mr. Manns and his orchestra should be able to reach the hall. During the hour or more that elapsed before this was accomplished, Madame Nordica sang with great effect several of her best known and most highly appreciated songs, and received, as she deserved, an enthusiastic expression of approval of the efforts she had so opportunely and cheerfully made to entertain her hearers. The non-arrival of the band at the proper time necessitated the curtailment of the programme on its orchestral side, the chief feature of which was Raff's "Lenore" Symphony which, on the whole, received a very creditable rendering.

The production of Mr. Hamish MacCunn's new cantata, "Bonny Kilmeny," by Mr. Kirkhope's Choir, has been by far the most interesting musical event of the week. The performance was in aid of a local charitable object, and the resources of a full orchestra were not available, the voices being supported by a band of strings, a pianoforte, and a harmonium. No trustworthy or sufficient judgment as to the real merits of the work could therefore be formed on the occasion in question. It will, however, make a second appearance a month hence with full orchestral accompaniment, and any detailed account of its structure and qualities may better be deferred until then, when an opportunity of hearing the work in its complete form will be afforded. For the present, it will suffice to say that the book is based upon the lovely fairy tale from the "Queen's Wake," by James Hogg, the Ettrick shepherd; and that the music, though light and pre-eminently melodious, is not wanting in many happily-conceived plays of fancy, nor in some other more important indication of true artistic worth. The cantata is laid out for three solo voices (soprano, tenor, and baritone), and for chorus.

BANGOR, Dec. 18.

An excellent rendering of the "Messiah" was given on the 12th inst. in the Penrhyn Hall, by the Bangor Choral Union under the direction of Dr. Roland Rogers (the cathedral organist).

The soloists were Miss Marianne Fenna, Madame Sara Cragg, and Messrs. W. Davies, and R. Grice (of St. Paul's Cathedral). Mr. Theodore Lawson was the leader of the orchestra.

Principals and orchestra did their work well, and the choir, numbering 126 voices, sang magnificently, giving abundant evidence of Dr. Roger's skill as a choir-master, and of the esprit de corps which he always manages to infuse into the forces at his command.

MANCHESTER, December 18.

Quite recently Mr. Augustus Harris's Italian Opera Company has concluded a very successful visit to the Theatre Royal here. The performances of this company have already received adequate notice in these columns, so that it is unnecessary to enter into details regarding them. We may say, however, that such of them as we saw gave us a general impression that many of the members either do not sufficiently appreciate the difference between singing and shouting, or else deliberately commit a serious artistic error, in the hope, unfortunately realised, of securing the applause of the profanum vulgus. Signor Ravelli in particular disappointed us. Not that he sinned more than the others in this respect, but because he appears to us to have failed conspicuously in developing the very considerable possibilities of his voice. Undoubtedly there are members of the company to whom such remarks are in no way applicable. One of these is Miss Ella Russell, a lady whose singing it is always delightful to listen to, and whose acting is at least quite adequate for the queenly Marguerite de Valois in the "Huguenots." Another admirable artist—perhaps, indeed, the most powerful supporter of the company—is Miss Macintyre. Whatever the future may have in store for this young lady, it is certain that she commences her career with talents of a very unusual order. Not only has she a voice of beautiful and sympathetic quality, a little weak in the lower register possibly, though this is not always perceptible, but, in addition she possesses an amount of dramatic talent which can only be called remarkable. In "Faust," for instance, her conception of Marguerite is both true and refined. With her it is no mere case of love at first sight. From the moment when the beautiful vision, looking up from the spinning-wheel to gaze sadly on Faust, decides him to turn from the thorny path to the flowery way—from that moment we feel that over Marguerite too a subtle spell has been cast by Mephistopheles, and that she is no longer free to choose between right and wrong, but is dominated by a will as powerful as it is evil. Hence when, during the Kermesse, Faust first meets her in the flesh, we know that his victory is already half won. This conception, communicated to the audience not obstrusively, but at the same time, by a touch of genius, unmistakably, enlists our sympathy with Marguerite to an extent which could never be reached by contemplating merely the dazzled love of a country maiden for a handsome and brilliant stranger. As Miss Macintyre's talents become gradually matured we believe that she will see fit to moderate some few exaggerations both in her singing and acting, which we regard at present as evidence of youthful enthusiasm for her art slightly overshooting the mark, rather than actual blemishes; and we shall be surprised if her career is not a brilliant one.

The Gentlemen's Concert (December 10) gave us an opportunity of listening once more, and it is always a pleasure to do so, to that admirable and conscientious pianist, Miss Fanny Davies. She was wise in selecting a concerto by Mendelssohn (D minor) as her tour de force, for her characteristic excellences find their most complete expression when she is interpreting this composer—not even excepting her favourite Schumann. There is a delicacy and a brightness about her playing which places her entirely en rapport with the refined optimism of Mendelssohn; and when, as so often happens, he quits the earth and wanders into fairyland there are few players who can follow him so appreciatively as Miss Davies. In addition, her technique is so admirable as not to impede in any way the realisation of her conception, and she brings to bear upon all that she attempts an earnestness which of itself guarantees success. It is hardly necessary to add that her rendering of the concerto was, in our opinion, almost faultless. Her minor solos were also excellent, with the exception of a nocturne by Chopin (Op. 62, No. 1); the poetry of this work she fell far short of expressing fully and we have heard Miss Davies herself play it much better. The vocalist, Miss Alice Lamb, has so far only partially justified the expectations which her debut last year created. Her voice is as fine a contralto as ever (and it is a fine one) also she has evidently striven with considerable success to overcome one or two defects in it which were noticeable on her last appearance. But she has yet to something to learn as regards vocalisation, and perhaps more as regards artistic expression, Her best effort was Beethoven's "In questa tomba," which was certainly very well given. We hope that Miss Lamb will not rest content until she has reached the heights which are possible to her. Amongst the orchestral selections were some portions of the "Meistersinger," and Schumann's "Spring Symphony,' a work so full of happiness and hopefulness that to enjoy it as it was meant to be enjoyed, one must shut out of view the gloomy winter of the composer's life

After an absence of two years Herr Ondriczek appeared at Sir Charles Hallé's eighth concert which took place on December 13. The compositions which he gave were not happily chosen. and especially we cannot entirely forgive him for introducing Paganini's Concerto in D—a mere string of huge technical difficulties, without form or void, which should never be allowed to emerge from the practice-room. There is no doubt that Herr Ondriczek has a very elaborate technique at command, and he seems latterly to have been especially devoting himself to that form of executive display popularly known as "gymnastics." We very much question whether he has spent his time wisely; his tone, we feel sure, is not so good as when we last heard him—there is a harsh grating about it which ought not to be perceptible in the playing of so eminent a virtuoso. Even in Raff's Cavatina, which he gave as an encore, this was painfully pronounced. We hope that Herr Ondriczek will have returned to his old ways when next we hear him. Mr. Henschel was the vocalist, and sang admirably. He was heard at his best in Sachs's monologue from the "Meistersinger," which was magnificently given, with fine dramatic force. The orchestral selections included Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony, Grieg's melody for strings ("Spring"), and two movements from Raff's Italian Suite.

HUDDERSFIELD.

The seventh of the Huddersfield Subscription Concerts was given in the Town Hall, on Wednesday evening, December 19, for which Sir Charles Hallé and his full band had been engaged. There was a very large audience and the excellent programme arranged proved a rich musical treat. The programme included the "Der Freischutz" overture (Weber); Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony" in A major; "Rhapsodie Hongroise." No. 4, Lizst; "Traume" (a study for orchestra) and "Introduction to the 3rd act of Lohengrin," (Wagner) and the "William Tell" Overture, (Rossini); all these were rendered in a manner almost beyond criticism, and the selection from Wagner's "Lohengrin" was enthusiastically redemanded. One of the most interesting and enjoyable items on the programme was Beethoven's "Concerto in D major," Op. 61, for violin and orchestra. Herr Willy Hess as solo violinist sustained his part with great artistic ability, and was loudly applauded at the close. Miss Gertrude Turner was the vocalist, singing "O bid your faithful Ariel fly;" and also Bishop's well-known song "Should he upbraid," for which latter song she was recalled and responded by giving Dr. Arne's "Where the bee sucks," in capital style. Sir Charles Halle as solo pianist played three charming descriptive pieces by Greig.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

Repeated opportunities of estimating the permanent value of Dr. Parry's "Judith" induce one to hope that the large proportion of powerful and appropriate music which the work undoubtedly contains will have sufficient vitality to keep it alive in spite of the weakness and triviality of the rest. But it is hardly fair to saddle even good music with such a task, for the world has an unpleasant habit of magnifying faults, and accepting merits as a matter of course; and were "Judith" to be laid on the shelf—absit omen!—this would not be the first disaster brought about by such unequal alliances Not only is there in "Judith" much that is unworthy of the composer of "Prometheus Unbound," but a great deal has obviously been written with a desire of conciliating what is known as popular taste—it should be described rather as the want of it—and though the skill of the composer never deserts him even in these moments of backsliding, the position he occupies among contemporary English musicians is so high that we cannot afford to condone in him that which might be forgiven to a smaller man. We have not so many composers of the calibre of Dr. Parry that we can allow one of them, even temporarily, to ignore the duties indicated by the motto "Noblesse oblige." Having permitted ourselves this somewhat lengthy growl, let us thankfully acknowledge the high aim and successful accomplishment which so unmistakably characterise the better parts of the oratorio, and among which stand out with the greatest prominence the wonderfully descriptive choruses "Great Queen," "Wail, wail," and the splendid finale "The Host of Assur." The instrumental passage which begins and ends this last conveys a suggestion of overwhelming might by the simple means only possible to genius. Dr. Mackenzie again directed a fine performance, in which Mr. Barton McGuckin took the place made vacant by the absence of Mr. Lloyd. The audience was not large, owing probably to attractions nearer home—the "Golden Legend" at the Albert Hall to wit—but there was no lack of enthusiasm. Of this, Miss Williams, Madame Patey, and Mr. McGuckin came in for a full share, and the two clever boys, Masters Lionel Wynne and Frank Lambert (members of Mr. Stedman's choir) were not forgotten. Many "cuts" were made, to the great advantage of the work, which was thus concluded in time to prevent the usual premature exodus.

HECKMANN QUARTET.

By far the most interesting item of the second and concluding concert at the Prince's Hall on the 12th inst. was Beethoven's Quartet in A minor, Op. 132. To cope successfully with the technical difficulties of this great work requires skill of no ordinary kind; to give an ideal rendering is only possible to great artists. The posthumous quartets have always been—perhaps always will be—caviare to the many; their significance lies by no means on the surface, and a just appreciation of them is only to be attained by intimate acquaintance with, and patient study, of the score. The Heckman Quartet have, in a manner, specialised these last utterances of the master, and it is needless to say their playing of the A minor Quartet was characterised by that high intelligence and perfect ensemble to which they have accustomed us. But in spite of the religious observance of every tone-gradation, and the almost faultless accuracy of every passage, the performance as a whole sadly lacked inspiration and spontaneity. Beethoven's mighty tone-poem was reproduced with the mechanical fidelity of a photograph rather than clothed in the glowing colours which alone can do justice to so glorious a theme—and nowhere was this more apparent than in the joyous and exultant finale, to which Herr Heckmann and his coadjutors did no manner of justice. The programme included also Mendelssohn's early Quartet in E flat, Beethoven's Sonata in D, Op. 102, No. 2, for 'cello and piano, admirably played by Herr Belmann, and Madame Haas, who was also heard in a Romance of Schumann and a Rhapsody by Brahms, and an isolated movement from a Haydn Quartet—this last an inartistic proceeding, against which it is necessary strongly to protest.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The Eightieth Concert (Orchestral) of the Pupils of the College was given on the evening of the 13th inst. The programme began with Weber's Overture to Euryanthe, which was extremely well played, the precision and brilliancy of attack of the strings being especially noticeable The chief item, however, was Brahms' fourth Symphony, in E minor, the rendering of which was sufficient to show the excellence of the training given at the college, the performance being thoroughly adequate, if not quite reaching the highest standard. But the most excellent playing of the evening was heard in Beethoven's third Piano Concerto, in C minor—the solo part being given by Miss Ethel Sharpe, with great accuracy and appreciation and admirably accompanied by the orchestra. The Rondo in particular was rendered with a spirit, verve and humour, which made the performance in the highest degree enjoyable. An Entr' Acte for Orchestra by Mr. J. Barkworth (ex-student) was a very graceful and dainty little piece, charmingly orchestrated, which won a veritable triumph, and may be warmly commended to the notice Messrs. Manns and Henschel, and others whom it may concern. Mr. W. H Squire played very carefully and well an Allegro for the 'Cello from a Concerto by Molique, and Miss E. Himing in an air from Sullivan's "Light of the World," exhibited a beautiful voice, which with a little further training, ought some day to give her a high place among our contraltos. Altogether, a more enjoyable and more satisfactory concert has scarcely ever been given at the college.

THE CLAPHAM CHORAL SOCIETY.

On Monday last the above Society gave its first concert of the season at Belmont Hall, Clapham, when a most enjoyable programme was gone through, which, but for the inclemency of the weather, would have been assuredly appreciated by a larger audience. An admirable performance was given of Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm. Miss Ethel Barnard, who was the soloist, possesses a charming soprano voice, and in addition, is an earnest and cultured singer, rendering her parts with conscientious fidelity. She was greeted with well-merited applause. The choir, under the able conductorship of Mr. Mackway, did its share of the work with precision and refinement. The objection, which we have occasion at times to point out, viz., the prevailing habit with some singers to shout so as to be heard above the rest, was in this instance absent. The sopranos, nevertheless, would suffer no deterioration of the voice were they to be a little more energetic in the production of good tone. In Part II. a very creditable performance was given of Charles Harford Lloyd's "The Song of Balder." Miss Ethel Barnard scored another success, conjointly with the choir. Mr. Tobias A. Matthay played several pianoforte solos in his usual masterly manner. Mr. Mackway, who possesses a light tenor voice, sang with great taste and refinement Beethoven's "Adelaide." We must not omit to mention a young gentleman, Mr. Gerald Walenn, whose intelligent violin-playing met with due recognition and who was recalled. The finished vocalisation of the choir in Stevens' glee, "The Cloud Capt Towers," and Sir Henry R. Bishop's "Now by day's retiring Lamp," won for its members and conductor a good round of applause. The second concert will take place on Monday, February 11, 1889, when "The Golden Legend" will be performed by special permission of Sir Arthur Sullivan.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

A Students' Orchestral Concert was held at Princes' Hall on Monday last, under the conductorship of Mr. George Mount, when a programme, consisting of items more or less familiar, was carried out with a thoroughness which bore valuable testimony to the work done by this institution. The only novelty was an Air and Variation for orchestra by Mr. F. Swinford, a student, which exhibited decided ability. The vocalists included Miss Bowley, Miss Idle, and Miss Florence Verey.

MISCELLANEOUS CONCERTS.

The Woodside Park Musical Society commenced its fourth season with a performance of Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch" and Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis night," on the 13th, at Woodside Hall, North Finchley. The soloists were Miss Eveleen Carlton, Madame Florence Winn, Mr. John Probert and Mr. Frank Ward, and a small orchestra was ably led by Mr. E. Halfpenny. Mr. C. E. Jolley, Mus. Bac. Oxon., was the organist, Mrs. Williams presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. Alfred J. Dye conducted. There was a large and enthusiastic audience.

At the excellent concert given on the 13th at the Marlborough Rooms, the most interesting feature was the admirable part-singing of Mr. R. Mackway's "Criterion" Glee Choir, assisted by "Ye London Glee-Men." Chwatal's "Lovely night," Milton Welling's "Old Lock," and a chorus from Gounod's "Mock Doctor" were perhaps their most successful efforts. Miss Butler, Miss J. Grant, Messrs Burbidge, A. Reynolds, and R. Mackway contributed vocal solos with more or less success; the Misses Lillie White and Nellie Wildy played pianoforte duets by Sterndale Bennett and Dvorak; and Mr. W. L. Barrett played in his well-known style Paggi's Neapolitan airs for flute. Mr. G. Tomlin accompanied with taste.

Eyre Arms.—A miscellaneous concert was given on the 13th, the excellence of which is sufficiently attested by the names of the artists who took part. Miss Amy Florence, Miss Fanny Joyce, Madame Belle Cole, and Mr. William Nicholl; Miss Theodora Wilson, Mr. Charles Copland, and Herr Ragnar Grevillius were responsible for the songs, which were of merit superior to that usual in such cases, and were largely added to by encores. Pianoforte solos were contributed by Madame Sophie Tueski; Herr Von Czeke played some violin solos; Signor Coviello pleased a section of the audience by his performances (excellent in their way) on the cornet; and Mrs. C. L. Carson gave a recitation. The accompaniments were in the hands of Mr. R. B. Addison and Mr. Trousselle.

Mr. Falcke's Recital.—On Friday last, Mr. Falcke, a pianist new to London amateurs, gave a pianoforte recital at the Steinway Hall, and proved himself to be in many ways an able performer, possessing much poetic feeling. The slow movement of the famous sonata "Appasionata," Schumann's "Traümeswirren," and pieces by Chopin, Rubinstein, and other composers were rendered with much taste and refinement. Mr Falcke was, however, greatly to be pitied. His audience arrived with praiseworthy punctuality, but on reaching shelter from the cold and fog their ears were instantly assaulted, as the powerful "Steinway" was being tuned. This public tuning is surely a thing to be avoided. It is never pleasant, and should certainly not be performed in the presence of an audience which has assembled for a concert.

The Messrs. Hanns' Chamber Concerts.—The third concert of this interesting series was held on Wednesday last at Gresham Hall, Brixton, when a programme was presented which showed no decrease of musical worth either in its scheme or its execution. Haydn's Quartet in F major, Op. 77, No. 82, was admirably played, and Brahm's Sextett in B flat major, Op. 18, received an interpretation not less worthy. The vocalist was Miss Annie Marriott, who sang with much success Lessmann's "Du rothe Rose," and Gounod's "Ave Maria"

Miss Florence May, a young lady who has studied under Brahms, gave, on Thursday last, a Recital of the Pianoforte Concerto in B flat, of that master, the orchestral accompaniment, as arranged by the composer for two pianofortes, being played by Mr. Otto Goldschmidt and Mr. Stephen Kemp. The performance was a remarkably good one, which encourages us to hope that Miss May will before long be heard under circumstances more favourable than were possible on the occasion in question.

A NEW REMEDY FOR IRISH DIFFICULTIES.

A leading Dublin paper, having heard so much said both in the Irish and English press in favour of a wonderful Oil, that they determined to investigate the matter themselves, by personal interviews with people who had used it, in order to learn whether or not one half that was said of its magical power was true, or whether it was one of those gigantic schemes, the magnitude of which fairly takes one's breath away; their representative interviewed a number of people in various parts of Ireland who had been cured by the application of the Oil, and in every instance he found that the published statements were true and correct in every particular, everywhere people were enthusiastic in its praise.

A captain of the Royal Irish Fusiliers, who had suffered long from rheumatism and sprained ankle, said:—"The effect after three applications of St. Jacobs Oil was simply marvellous; the pain at once departed and has never returned."

A prominent hotel proprietor, after suffering years from rheumatic gout, said:—"It would be hard to conceive of anything working a cure so rapidly as St. Jacobs Oil did in my case."

A sergeant of the Royal Irish Constabulary told of a friend who had been a great sufferer for four years with rheumatism in the back, suffering great pain, using two bottles of St. Jacobs Oil, the pain entirely disappeared and has never returned.

A young woman in Castlebar told the reporter of the almost miraculous cure which her mother, aged 79 years, had experienced from using the invaluable St. Jacobs Oil. She had been almost helpless for two years from rheumatism, and was completely cured by using less than one bottle of the Oil.

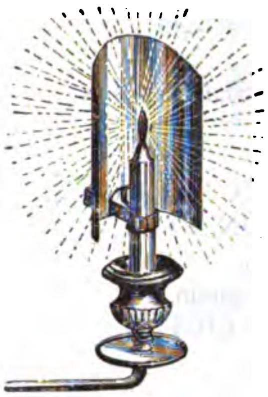
A prominent surgeon of Tipperary related the case of a parish priest, who had for a long time suffered the most intense agony from sciatica, completely cured in three days, by rubbing himself well with St. Jacobs Oil.

A very enthusiastic Irishman in Gort was met with shouting, "Long live St. Jacobs Oil." He had suffered the most intense rheumatic pains for years and was cured by using one bottle of the Oil.

A cooper in Beale. County Kerry, Ireland, related how his knee was twice its natural size, stiff, and painful, and he was unable to stand. Swelling and pain entirely disappeared after using St. Jacobs Oil one week.

An old gentleman in Mallow cured in one week, after having commenced to use St. Jacobs Oil, of severe rheumatism of six years' standing.

Oh returning to Dublin the reporter called on some of the leading chemists, for the purpose of learning their views. Messrs. R Simpson & Co., of 16 Henry Street, the well-known chemist stated that St. Jacobs Oil was the most popular remedy now being sold; that it is no uncommon thing for them to sell 1,200 bottles of the Oil in a single week. That their last order was for 600 dozen, or 7,200 bottles and you can rest assured, said Mr. Simpson, the senior partner, that no medicine would have this enormous sale unless it possessed actual merit.



A Useful Christmas Presen.

KLEIN & CO'S

New Registered Reflectors

TO FIX UPON CANDLES.

SIMPLE AND EFFECTIVE.
EASY AND SECURELY ADJUSTED.
SHIELDS THE EYE FROM LIGHT.
PREVENTS FLICKERING.
THROWS A BRILLIANT & STEADY LIGHT.
SAVES THE SIGHT.
IS COOLING TO THE EYE.

FOR Music Reading, whether at the Piano Organ, Violin, or any other Instrumental Music Desk, this Reflector is invaluable. For the Card-Table, the Reading-Desk, the Pulpit, the Dressing-Table, the Nursery, the Dinner-Table, the Sick Room, etc., it will be found equally suitable.

To be had of all Pianoforte and Music-sellers.

PRICE 2s. 6d. THE PAIR. POST FREE 33 STAMPS.

WHOLESALE: KLEIN & CO., 3, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

EDWARD IVIMEY, Practical Tailor & Outfitter,

RECTORY HOUSE, 2, ST. PETER'S ALLEY, CORNHILL, AND 24, CULLUM STREET, FENCHURCH STREET.
ESTABLISHED OVER 100 YEARS.

GOODS FOR WINTER NOW READY.

ALBERT BLUE MELTON, BEAVER AND VICUNA FOR THE NEW STYLE OF SAC OVERCOATS, now so much worn.

TOURIST AND SHOOTING SUITS, 50s., 55s., 63s.

DRESS SUITS FROM FINE TWILL ELASTIC, SATIN LINED, 3½ Guineas

SCOTCH TWEEDS & ANGOLA WOOL, TROUSERS from 13/-. 2 pair, 5/-.

EDWARD IVIMEY, Tailor & Outfitter.—Excellency with Economy combined.

ADVANCES

ARRANGED on LIFE POLICIES, REVERSIONS, ANNUITIES
SETTLED INCOMES, and every kind of negotiable SECURITY.

BILLS DISCOUNTED.

W. AUSTIN & CO. BANK CHAMBERS,
44, HAMMERSMITH ROAD, KENSINGTON, W.

Vins de Champagne

ARTHUR ROEDERER, Reims.
MAISON FONDEE 1876.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT

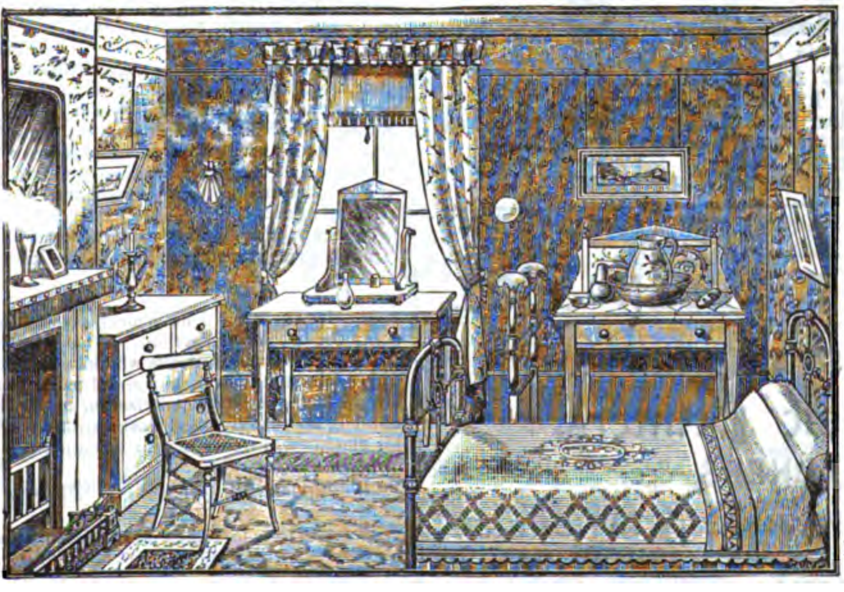
OETZMANN & CO.,

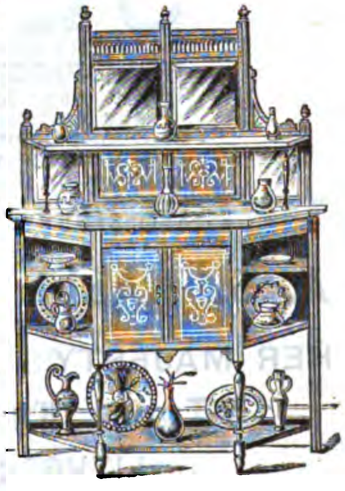
67 69, 71, 73, 75, 77 & 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (Near Tottenham Court Road).
Carpets, Furniture, Bedding, Drapery, Furnishing Ironmongery, China, Glass, &c.
Orders per Post receive prompt and faithful attention.

INEXPENSIVE ART TAPESTRY CURTAINS.

he BURMESE. 7s. 6d. per pair, in all colours.

The IMPERIAL. 38s. 6d. per pair, in all shades.





EBONISED CABINET.

Four bevelled silvered plates at back, 4 feet wide.

75s.

BEDROOM FURNISHED COMPLETE FOR FIVE GUINEAS.

Consisting of Chest of Drawers, Toilet Table, Washstand with marble Top and tiled back, Toilet Glass, Towel Airer, in plain art colours or in imitation of various woods, Strong Iron French Bedstead, Palliasse, Top Mattress, Bolster, Pillow, Toilet Set, Water Bottle and Tumbler, Fender, Fire Irons, Carpet (9 ft. by 6 ft.), & Rug. Five Guineas complete.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, THE BEST PUBLISHING GUIDE EXTANT POST FREE.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice.

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

Without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s, 9d ; also in bottles for abroad.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings

FOR

VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,
ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,

Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

Servants! Servants! Listen to Us.

SAVE your earnings by buying one of our Mob Caps. They are real hand-made lace, wash perfectly, and last for years. Price 7½d. and 1s. 1½d.

ADDRESS:

TAMBOUR WORK MANUFACTORY, 42, FOREST ROAD, DALSTON.

Works—COGGESHALL, ESSEX.

SODEN MINERAL PASTILLES.

TRADE MARK

FOR THROAT IRRITATION COUGHS & COLDS.

"9, HARLEY STREET,

"I regard them as extremely valuable in obstinate catarrhal affections of the Throat."

MORELL MACKENZIE, M.D.

Of all Chemists 1s. 1½d., or 14 stamps from 10 Dyer's Bgs., Holborn

FOR BRONCHITIS ASTHMA & CATARRHAL AFFECTIONS.

SPECIALLY RECOMMENDED BY

Sir Morell Mackenzie

WHOSE TESTIMONIAL IS WITH EACH BOX

SELL'S

ADVERTISING AGENCY, LTD.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING.

If you want to know the exact cost of any particular line of Advertising in Home, Colonial, or Foreign Newspapers or Magazines, you can get every information from "SELL, LONDON."

ESTABLISHED THREE QUARTERS OF A CENTURY.

A. S. MALLETT, ALLEN & CO.,

CONTRACTORS TO

HER MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE,

Type Music Printers,

LITHOGRAPHERS, &c.

PORTRAITS. (Speciality.) POSTERS.	WINDOW BILLS. BOOKS. CATALOGUES	STATIONERY. SHOW CARDS. PLANS, &c., &c.

68 & 70, WARDOUR ST., LONDON, W.

TELEGRAPHIC ADDRESS—"ASMAL, LONDON."

CASSON'S

PATENT

Organ-Building System.

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c., See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The Late Mr. J. STIMPSON
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A
Mr. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—

CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN COMPANY, LIMITED,

DENBIGH.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Stndio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO.

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had but little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me, or to conceive the saving of time one experiencecs in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

To Mr. Ainsworth. BURNHAM-HORNER, F.R. Hist. S.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and Organ student who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music or organ arrangement, with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is, as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours, I. B. THORNTON,

Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly, HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.

To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilitate the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number), each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS,

BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

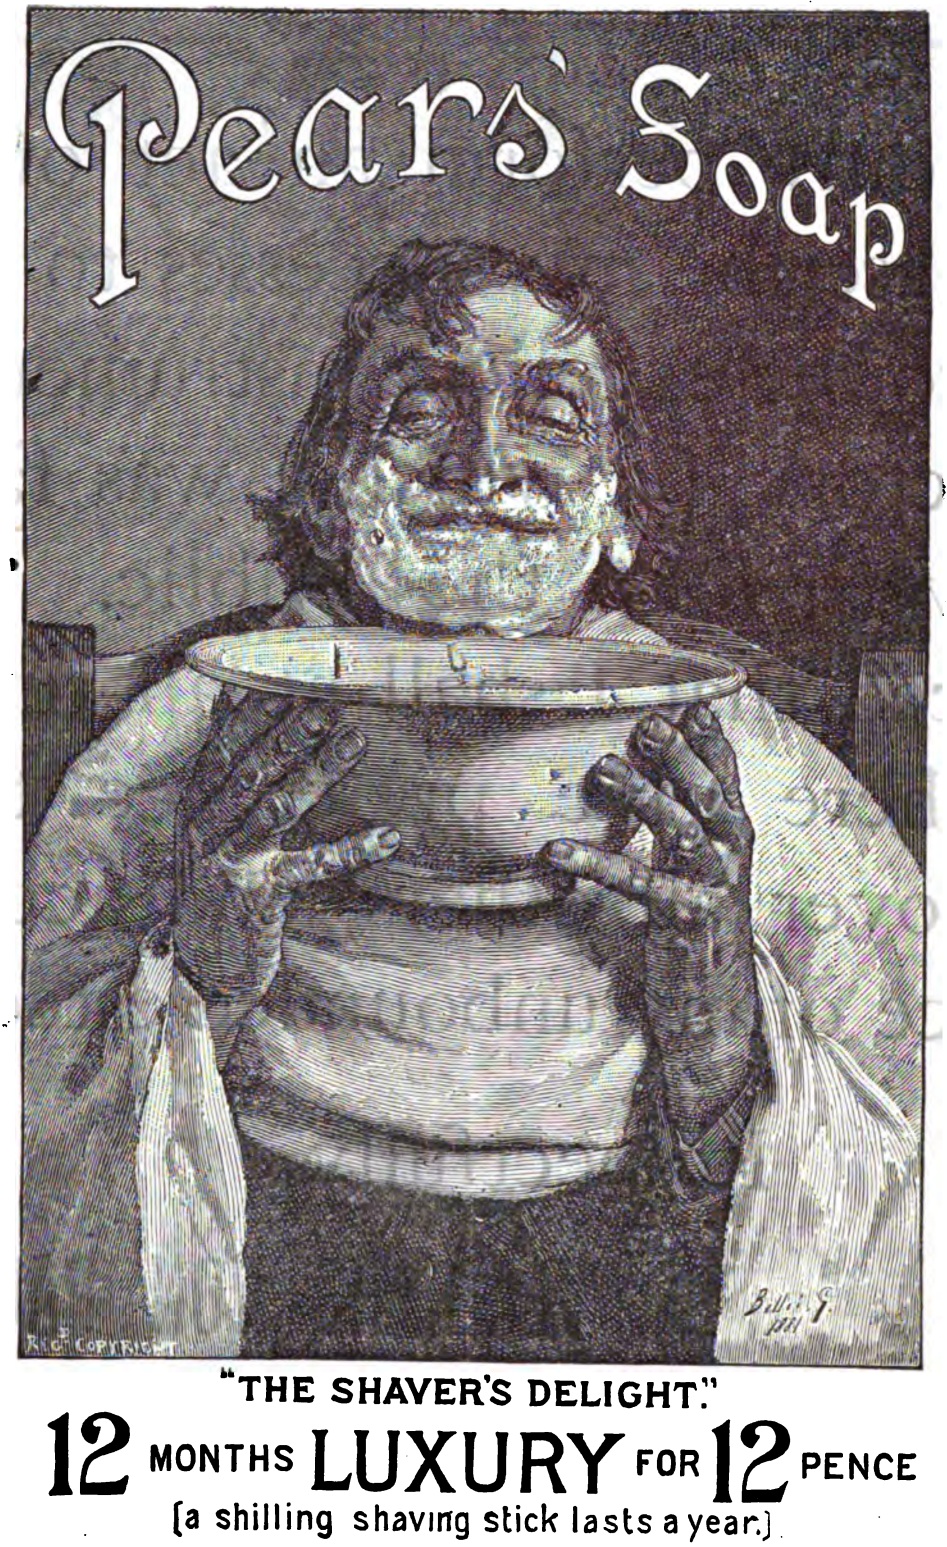
"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

Ascherberg Piano Depot,

211, REGENT STREET, W.



Pears' Soap
REGd COPYRIGHT
"THE SHAVER'S DELIGHT."
12 MONTHS LUXURY FOR 12 PENCE
(a shilling shaving stick lasts a year.)

Printed by A. S. MALLETT, ALLEN & Co., London, and Published by WILLIAM PEARCE, at 138a, Strand, W.C., to which address all communications must be sent

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1836.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 68.—No. 51. SATURDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1888. PRICE {3d. Unstamped. 4d. Post Free.

THE

KARN AMERICAN ORGANS

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,
WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs, equal to, if not surpassing all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

New Illustrated Catalogue and Price Lists Free of the
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:

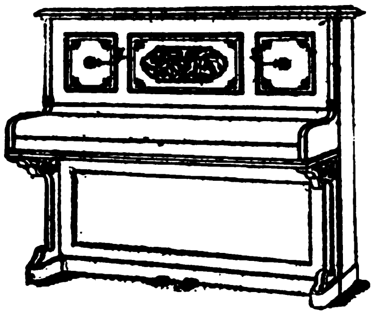
THE SCHREIBER PIANO COMPANY,
3, NEWMAN MANSIONS, NEWMAN ST., LONDON, W.

W. G. THOMAS'S PIANOS!!

ARE the BEST and cheapest in the market. Professors and others will find an advantage by sending for the Free Illustrated lists. Splendid Iron-framed PIANOS, full-compass trichord, in Walnut Wood Cases, at popular prices. Packed FREE. Contracts taken for large quantities. Old Pianos bought for Cash, or taken in exchange.

W. G. THOMAS Pianoforte Manufacturer,
Gospel Oak Grove, Malden Road, Kentish Town, London, N.W

PIANOS. PIANOS
Harmoniums, and American Organs,
ON THE THREE YEARS' SYSTEM



Pianos ..	...	from 10s. 6d.	per month.
Harmoniums ...	"	5s. 0d.	"
American Organs	"	7s. 0d.	"

Any Instrument sent home on receipt of first Instalment.

OUR UPRIGHT IRON GRAND, Trichord, Double Check Repeater Action, Celeste Pedal, 15s. per month.

This is a thoroughly sound and elegant Instrument, warranted in every respect.

Other Classes equally cheap.

Write for Catalogue to

SHENSTONE, SHENSTONE & CO.,
Steam Works: GRANGE ROAD, LEYTON, E.
Show Rooms: 70, Hackney Rd. 37, St. Peter's St., Islington; & 29, Kennington Pk. Rd

Special Notices.

CONCERT MANAGEMENT. Mr. Basil Tree (Successor to Mr. Ambrose Austin), St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, is open to undertake the management of Concerts.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.—Madame ADELINA PATTI.—THIRD and LAST CONCERT BUT ONE, on TUESDAY EVENING, January 8, at Eight o'clock. Vocalists: Madame Adelina Patti, Mrs. Henschel, Madame Patey; Mr. Edward Lloyd and Mr. Henschel. Solo Violin, M. Tivadar Nachéz. Full Orchestra. Conductor, Mr. Ganz. Boxes, £2 2s. to £5 5s.; Tickets, 12s. 6d., 10s. 6d., 7s., 5s., 3s.; Admission, 2s.; at the Royal Albert Hall; of N. Vert; usual agents; and St. James's Hall.—N, Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

SHOREDITCH TOWN HALL, Old Street, E.C.—A GRAND EVENING CONCERT, in aid of the Funds of the Sabbath Meals Society, will take place on Tuesday, January 8, 1889, at 8 o'clock. Artists: Miss Marie Vagnolini, Miss Rose Jacobs, Miss Meredyth Elliott, Mr. Iver McKay, Mr. Robert Long, and Mr. Donnell Balfe. Violin, Miss Maude Woolf. Recitation, Miss Carrie Lawrence (Mrs. Hyam). Accompanist, Mr. Arthur Fagge. Conductor, Mr. Henry Klein. Tickets, 5s., 3s., and 1s., of Mr. Samuel M. Lion, 23, Compton Terrace, Highbury, or 36, Bethnal Green Road, E., and Messrs. Monington and Weston, Pianoforte Manufacturers, 3, Holborn Viaduct, E.C.

UNIVERSITY of MELBOURNE.—Ormond Professorship of Music.—The Council of the University, having founded a Professorship of Music, to be called the Ormond Professorship, CANDIDATES for the APPOINTMENT are requested to forward their applications, with testimonials, to the Agent-General for Victoria, 8, Victoria Chambers, Westminster, not later than the 10th of January, 1839. Full information as to salary, tenure and duties of the Professor, can be obtained on application at the above address.
GRAHAM BERRY, Agent-General for Victoria.

SIGNOR NICOLA COVIELLO, the popular Cornet Soloist (Royal Italian Opera, Promenade Concerts, &c.), now booking Concert Engagements (London, suburbs, and provinces). Immensely successful at Promenade Concerts with "The Lost Chord," Levy's "Whirlwind," &c.—5, Sudbourne Road, Brixton.

TYROLEAN VOCALIST (SPECIALITY).—Mr. JOSEPH HOFFMANN (Own Compositions, Author of "De Schweizer Girl," "De Organ Girl, "De Schneiderline," "Mine Flute," "The Disappointed Lover, etc., etc.)—38, MILDMAY ROAD, N.

Knighthood of the Legion of Honour, 1878. Knight Commander of Villa Virega, 1883. Gold Medals at the principal International Exhibitions.

JOHN BRINSMEAD & SONS'

PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOFORTES ARE FOR SALE, FOR HIRE, and on the THREE YEARS' SYSTEM.
The perfection of Touch, Tone, and Durability.
JOHN BRINSMEAD AND SONS, Pianoforte Manufacturers, 18, 20, 22, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W.

THE "EMPRESS" PIANOS

ARE the best value in the market. Workmanship cannot be surpassed. Touch and tone unequalled. Professors and others are invited to inspect these beautiful instruments. Prices from 20 guineas. Ten years' guarantee with every instrument. Messrs. Chudleigh Bros., 140, Strand, London.

£10 10s. PIANOS.

PIANOFORTES (High-class) for the Million, £10 10s. Full compas, 7 octaves. Warranted. THE LONDON MUSIC PUBLISHING COMPANY (Limited) Originators of the "Ten Guinea" Pianoforte.
54, Great Marlborough Street, W.

Musical World Portraits.

JANUARY 5 - - - - - MISS ANNIE DWELLEY.
JANUARY 12 - - - - MR. NORFOLK MEGONE.

NOTE.—The Portrait of Mr. Donnell Balfe in our issue of Dec. 22 was from a photograph by Mr. Arthur Weston, of 84, Newgate Street, London, E.C., and not from one by the firm then named.

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, or £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the Manager of The Musical World, 138a, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, Hamilton Terrace,
St. John's Wood, N. W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.,
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, Finsbury Park Villas,
Green Lanes, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI,
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor).
12, Westbourne Park Terrace, W.

Mr. F. St. JOHN LACY,
(Professor of Singing. Composer, and Vocalist (Baritone),
Fitzroy Mansion, Charlotte Street,
Fitzroy Square, W.

Mr. H. MARTIN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor)
Address–7, Wimpole St., Cavendish Sq., W.

Mr. LOUIS N. PARKER, A.R.A.M.
(Composer, Conductor, Lecturer),
Sherborne, Dorset.

Mr. G. W. L. MARSHALL-HALL
Gives Lessons in Composition and Dramatic Singing,
151, Rucklidge Avenue,
Willesden Junction, N.W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts)
Bosworth House, Husband's Bosworth,
Rugby.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o Nolan & Jackson.

Miss JULIA JONES (Soprano) begs that all communications respecting Oratorios, Concerts, &c., will be addressed to 4, St. Thomas's Road, Finsbury Park, London, N.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorio),
41, Welbeck St., Cavendish Square, W

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, Portsdown Road, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concerts and Oratorio),
29, Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio)
2, Sedgmoor Villas,
Private Lessons given. Camberwell, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
(Ballad, Oratorio, etc.)
31, Monmouth Rd., Bayswater, London, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, Norfolk Square, Hyde Park, W.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts),
56 Duchess Rd., Edgbaston, Birmingham.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 36, Albion Place, Hyde Park W.; or to Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul (sole agent),
26, Old Bond Street, W.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul,
26, Old Bond Street, W.,
Or, 270, Elgin Avenue, Maida Vale, W.

Mr. IVER McKAY
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concerts),
1, Milner Square, London, N.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Old Trafford, Manchester.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio),
28, Devonshire Street, Islington, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
Gothic Lodge,
Lordship Lane, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, St. Stephen's Afenue,
Shepherd's Bush, W

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
40, Stanley Gardens, Belsize Park, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. Roosevelt Schuyler,
55, Beaver St., New York City.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, Upper Mount Street, Dublin.

Mr. RAPHAEL GORDON
(Operas, Concerts, and At Homes).
c/o Signor Odoardo Barri,
60, Margaret Street, W.,
Or, 97, Talbot Road, Bayswater, W.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. Vert, Esq., 6, Cork Street.

Mr. FREDERICK KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, Canfield Gardens, S. Hampstead.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
Egremont, Croxted Road,
West Dulwich, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert),
63, Stafford Place,
Buckingham Gate, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, etc.),
30, Lancaster Road, Notting Hill, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorios, and Operas),
70, Portsdown Road, Maida Vale, W.

Harp.

Mr. W. T. BARKER
(Concerts, At Homes, Receptions),
49, Ebury Street, Belgravia, S.W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22a, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified." 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
"Yelbana," 99, Anerley Road,
Pupils visited and received. Anerley, S.E.

Miss FREDA MARSDEN,
Solo Violinist (Concerts, At Homes, etc.),
Address. c/o Mr. Charles Woolhouse,
81, Regent Street,
London, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella (Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST,
Telegraphic Address: "Healey's Agency," London

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Madame WILSON-OSMAN (A.R.A.M.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert), (Soprano)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss AMY FLORENCE (Soprano),
(Opera, Concerts, Oratorios, At Homes),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W

Miss FLORENCE EMERSON (Soprano)
(Concerts, Oratorio, At Homes, Etc)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey.
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W, B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss FALCONAR (Contralto),
(Oratorio Concerts Etc.)
24, Oppidans Rd, Primrose Hill, N.W
or Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor),
28, Belsize Road, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W

Mr. HENRY PHILLIPS (Tenor),
Sole agent, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio)
Business Manager, W, B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone),
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W, B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Herr WALDEMAR MEYER (Solo Vlnst)
Concerts, At Homes, Etc.)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street,
Regent Street, W

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Tenterden Street, W.—
Patrons The QUEEN and the ROYAL FAMILY.
Principal—Dr. A. C. MACKENZIE.
THE NEXT FORTNIGHTLY CONCERT, FEBRUARY 9.
The LENT TERM will begin on MONDAY, JANUARY 21. Entrance Examination, Saturday, January 19, at 11. JOHN GILL, Secretary.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, Kensington Gore, London.
Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.
President—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director—SIR GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL.D.
NEXT COLLEGE CONCERT in JANUARY.

FIFTEEN OPEN FREE SCHOLARSHIPS will be competed for in March. Last day for receiving applications January 20.

Forms of application and particulars may be obtained of the Registrar, Mr. GEORGE WATSON, at the College. CHARLES MORLEY, Hon. Sec.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and EXAMINATION, etc., and the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music Instituted 1872.
President, THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.
SESSION, 1888—9.
LENT TERM commences JANUARY 14, 1889.

Students (Professional and Amateur) are received for a complete Course of Musical Training, or for a Single Study. The following is a list of the subjects taught: Harmony and Counterpoint, Form and Orchestration, Composition, Musical Acoustics, Pianoforte, Organ, Figured Bass Playing, Transposition, etc., Solo Singing, the Art of Pianoforte Accompaniment, Violin, Violoncello, Double Bass, Flute, Oboe, Clarinet, Harp, Horn, Orchestral Class, Vocal and Aural Physiology (Lectures), Voice Production Class (Lectures), Elocution.

Prospectuses, Form of Application, etc., and all particulars can be obtained from the Secretary, Trinity College, London, W.

By order of the Academical Board.
Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C. PATRON—THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.

Established to advance the cause of Church Music and the truest interests of its Professors.

Members of the Church of England and Ireland and the Episcopal Church of Scotland are eligible for Election.

Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates), 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members), 15s, per annum; Life Subscription, 5 guineas.

Prospectus and further particulars may be abtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

MUSIC SCHOOL.—CHURCH OF ENGLAND HIGH SCHOOL for Girls (Limited), 6, Upper Baker Street, Regent's Park.—Head Music Mistress, Miss Macirone, late Professor of Royal Academy of Music. Fee, three guineas per term. Children from 8 to 13 allowed to begin and continue for two guineas per term. Pupils not in the School may pay an entrance fee of one guinea. The fees payable in advance. Pupils wishing to join Violin Class under Mdlle. Gabrielle Vaillant, to send in their names to Miss Macirone. F. J. HOLLAND, Chairman.

ANGLO-FRENCH SCHOOL, FOR DAUGHTERS OF GENTLEMEN, Granville House, Hornsey Rise. London. N.—Miss NASH and Madlle. RAYMOND, assisted by a staff of efficient Professors and Teachers, receive Pupils to board and educate. Special attention given to Music. Healthy and pleasant locality. Terms moderate. References kindly permitted to parents of pupils and to the Editor of "The Musical World."

SOUTHSEA. St. Bees' College for Girls and Kindergarten, conducted by Miss Nelson, M.C.P., healthily and pleasantly situated, with good playground, offers every educational advantage with the comforts of a home, and careful supervision. Pupils prepared for all higher examinations. Special attention to Music and preparation for the R.A.M. Class-singing, languages, physiology, drawing, dancing, swimming, musical drill, combined with a thorough English education. Terms, moderate and inclusive.

MR. JOHN GREIG, M.A., Mus. Bac., F.C.O. (passed Exam. for Mus. Doc. Oxon., 1887), teaches HARMONY, COUNTERPOINT, and FUGUE by CORRESPONDENCE. Coached successfully for final Mus. Bac. Oxon, 1886.—Address, 7, Scotland Street, Edinburgh.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

PARENTS seeking ENGLISH or FOREIGN SCHOOLS, TUTORS, or GOVERNESSES for their children, are invited to write fully to

J. F. MOON, M.C.P.,
85, NEWMAN STREET, LONDON, W.,

Who will forward prospectuses and every requisite information, free of charge.

Particulars required are: age and sex of pupil, locality preferred (if any), and about what terms will be paid. Housekeepers, Nursery Governesses, and Companions are also recommended. Hours 11 till 3. Saturdays closed.

SPECIAL TINNED TUBES.

FOR
TUBULAR PNEUMATIC ORGANS.
MELLOWES & CO., LEAD PIPE WORKS, SHEFFIELD

THE UNITED KINGDOM
BENEFICENT ASSOCIATION,

For granting annuities up to £25 to persons of the upper and middle classes in reduced circumstances, who are above 40 years of age, and who are unable from bodily infirmities to earn their own livelihood; and for affording temporary help to candidates in urgent distress.

TO THE GOVERNORS AND SUBSCRIBERS.—The favour of your Votes and Interest is most earnestly solicited on behalf of

MISS CLARA JONNETTE HEMMENS,

AGED 40 YEARS, who has been a Governess, is an Orphan, and affected with a chronic and incurable internal disease, anæmia, and a great state of bodily weakness. She is very incapable of working for her own support, and almost entirely dependent upon a few private friends, having no relatives whatever who can help her.

The case is highly recommended by The Dowager Lady Annaly, Lord Borthwick, The Honble. and Rev. Canon Leigh, Rector St. Mary's, Bryanston Square., W, Lady Lusk, 15, Sussex Square, Hyde Park, W., Lady Morell Mackenzie, 19, Harley Street, W. The Revd. Wm. Tattersall, M.A., Charlton Place, Bishopsbourne, Canterbury, Mrs. Wm. Tattersall, The Revd. G. D. Bowles, M.A.. The Rectory, Wendlebury, Bicester, Oxon, Mrs. Thursby, Harleston, Northamptonshire, Captain E. H. Curtis, H.M. Bengal Cavalry (retired), 139, The Grove, Ealing, W, *Mrs. E. H. Curtis, C. H. F. Routh, Esq., M.D., 52, Montague Square, Hyde Park, W., Mrs. C. H. F. Routh, Mrs. Amand Routh, 6, Upper Montagu Street, Montagu Square, W., W. J. Bellville, Esq., 9a, Porchester Terrace, Bayswater, W., Mrs. W. J. Bellville, James F. Moon, Esq., M C.P., 85, Newman Street, Oxford Steet, W., *Mrs. James F. Moon.

* Will kindly receive the Proxies.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.
HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE, and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be of the greatest efficacy in every form of disease. Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.

Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY S ESTABLISHMENT,
78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 3, or by letter

---

DRURY LANE.—TO-DAY and TWICE DAILY. at 1.30 and 7.30. Augustus Harris's tenth and grandest pantomime, THR BABES IN THE WOOD, and Robin Hood and His Merry Men. The whole story re-written, arranged, and produced by Augustus Harris, in colloboration with E. L. Blanchard and Harry Nicholls.—Box office open daily from ten to six.

BABES IN THE WOOD.—Harry Nicholls, Herbert Campbell, Charles Laurie, jnr., Victor Stevens, Dan Leno, Griffiths Bros., Walter Andrews, Reuben Inch, Tom Pleon, Henderson and Stanley, Dezano and Harry Payne (clown), Florence Dysart, Maggie Duggan, Theresa Mayer, Ænea, Sybil Grey, Edith Charteris, and Harriett Vernon. Ballets by Madame Katti Lanner.

AUGUSTUS HARRIS'S TENTH ANNUAL PANTOMIME.—Columns and columns of complimentary criticisms, pronouncing it the best ever produced.

THE LAND OF TOYS.—Grand Procession and Ballet of Toys and Games.

THE PARADISE OF BIRDS.—Grand Procession and Ballet of Birds.

DRURY LANE PRICES.—Private boxes from £1 to £6 6s.; stalls, 10s.; grand circle (front row), 7s.; other rows, 6s.; first circle (front row), 5s.; other rows, 4s.; balcony, 3s.; pit, 2s.; lower gallery, 1s.; gallery, 6d. Early doors to balcony, pit, and lower gallery, 6d. extra.

THE JODRELL THEATRE, Great Queen Stueet, Long Acre.—Lessee, Mrs. Churchill-Jodrell. Manager, Colonel H. J. Sargent.—TO-NIGHT, a, 8.30, PATTI ROSA, the American comédienne, in Fred Marsden's play, entitled BOB. At 7.45, a new farcical comedy, in one act, entitled APOLLO, M.D., by Sir Randal Roberts, Bart.

PATTI ROSA as BOB, TO-NIGHT.—The Daily Telegraph says: "Patti Rosa was heartily cheered and appreciated by a large audience. She was encored over and over again."

PATTI ROSA, will SING TO-NIGHT, "Hannah, do come out to-night." Encored three times nightly.

PATTI ROSA as BOB, TO-NIGHT.—Times says: "Patti Rosa is natural, sprightly, and piquante, and sustains the interest and amusement of the piece from first to last. . . . Patti Rosa's quips and cranks, her gesticulation and agility, never degenerate into vulgarity, and are not disfigured by mannerism."

PATTI ROSA as BOB, TO-NIGHT.—Standard says: "Patti Rosa is very pretty and youthful, and displays genuine dramatic ability. . . . Her neat step dancing and peculiarly knowing wink sent the audience into ecstacies of delight."

PATTI ROSA as BOB, TO-NIGHT.—Morning Post says: "The audience received Patti Rosa with favour, encored her songs and banjo accompaniments, and thoroughly enjoyed her dancing, in which she excels."

JODRELL THEATRE, TO-NIGHT.—No fees of any description. Doors open at 7.30. Box-office open daily, ten to five.—Gilbert Tate, Manager for Patti Rosa.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1888.

 MSS. and Letters intended for publication must be addressed to "The Editor." Rejected MSS. cannot be returned unless accompanied by stamped directed envelope.

 Advertisements and business communications generally should be addressed to the Manager (Mr. WILLIAM PEARCE), while the Proprietor's receipt will be the only recognised one for all payments. Advertising, Publishing, and General Offices: 138a, Strand, London.

Facts and Comments.

In the Reminiscences of Mr. Frith, the Royal Academician whose poetic dæmon has variously prompted him to the representation of a Railway Station and a Derby day, by which specimens of eclectic art he has endeared himself greatly to the British public, is to be found in the following cogent passage on popular taste, which we quote with the more readiness that we cannot pretend for our own poor part, to regard the gentleman in question as one who has worked worthily for the elevation of that taste:—

"I fear it cannot be denied that the British public is, en masse, densely ignorant of what constitutes the beauties and the faults of pictures and other works of art. Amongst the "many headed" there are admirers, and even lovers, of art, as the number of collections of pictures all over the country sufficiently proves; but can one of these gatherings be found in which hideous blots, in the shape of the worst of bad pictures do not go far to convince the artist-spectator that if the collector really felt the beauty of some of his treasures he would be unable to endure and would at once banish from his walls specimens of artistic incompetence, in which vulgarity and commonplace struggle for mastery? . . . It is within my experience to have become acquainted with what are called self-made men, who, either from a fancy for pictures, or with a view to the investment of their money, have become picture-buyers. The care these people take to acquaint themselves with the solidity of ordinary investments is very great. They know they know nothing about such and such a railway, or of a mine which promises 100 per cent., and nothing can exceed the caution with which they test evidence of the character of such securities before they will trust to them. But works of art! Oh, that is quite another matter. "Anybody can judge of pictures!" These wiseacres don't want Mr. A.'s or Mr. B.'s opinion, though each of these men may have spent the whole of his life in close intimacy with the finest examples of modern art. The root of this is blatant conceit, for which the modern collector often pays very dearly. These gentlemen are past praying for; conceit and ignorance blind them to beauties and defects."

With this statement of facts we agree entirely; but the reasons assigned by Mr. Frith for the lamentably low standard of public opinion on matters artistic seem scarcely satisfactory. "The root of the matter is not "blatant conceit" alone; it consists primarily in the notions that one taste is as good as another that there is no absolute standard of artistic rightness; and in the total ignorance of the fact that "good taste" like every other good thing, must be acquired or developed by slow and painful experience. These people mistake mere sensibility to emotional pleasures, as received through the medium of any so-called "work of art" for taste. Certain things give them pleasure; and they assume that these things must therefore be good. They do not know that all art-pleasure consists in complete rapport between the work and the spectator; and that consequently their enjoyment of a work simply means that they are on a level with it. It is therefore obvious that, as a general principle, the works approved by persons of the highest mental calibre and culture must be the best works. When once this is grasped, it follows that in the case of any work accepted as good by persons of a higher culture than ourselves, but in which we can see nothing beautiful or desirable, it must be our duty to raise ourselves to its level. To do this is no doubt a matter of time and trouble; but those who refuse to do it must be content to acknowledge their inferiority.

That the majority does thus refuse, is patent to all thoughtful men; and it may indeed be doubted if the world itself will ever get beyond the point reached by the proudly humble person who proclaims, with a fine assumption of candour, that "he does not pretend to be a judge; he only knows what he likes." This person, it may be noted, invariably emphasises his declaration, and proves the worth of the popular verdict, not only by supporting (to illustrate from that section of art with which we are concerned most immediately) ballad-concerts of the most trivial type, but by condemning as prigs or pedants those who follow after the higher pleasures of mind and sense, as they are to be found in, say, the works of Beethoven or Wagner.

The amateurs of Rouen have recently been waxing unusually enthusiastic over the first performance in that city of M. Massenet's "Hérodiade." Is it due to the prudence or the prudery of English managers that the work is not produced in London?

We are glad to learn that Herr Hermann Levi, the conductor of the orchestra in the Munich Theatre, has entirely recovered from the serious illness which prevented him from conducting the performances of "Parsifal" at Bayreuth last summer.

It is interesting to note the existence at Constantinople of a German musical society, rejoicing in the appropriately national name of "Teutonia," which, under the conductorship of Paul Lange, gives performances of classical music during the season; when the "season" begins, in the capital of the unspeakable Turk, however, we know not. In the absence of fuller details, imagination is free to conjecture the effect of a Beethoven Symphony upon an audience of dervishes, houris, and Turkish dogs.

Whatever permanent results may accrue from the discussion on "Music at Home," which has recently been carried on in the columns of the "Daily Telegraph," it has at least provoked one suggestion which should take permanent shape. Mr. Ernest Birch proposes the foundation of a special fund for the relief of musicians in illness or pecuniary distress, towards which a contribution should be asked from the proceeds of all charitable concerts in which assistance is given gratuitously by professional artists. In this matter the dramatic profession is far ahead of the musical; though we do not believe that this is due in any degree to a lack of generosity or sympathy amongst musicians. Mr. Birch's kindly suggestion should, therefore, meet with ready acceptance.

As far as the general merits of the question at issue are concerned, we do not care to offer an opinion at present. Of course, the notion of soothing the sick by dulcet warblings is very pretty and poetic, and it is comforting to dream of a Royal College founded for the express purpose of educating whole tribes of modern Davids, to exorcise the evil spirits from the breasts of modern Sauls; but to the irreverent critical spirit of the age, there is a trace of the comic about the idea. For instance, were the plan once started, one foresees that each musician would devote herself (for it seems to be generally admitted that ladies are to profit most by the idea) to the study of some particular form of illness, and the music most adapted for it; so that young ladies would advertise themselves as specialists in the art of playing to neuralgic patients, or gouty patients, or those suffering from the measles or the mumps. Medicine and music would thus be more closely allied than has hitherto been thought possible, and it is likely that the system would have remarkable effects. The "exhibition" of, say, a Liszt rhapsody, played by a muscular young woman upon an ancient cottage pianoforte, would probably be attended with wholly remarkable results; and the happiest patients under the new régime, would be the totally deaf.

Mr. Henry J. Wood has completed a Dramatic Oratorio in four scenes entitled "St. Dorothea" which will be performed for the first time in London by the Grosvenor Choral Society on February 15, 1889.

Mr. Charles Wood, "Morley Scholar" at the Royal College of Music is evidently a "coming man." Compositions from his pen heard from time to time at the College Concerts had raised considerable hopes, and last week Mr. Wood gave further justification for these by carrying off the rarely awarded 1st prize of £10 and a gold medal offered by the Madrigal Society for the best madrigal. There were many competitors. As the prize is withheld if a composition of sufficient merit be not forthcoming, Mr. Wood's success is additionally worthy of note.

The musical news from Paris comes heavy with announcements of a success and a failure—or, if not an absolute failure at best a succés d'estime A new opera with the ungainly title of "The Flying Squadron of the Queen," the libretto by Messrs. Adolphe d'Ennery and Jules Brésil, and the music by Henry Litolff, was produced at the Opéra Comique the other day. The plot of the new opera is much too complicated, and, if the truth must be spoken, much too silly, to deserve telling in these columns. As for the music, only one number was redemanded, and that was an Entr'acte! The production of this opera has, however, served one useful purpose; it has reminded us that Litolff is still in the land of the living. He is so rarely heard of nowadays, that when his opera, "The Templars," was brought out in Brussels some time ago, it was discussed as a posthumous work, and the papers were full of biographies of the author. Litolff, it appears, does not mind being thought dead nearly so much as being thought a German. His great object is to be considered French; but, as a matter of fact, he is nothing in particular He was born in London in 1818, his mother was Irish, and his father Alsatian, one of the first Napoleon's heroes, captured in Spain, and long a prisoner in the dungeons of perfidious Albion. Young Litolff wandered aimlessly over the face of the earth. He was heard of in Holland, in Germany, in Russia, in Poland, in Austria. At Weimar he met Berlioz, and Berlioz made him as much a Frenchman as he has since succeeded in becoming. He married Mdlle. de Larochefoucault, but she died soon afterwards, and he remains faithful to her memory, though in a vague sort of way, as the following perfectly true story proves.

During the rehearsals of his opera, "Eloise and Abelard," at the Folies Dramatiques, he went up to the manager and said: "I say, Milher, you're going to put it on on Monday, aren't you? Curious coincidence; just the anniversary of my poor wife's death." The first performance was put off for a few days. Litolff meets the manager again. "I say, Milher, you're going to put it on on Saturday, aren't you? Curious coincidence; just the anniversary of my poor wife's death." Again, for one reason or another, the first performance is put off; again Litolff meets the manager, and once more he says: "I say, Milher, you're going to put it on on Thursday, aren't you? Curious coincidence;" etc. da capo. And the point is that the remark was made each time in perfect seriousness and good faith. As a composer, Litolff is distinguished by great science, but is devoid of afflatus, and melody seems to be an unknown quantity to him. "The Flying Squadron of the Queen" will probably very soon take its flight and be seen no more.

The success which we have to chronicle is that of a young and pretty Roumanian vocalist, Mdlle. Darclée, who has just made her first appearance as Marguerite in "Faust," at the Opera. She was to have come out as Juliet, but her first rehearsal with the orchestra inspired her with a wholesome fright, and she begged off. As Marguerite her success went crescendo from the first scene to the last, and at the close of the opera she had sent her audience frantic with delight.

Dr. Spark has completed the second part of his Oratorio 'Immanuel," which will shortly be issued by Mr. John Heywood. Though a continuation of the previous work of the same name, it is a complete Oratorio in itself. The first portion treated of the childhood of Christ, the one about to be published treats of His ministry down to the entry into Jerusalem. The words have been compiled by the Rev. Dr. Conder, in accordance with the composer's suggestions. The Oratorio will occupy about eighty minutes in performance.

With a view of facilitating the comprehension of the Neumæ, the Benedictine Monks of Solesmes propose to issue in quarterly parts, under the title of "Musical Paleography," a series of reproductions of early MSS., by means of phototypes. The subscription is to be £1 per annum, and each number will contain at leat 16pp. royal 4to. The specimen (XII Century) forwarded to us leaves little to be desired on the score of clearness. It is to be hoped this excellent scheme will meet with due support, and by awakening wider interest in early systems of notation, enable experts to arrive at something approaching a consensus of opinion with regard to the interpretation of these treasures of Mediæval song.

The London Wagner Society's prospectus for 1889, will be issued in a few days. The members now number 338, as compared with 260 at the commencement of last year. It remains now to be seen what effect the new guinea subscription will have upon the faithful. The arrangements for the coming season will include:—(1) A vocal recital of "Tristan and Isolde" (the entire work) at the Portman Rooms; the first act on January 28, the second on January 31, and the third on February 4. The vocal parts will be sustained by, amongst others, Miss Pauline Cramer and Messrs. William Nicholl, Grove and Cunliffe. (2) Social Meetings at Trinity College, when papers will be read by Mr. Ferdinand Praeger on "Classic and Romantic;" Mr. W. A. Ellis on the Wagner-Liszt correspondence; Mr. Louis N. Parker, "Confessions of a Wagnerian," and by Mr. E. F. Jacques. (3) A conversazione to be held in June, for which a full orchestra is promised. The recital of "Tristan" is we believe due to the incentive of Mr. Carl Armbruster, who will play the orchestral part of the work on a pianoforte. Those who would prefer a band can easily have their wish gratified by supplying the necessary funds. Applicants for this privilege may write to either of the Hon. Secretaries, Mr. Cyriax or Mr. Charles Dowdeswell.

The ignorance of musical matters which prevails in otherwise well-informed circles in this country would frequently afford occasion for hilarity, were it not that it possesses a more serious aspect, which reminds those interested in the advancement of the Art that their efforts to reach even the cultured classes have not as yet been attended with satisfactory results. There seems to be a widespread and deeply-ingrained notion among even intellectual English people, who have not approached music with a view to understanding its æsthetic character, that it stands outside the other fine arts, in that, to it, the principles which govern them are, if not wholly inapplicable, at least only so in a very limited degree. Take, for example, an organ of public opinion generally held to be fairly well instructed in the subjects which it proposes to handle. The "Times" of December 26, in a leader, descants authoritatively upon the supreme importance which should be attached to ensemble in the presentation of stage-plays. "The essence of satisfactory acting," it remarks, "consists in unison among all who have to sustain the characters in a drama. No single actor can make the play produce its proper and natural impression. He may be admired; to the spectators the contrast between him and the rest of the company is the more jarring and disturbing for its exaggerated superiority." So far so good. But let us glance a few lines further on to see what is written about the operatic stage; and what do we find? "The art of a prima donna may mitigate and disguise better than on the dramatic stage the want of harmony and sympathy in the subordinate performers." Here, as before pointed out, a different and unquestionably lower standard of excellence is set up—with what justification we are left to discover. Perhaps, if questioned, the writer would hasten to offer the customary apology: "I am passionately fond of music; but" (assuming a confidential air) "I know nothing about it—at least scientifically, you know."

The "Gazzetta Musicale" of Milan, having taken counsel with its subscribers by means of a species of plebiscite, is for the future to be reduced to one-half its size, and to consist of sixteen instead of eight pages, as hitherto. The new form will thus not only be more convenient for reading, but also for binding. There will be no change in price.

To bear the name of a great man is to inherit responsibilities of a weight commensurate with the greatness of the name, and to be exposed to criticism of no ordinary severity. We are led to this philosophical observation by the announcement that there is, at the present moment, a Viennese composer who bears the name of Wagner, and who is engaged in writing an opera, entitled "Casanova à Paris." The libretto of the work is understood to be drawn from the "Memoirs of Casanova." We shall be curious to know with what measure of loyalty the new Wagner will support the traditions of his great name. Add lustre to it, he cannot; it will be enough if he do not disgrace it.

M. Jules Barbier has been "dropping into verse," being driven to this extremity by his admiration for Madame Patti's Juliet. At a recent dinner in Paris, at which the two luminaries were present, the poet thus addressed the fair witness to the efficacy of Pears' soap:—

Femme, artiste, oiseau, fleur, rayon, verbe de flamme.
Beauté faite de grâce et de candeur, je bois
A ta voix de cristal, claire comme ton âme,
A ton âme de feu, chaude comme ta voix.

For whatever else the Paris Exposition of 1889 may be remarkable, the most interesting feature, to musicians, will probably be the performances of the Hungarian artists from the Grand Theatre at Budapest. The performances will comprise national songs, orchestral music and dances, in the genuine Magyar costumes, and amongst the performers is a violin-playing "prodigy," eight years of age. As this is the first opportunity of the kind offered to Parisians, it is not difficult to believe that the musicians will receive a warm greeting.

Universal sympathy will be accorded to M. Camille Saint-Saens, the death of whose mother, at the age of 79, is announced.

The two following paragraphs appeared in yesterday's "Daily Telegraph":—

"Theoretical musicians, some of them, are indulging in a warm discussion over the late Mr. Day's system of harmony, which, as most amateurs know, had an uncompromising advocate in the late Professor Macfarren. Is it worth while; especially at a time when practical musicians are more and more disposed to lighten the ship by throwing theory overboard? A mathematical pedant once, examining a work by Mendelssohn, came upon a chord which shocked his sense of propriety. He took it to the composer: "Pray, Mr. Mendelssohn, what is the root of this chord?" "Upon my word, I don't know," replied the smiling master, "it suited me, and I used it." The answer sent Mendelssohn down many degrees in the esteem of his interlocutor, but we are getting used to all manner of liberties and licences now-a-days. A curious thing is that, as in a memorable case at Rheims, nobody seems one penny the worse."

"Mr. W. W. Linton. writing to the "Musical World," points out that, setting aside two casual representations, not a single performance of opera in English has taken place in London during the present year. "And yet," he adds, "we are supposed to be such a musical people, and so much attached to our national opera!" Who is it that thus supposes? We are becoming musical, as once we were, but there is much ground yet to make up, and as for "national opera," we do not possess it, for the simple reason that we care very little about it. The condition of English opera in London is precisely that which an observer might expect. When a public wants a thing it is soon provided, and if there be no provision there is no want."

BEETHOVEN'S MARCHES.

Who would have thought that Beethoven wrote as many as twenty-nine marches? And yet that is the number. They have been collected and arranged by the indefatigable Ernst Pauer, and are to be shortly published in a volume by Messrs. Augener. We will go through the list, and perhaps there may be something to say on a few of them.

1.—This is No. 1 of the music to a festivity of some kind, called a Tournament ballet (Ritter Ballet), and was written in 1790, while Beethoven was yet in Bonn, for his good friend, Count Waldstein, who fourteen years later gave his name to the famous Sonata, Op. 53, in C major. The music of the Ritter ballet has been only recently published in the supplemental volume to Breitkopf's complete edition of Beethoven. It must not be confounded with some music which he wrote for a Tournament in the Riding School at Vienna during the Congress, on November 23, 1815. This was due to the Archduke Rodolph, the kindest of all his great friends. "I can't but laugh," says he in a letter, "that your R.H. should have thought of me on this occasion. I shall ever be grateful for it, and the horse-music shall reach you in the quickest possible gallop" (Thayer, iii. 318). Let us hope it met with a quick and good honorarium.—The music has not yet been found.

2.—In A. The 13th of the 13 Variations on the Arietta, "Es war einmal ein alter Mann"—"One time there was an aged man"—an air in "Die rothe Käppel," or "Rothkäppchen," a Singspiel of Dittersdorf's, brought out in Vienna in 1788. Beethoven arrived there in 1792, and in 1794 he wrote the variations.

3.—In D. Marcia. Allegro. The opening movement of the Serenade string trio, Op. 8. Published on Oct. 7, 1797.

4.—In C. Chorus, alla marcia of the Roman soldiers in the "Mount of Olives," as they march to the capture of Christ. The oratorio was finished in 1800, and first performed April 5, 1803, in one of the Vienna theatres.

5.—In D. Allegro con brio. A lovely march, only too short, forming No. 8 of the Ballet music written for "Prometheus" (Op. 43). The ballet was produced in Vienna March 28, 1801.

6.—In A flat minor. The "Marcia funebre sulla morte d'un eroe," which forms the third number in the Sonata, Op. 26. This was scored by the composer himself for the music of a play entitled "Leonora Prohaska"; the entire music-pieces will be found in the supplemental volume already spoken of. The Sonata was published March 2, 1802.

7.—In C minor. Marcia, Allegretto, being No. 6 of the Six Variations on an original theme, Op. 34. Each of these variations is known to be in the key of a third below that which precedes it. The piece was finished and engraved by the end of 1802.

8, 9, 10.—In C, Allegro ma non troppo; E flat, Vivace, and D, Vivace. Three marches written for piano à quatre mains, and published in March, 1804, as Op. 45.

11.—In C minor. Marcia funebre, Adagio assai; being the second movement of the Sinfonia Eroica. When Beethoven was told of Napoleon's death he said. "I have already written the music suitable to that event," doubtless meaning this movement, which forms part of the Symphony originally entitled "Bonaparte."

12.—In B flat. Marsch, Vivace, for orchestra, from "Fidelio." This, which now stands No. 6 in the 1814 (the present) revision of the opera, was originally (1805) No. 7, and began Act II. In 1806 the beginning of Act II. was removed to the beginning of Florestan's air, where it now remains.

13.—In F. Marcia, assai vivace, for piano and Orchestra, from the Choral Fantasia, Op. 71. First played December 22, 1808.

14, 15.—In F. "Two Marches for Military Music," written "for the Carnival held on the glorious name-day of H.I. Majesty Maria Ludovika, in the Imperial Royal Palace garden at Laxenburg." One was written in 1809, the other in 1810. First published in the supplemental volume already named. The Carnival took place August 25, 1810.

16.—In C. March or Zapfenstreich (Tattoo) for military music, written in 1809, and first published as above.

17.—In C, for orchestra, Vivace. No. 5 of the music to Egmont, Op. 84. Too short, as we said of the movement from Prometheus. It was composed in 1810.

18.—In B flat. Marcia alla turca, Vivace, No. 4 in the music to Kotzebue's play of the "Ruins of Athens," Op. 113.

19.—In E flat. March and Chorus, assai moderato; No. 6 in the music to the same play. This music was composed for the opening of a new theatre in Pesth, on February 9, 1812.

20.—In G. War March, feurig und stolz, for orchestra; No. 3 in the music to "King Stephen."

21.—In B flat. Sacred March, moderato, for orchestra, with melodrama and chorus; No. 8 in the last-named work, composed, like the "Ruins of Athens," for the opening of the Pesth Theatre on February 9, 1812.

22.—In E flat. Marcia, "Rule Britannia," for orchestra, from the introduction to the Battle Symphony, Op. 91.

23.—In C. Marcia, "Marlborough," (Marlbrouk), for orchestra, succeeding "Rule Britannia" in the same composition.

24.—In C. Triumphal March, Lebhaft und stolz, for orchestra, from "The Tragedy of Tarpeja" (by Hüffner); first performed in the play, March 26, 1813. This march has no Trio.

25.—In F. Lebhaft, marschmässig (i.e. Vivace alla marcia), for piano solo; being the second movement of the solo Sonata in A, Op. 101.

26.—In D. March for military band, written for the Grand Parade, June 4, 1816. It exists in manuscript in score, but never seems to have been published in any other shape but for the piano for two or four hands.

27.—In B flat. Allegro assai vivace; alla marcia. This is the second vocal number of the Finale to the Choral Symphony. To suit the "heroes" and "victories" of Schiller's poem all kinds of military instruments are introduced into the score—big drum, piccolo-flute, triangle, cymbals; and the double-bassoon has a very sonorous part. The Choral Symphony was completed in 1823, and first performed at a concert in Vienna, May 7, 1824.

28.—In A major. Alla marcia, assai vivace. This is Movement No. 5 from the String Quartet in A minor, Op. 132; and follows the famous Canzona di ringraziamento offerta alla divinità da un guarito: in modo lidico.

29.—In B flat. March for two Clarinets, 2 Horns and two Bassoons. Without Trio. First published in score, in the supplemental volume already referred to.

[G.]

FOUR FAMOUS AMERICAN SONGS.

It is to be regretted that America can boast of no national air worthy of the grandeur of our nation, or comparable in fervency with those of France and Germany. It is impossible to wholly admire either the words or music of the "Star Spangled Banner," or "Hail, Columbia," and yet none of the later attempts have even approached them in simplicity, strength, and earnestness. The great American hymn, however, still remains to be written, and enduring fame awaits the poet or musician who shall prove its fortunate composer.

The time-honoured tune of "Yankee Doodle," which was our only national air in Continental days, has been traced as far back as Oliver Cromwell's time, when, in words similar to our own, it was sung in derision of the great Protector. The air was handed down to the Puritans, and finally became a favourite New England jig. In the natural order of things it was next fitted with appropriate words by some revolutionary rhymester, and served such an excellent purpose in satirising the British troops after some ignominious defeats, that it was adopted throughout the colonies as a patriotic song of the "Sons of Liberty." At the present day no American Fourth of July or other festive occasion is considered complete without its rendition, and its perennial music bids fair to last as long as the republic itself.

The revolutionary period afforded little else of value in poetical or musical composition, and it was not until the war of 1812 that America's greatest national air was born. "The Star-spangled Banner" was a pure inspiration. The circumstances under which Francis Key composed his famous verses are well known, but it is now said that at the time they were written Key was not held as a prisoner on board the British fleet, under Admiral Colburn, as has been generally supposed, but that he had visited it under a flag of truce to obtain the release of a friend, and was unable to return until the day following the attack on Fort McHenry. He thus became a spectator of the midnight siege, and it was at this time that the words of "The Star-spangled Banner" took form almost involuntarily in his mind.

They were soon after hastily committed to paper, and on young Key's return were read to a party of his comrades, who received them with unbounded enthusiasm.

The circumstances attending their first reading and of their being set to music are narrated by Mr. Hendon, who was one of the party, as follows:—

"It was a rude copy and written in a scrawl that Horace Greeley might have mistaken for his own. He read it aloud once, twice, three times, until the entire division seemed electrified by its pathetic eloquence. An idea seized Ferd Durang. Hunting up a volume of old flute music, which was in my tent, he impatiently whistled snatches of tune after tune as they caught his quick eye. One, called 'Anacreon in Heaven,' struck his fancy and riveted his attention. Note after note fell from his puckered lips, until with a leap and a shout, he exclaimed, 'Boys, I've hit it!' and fitting the tune to the words, there rang out for the first time the song of the 'Star-Spangled Banner.' How the men shouted and clapped, for never was there a wedding of poetry to music made under such inspiring influences. It was caught up in the camps, sung around our bivouac fires, and whistled in the streets; and when peace was declared and we scattered to our homes, carried to thousands of firesides as the most precious relic of the war of 1812."

The origin of "Hail Columbia" was less romantic, and, in fact, exceedingly commonplace, considering its merit and subsequent fame. Like the former song, it was the only noted work of its composer, but has sufficed to hand his name down to future generations, and achieved a celebrity of which, in its hasty composition, he could have little dreamed.

This song was written in 1798 by Judge Joseph Hopkinson, to oblige an actor named Fox, who sang it with great success at a Philadelphia theatre. The music to which the words were wedded was written some ten years previous, having been played at the time of Washington's last inauguration, under the title of "The President's March."

As regards the composition of the favourite confederate air, "Dixie," many conflicting accounts have been given, but it seems quite certain that it was not, as has been supposed, of southern origin.

The song is now said to have been written in New York in 1859, by Dan Emmet, at that time a popular member of Bryant's minstrels, as a "grand walk-around" for their entertainment.

The familiar expression upon which the song was founded was not a southern phrase, but first appeared among the circus people of the north. Emmet had travelled with many of these companies when "the south" was considered by showmen all routes lying below Mason and Dixon's line. As the cold weather approached, the performers would think of the genial warmth of the section they were headed for, and the exclamation would be, "Well, I wish I was in Dixie!" The remembrance of this gave Emmet the catch line, and the remainder of the song is claimed to be original.

[C. F. Adams in "Detroit Free Press."]

CREMONE VIOLINS, GENUINE GUARNERIUS, 1733, for SALE.—Please address "Z. 1187," care of RUDOLF MOSSE, advertising offices, Vienna (Austria).

TO COMPOSERS,—RIDGEWAY and CO., Music Publishers 10, Argyll Street, W. undertake the REVISING. PRINTING. and PUBLISHING of Musical Works upon exceptionally low terms. The finest work in the trade. Estimates upon receipt of MSS. IMPORTANT.—Composers' Works included in Catalogue and introduced without extra charge.

ROECKEL'S PATENT PAMPHONIA.

Model Music Staff with Movable Lines, for teaching rapidly the three clefs and general notation.
Particulars and Testimonials post free.

Messrs. CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.
AND ALL MUSICSELLERS'

Publishers' Announcements.

NEW PART SONGS FOR S.A.T.B.
By W. W. PEARSON.

'Tis Morn! (Edwin Oxenford)	3d.
The Oyster Dredgers	2d.
Welcome, young Spring	2d.
Off to Sea (Edward Oxenford)	4d.
HUMOROUS PART SONGS.
Three Doughtie Men (30th thousand)	3d.
Three Children Sliding (6th thousand)	3d.
A Ryghte Merrie Geste	4d.
The Snow-white Doe (just published)	4d.
Ben Bowlegs (Edward Oxenford)	3d.
The Carrion Crow	3d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO., 1, Berners Street, W.

VIOLIN TUTOR.

PRACTICAL VIOLIN SCHOOL, for Home Students. A Practical Book of Instructions and Exercises in Violin Playing, for the use of Amateurs, Self-learners, Teachers and others. By J. M. FLEMING. 1 vol., demy 4to, cloth gilt, price 7s. 6d.; also in monthly parts, 7d. "Can be heartily recommended to students who wish to lay a solid foundation for good and artistic playing."—Musical Standard.

London: L. UPCOTT GILL, 170, Strand, W.C.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of
A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR
THE VOICE,
By T. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.
London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 27, Harley Street, W.

THE VOICE.

A Complete Explanation of the Throat and its Functions in Breathing and in the Production of Voice, will be found in
"ELOCUTION, VOICE, & GESTURE."
By RUPERT GARRY (Editor of "GARRY'S ELOCUTIONIST").
Remedies for the Cure of Hoarseness, Sore Throat, etc.
7TH THOUSAND. POST FREE, 1s. 2½d.
London: Bemrose, 23, Old Bailey, E.C.; and of the Author, at his residence, 49, Torrington Square, W.C.

IN SIX GRADES,
Price Two Shillings each.
Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:
A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,
By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWANN SONNENSCHEIN and CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE;
And all Book and Music Sellers.

The Organ World.

SOME SUGGESTED MODIFICATIONS OF DAY'S HARMONY, TO MEET THE VARIOUS OBJECTIONS RAISED AGAINST HIS THEORY.

PAPER READ BY DR. C. W. PEARCE, F.C.O., BEFORE THE COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

(Continued from page 201.)

This brief criticism—which is a digest of the various objections which have constantly been raised against the physiological portion of Day's book—is quite sufficient to show that such an inconsistent theory could never on its own merits be accepted as an educational medium for one single instant. The book must have contained another view of the question—and that a consistent one—before it could ever have commanded even the serious attention, to say nothing of the earnest support of any practical teaching mind.

What then is the consistent side of Day's System of harmony?

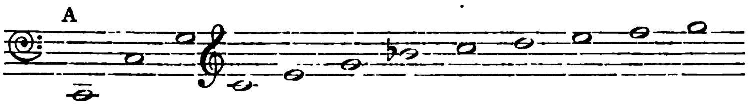
Clearly that method of chord classification which he founded upon his observation of the practice of the greatest musical composers, and which Professor Macfarren says is confirmed by a musician's practical experience.

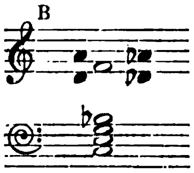
Day's book gains everything by the entire sweeping away of all reference to the observation of physical phenomena, because in very truth his system is not founded upon the harmonic series of nature as it pretends and professes to be. The veriest tyro, the youngest musical student who has but recently taken up Day or Macfarren, will perceive, at the outset, that the real harmonic series upon which their books are constructed is not—

A



—but this—

B



N.B.—The four notes written as crotchets are alternatives. Two notes of the same name, but with one inflected by an accidental, do not co-exist in the same series.

Of these, A is physical, B is pyschical. A is invariable in its order, save with one exception of tone quality like that of the clarinet, in which the even notes (second, fourth, sixth, &c.) of the series are always absent, and can be proved by physical observation in such a case to be sounds not throbbing in the air. But in no case is it possible to interpose a natural sound between any two notes of A. Hence no interval can be said to be generated by the root of A which is less than one octave in compass. On the contrary, B is variable in its order to any extent, any of its upper intervals being capable of removal to a position within an octave of the root, and a free selection from any of its notes is open at all times to the musician's will, it being understood that, with the slightest influence whatever upon those notes which are selected.

It is not too much to say that neither Macfarren's Six Lectures, nor his Rudiments of Harmony can leave any intelligent impression upon a reader's mind, unless the series B be constantly referred to; and, speaking generally, I believe that no musician has either understood or has been able to make practical use of Day's Theory who has referred only to the series A. No doubt many have imagined they were referring to, and building their musical belief and practice upon the physical series A, but the delusion and fallacy of such an idea is evident at once from the single plain fact that the natural harmonic series is an unbending, unalterable formula, whose root can, under no circumstances whatever, "generate" a sound within the limit of its first octave. It really seems incredible that the psychical series B upon which the Day Theory is really founded, and which has been proved of such immense use to the musicians in explaining the practice of great composers, could ever have been placed in the background, as it were; and that the physical series A, which can never be practically introduced without some apology for one or two of its notes being out of tune (!) could ever have found such a prominent place in the foreground as that assigned to it by so many writers of modern Text Books on Harmony. Why is this so? Simply because the four lowest notes of B bear an accidental resemblance to the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh sounds of A, and the desire to reconcile pyschics with physics afforded so great a temptation to regard this resemblance as a coincidence, that the first principles of truth seem to have been set aside, and sounds differing in pitch to an appreciable extent have been assumed to be identical, plain facts appertaining to natural phenomena have been distorted and forced to inculate doctrines they were incapable of teaching, inconsistency and error have therefore existed in the place of agreement and truth. The uselessness of constant reference to the natural harmonic series was perhaps felt by Professor Macfarren even more than he would have cared to acknowledge. It is a noteworthy fact that in his "Rudiments," a book addressed to beginners, he does not quote A at all, nor refer to it after his Definition 19, which is given as an explanation of the term "Fundamental Discords." On the other hand, he quotes B very freely, giving the necessary selections from the psychical series at the head of every chapter or section of a chapter wherein the use of "Fundamental Discords" undergoes explanation and exemplification. Hence the proposal for an entire rejection of purely natural phenomena as a basis for the psychical study of music need not appear startling to the adherents of Day, seeing that Macfarren has himself paved the way for this radical modification of his favoured theory.

We stand then in this position with regard to Day's book. All his attempts to derive the modern scale and its attendant chords from the harmonic series of nature must be rejected as useless, because the whole idea is an anachronism. The "fundamental discords" he describes were used by Purcell, Bach, and Handel, nearly two centuries before the real properties and functions of the natural system of harmonics were discovered and explained by Helmholtz. But Day's classification of chords, built upon an artificial psychical series developed by him from an idea originated by Rameau, has been found to fully and clearly explain many points of difficulty which would come under the daily experience of a teacher,* "and to remove discrepancies between the laws of early theorists and the practice of modern composers."

(To be continued.)

CHURCH MUSIC.

The discussion of that vexed and difficult subject, "Church Music," inaugurated by Mr. E. Griffith's paper on the subject still claims space in "Church Bells"

One correspondent, S. A. Lewis, in a second letter, observes, with reference to congregational singing:—

> It is the very thing for which I am contending. All my arguments were directed against "bad, unintelligent, and undevotiona

---

* Preface to "Rudiments of Harmony," by G. A. Macfarren, 1860.

singing," and one would have thought that the few examples which I gave would have sufficiently indicated the direction in which I wish to see a reform.

I find with reference to this expression "hearty singing," that it is frequently synonymous with "noise," I contend that singing in a subdued tone, with appropriate expression, so as not to annoy one's neighbours, is more reverent than shouting. Bishop Oxenden's "Fervent Prayer" tells of an old lady who asked him whether it was necessary for her to pray loudly, a neighbour having assured that it was essential. Let me quote from the little book in question; "Our earnestness in prayer does not depend upon the loudness with which we make our requests. We shall not be 'heard for our much speaking.' It is not the vehemence of our cries which will awaken God's attention, but the fervour of our hearts." Apply this to praise instead of prayer, and you have the kernel of the whole matter. It will not do to be too literal, either with the Bible or the Prayer Book. "The letter killeth.".

One more point in Mr. Griffiths' letter I must notice. He entirely disapproves of my suggestion as to regulating bad singing, yet he advocates antiphonal singing, the performance to be divided between the choir and the congregation. He blames me for wishing to deprive bad singers and those ignorant of harmony of some portions of the services unsuitable to them; and, in the same breath, suggests a practice, which would deprive good and bad singers alike of just half of their legitimate share in the services. We all understand the reasons for antiphonal singing in choirs, but as applied to congregations it would often introduce some incongruities.

Your other correspondent, "F. T.," closes his letter with an admirable expression when he says that he hopes "that a congregation, as a rule, if they have not a musical ear and voice, have the good taste to be devout listeners." Alas! such good taste seems lamentably deficient, and I fear it will be a long time before it is evinced while those who may be supposed to speak ex cathedra on the subject have no word of reprehension, or even of gentle advice, for those whose mouth worship is little better in its expression than irreverent gabble.

By all means let us have all needful reforms, but don't let it all be directed to the Church music, when it is the rendering thereof which needs amendment. Don't let composers degrade the divine art by writing down to the capacity of the worst singers; rather let them go on writing still better things, and educating the people, by means of the best choirs we can obtain, up to a due appreciation of them—all being done to the glory of God. Don't let us be apprehensive of offending a few hearty, alias noisy, vocalists here and there, by asking them, in a kindly manner, to refrain from singing in parts beyond their capacities, or in a way they do not understand, while we do not mind offending God by offering Him that which costs us nothing in the way of intellectual effort and training. Don't let us fail to make the best use of another of His good gifts—the human reason—not the human voice alone, as so many appear to do—in His praise.

Another correspondent writes:—

I can fully sympathise with Mr. Lewis in most of the sentiments expressed by him, and in the painful experience he so vividly depicts I cannot, however, acquiesce in all his conclusions. These seem to be drawn from the abuse, rather than from the proper use, of congregational singing.

There are two "parties," if one may so call them, holding diametrically opposite opinions. One of these is well represented by the Rev. H. R. Haweis, as it was also by the late Benjamin Webb. Mr. Webb held that all Church music should be "æsthetical," and he maintained that people were impressed more by good, and beautiful, and devotional music than by any music of a lower order in which a congregation might be able to participate. A member of his congregation, complaining that it was so difficult to join in such singing as that at St. Andrew's, was told, "we don't want you to sing, but to listen." The other party holds none the less that the music cannot be too good, beautiful, and devotional, if only it be but the best possible vehicle also for the utterance and sense of the words.

Without expressing any preference, whether for the principle or the practice of the one or of the other of the two modes advocated, I would simply point out that in the vast number of churches throughout the land procuring, organizing, and training of a choir competent to produce music sufficiently perfect and expressive to be deemed æsthetical, must be quite beyond the bounds of probability or even of possibility. Whereas all, or very nearly all, might be capable of organization and training sufficiently good to enable an ordinary congregation to unite in the responses and psalmody, without the irritant proceeding complained of by our correspondent, still, untrained and untaught members of a congregation might continue to make themselves painfully prominent, whatsoever might be the class of music used.

The best mode of silencing or subduing an obnoxious voice is quite another question. This would really seem to be the gist of your correspondent's letter. I cannot believe that this "Reform" will be effected by merely introducing a higher scale of æsthetical service, even supposing it to be efficiently carried out. And I fear that forcing all those who cannot sing at sight to take the melody instead of a part would be but a very doubtful if not disastrous expedient, unless the music were of the nature of the Gregorian modes. Modern music depends so much upon the proper balance and distribution of its harmonies, that any overloading of its treble would prove to be the destruction of its beauty. And in case of florid tunes, it would be anything but a "Reform" in its true sense. Still more so would this be this case if any other than treble voices were requested to take the air.

The most painful and distracting mode of service is that wherein the minister takes his part merely in an ordinary "reading" voice, whilst the choir takes their parts quite irrespectively, with or without the organ accompaniment, whether in monotone or with intonation."

A third correspondent writes:—

Allow me to draw attention to a point which has not so far been mentioned? I refer to 'The Creeds," and to the custom which prevails in almost all musical services of the words, 'I Believe,' being taken by the priest alone. Surely there are no two words in the whole course of Divine Service which it is more desirable and even necessary for every member of the Church to say aloud. As Mr. Evan Daniel truly says, when dealing with the Creeds, 'Faith is essentially a personal matter, of which every one should make profession for himself.' Had there been any idea of the priest speaking here in the name of the people, the Creed would certainly begin, 'We believe,' &c. If musical considerations demand that the first note should be sounded by one voice alone, the words 'I believe' should be repeated after the priest by the whole choir, thereby giving the people an opportunity of making their profession of faith for themselves.

To this writer the explanation may be offered that the custom of assigning the intonation of the first sentence of the "Gloria in Excelsis," "Creed," &c., to the celebrant, priest, or leading singers simply perpetuates the combination of verbal announcement and musical intonation naturally arising at a time when, in the absence of leading power or accompanying instrument, it necessarily became the duty of an ecclesiastical or musical official to start the psalm, hymn, &c. There is no reason why the words shall not be repeated by the choir and people, as, indeed, they often are in modern settings.

REVIEWS.

POPULAR CHRISTMAS HYMNS.

The three most popular Church hymns of the season are probably the "Adestes Fideles," "Christians awake," and "Hark! the Herald Angels sing." The first was an ancient Latin hymn, afterwards translated to "O come, all ye faithful." The music has been generally ascribed to John Reading. There were three organists of this name. One was vicar-choral of Lincoln Cathedral and Master of the Choristers about 1670; afterwards becoming organist of Winchester Cathedral and College, where he composed "Dulce Domum" and certain Latin Graces. Another was organist at Chichester from 1674 to 1720. The John Reading who composed, according to tradition, the famous "Adestes Fideles" was born in 1677, educated as a chorister at the Chapel Royal under Dr. Blow, and then organist at Dulwich College. He afterwards became connected with Lincoln Cathedral, but ultimately returned to London, becoming organist of St. John's, Hackney; St. Mary's, Lombard Street; St. Dunstan's, Fleet Street; and St. Mary, Woolnoth. He was well known as a composer and musical editor. The tune "Adestes Fideles" was at one time called the Portuguese Hymn, because sung at the Embassy Chapel during the organistship of Vincent Novello, who made an elaborate arrangement of the tune and the Latin words. John Reading, the reputed composer of this time, died in 1764.

"Christians, awake!" for long a popular waits' tune, and still much sung on Christmas Day, was written by John Byron, a Manchester poet, born in 1691, The words were first printed in "Harrop's Manchester Mercury" on December 19, 1752. This hymn has undergone many verbal alterations. The tune was composed by John Wainwright, a member of a Stockport (Cheshire) musical family, while organist in his native town. It is said he lived in Manchester in 1757, and became organist and singing man at the Collegiate Church in that city on May 12, 1767, dying only eight months after his appointment. The tune to "Christians, awake!" has been also called "Yorkshire" and "Doncaster," but "Stockport" was the original name given to it by a Mr. Harrison, in commemoration of its composer.

"Hark! the herald angels sing," was written by the Rev. Charles Wesley, the younger brother of John Wesley, who was born in 1708 and died in 1788. He wrote many fine hymns, which appear in his brother's collection. The music to this tune was a happy adaptation made, it is said, by Mr. W. H. Cummings to one of the movements of Mendelssohn's "Festgesang." It has become universally and inseparably connected with the musical associations of Christmastide.

There are many other Christmas hymns, but these three seem specially identified with the great and joyous festival which celebrates the dawn of the Christian religion.

ANCIENT ORGAN BELLOWS.

Mr. H. E. Krebiel, of New York, write to the Editor of the "Musical Times" as follows:—

In reading Mr. Rowbotham's exceedingly entertaining article in the October issue of your journal, it occurred to me that that gentleman had scarcely done justice to some of the early records of the application of the bellows in organ construction. At least I should be very glad if he were to tell me how to reconcile his conception of the inefficiency of the bellows prior to the tenth century with the following extract from St. Jerome's letter to Dardanus:—"Primum omnium ad organum, eo quod majus esse his in sonitu et fortidudine nimia computanter clamores, veniamus. De duabus elephantorum pellibus concavum conjungitur, et per quindecim fabrorum sufflatoria compressatur, per duodecim cicutes æreas in sonitum nimium quos in modum tonitrui concitat: ita ut per mille passuum spatia sine dubio sensibiliter utique et amplius audiatur, sic apud Hebræos de organis, quæ ab Jerusalem, usque ad montem Oliveti et amplius, sonitu audiuntur, comprobatur."

Here we seem to have the description of a bellows, or something which took place of the modern wind-chest, made by the joining of two elephant's skins and "compressed" in order to drive air into the pipes by fifteen workmen.

SPECIFICATION.

Clun Parish Church, Salop.—A new organ built by Nicholson & Co., Worcester, consisting of 2 Manuals, Full Compass Pedal Organ.

Great Organ CC to G, 56 Notes.—Open Diapason, metal 8 ft.; Dulciana, metal, 8 ft.; Clarabella and stop bass, wood, 8 ft.; Principal, metal, 4 ft.; Harmonic Flute, metal, 4 ft.: 12th, and 15th, metal, 4 ft.; Mixture, 3 Ranks metal, 4 ft.

Swell Organ.—Open Diapason, metal, 8 ft.; Gamba (grooved). metal, 8 ft.; Leiblich Gedact, wood and metal, 8 ft.; Salcional, metal, 8 ft.; Gemshorn, metal 4 ft.; Cornopean, metal, 8 ft.

Pedal Organ, CCC to F, 30 Notes.—Open Diapason (large scale), wood, 16 ft.; Bourdon (soft), wood, 16 ft.

Couplers.—Swell to Great, Swell Super Octave, Swell to Pedal. Pedal Super Octave, Great to Pedal. Swell pipes extend one octave above manuals. Pedal pipes extend one octave above Pedals. 3 Composition Pedals to Swell, and 3 to Great. 1 Composition Great to Pedal on and off. Case pine and pitch pine varnished.

Specification by Rev. Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley, Canon of Hereford, Professor of Music, Oxford University.

Hampstead.—Specification of the organ for the Concert Hall of the Hampstead Conservatoire, erected by Messrs. Henry Willis and Sons. This instrument will be placed in a chamber specially constructed for its reception.

Pedal Organ (CCC to F). Open Diapason, Violone, Bourdon, Octave (inverted mouth).—Ophicleide.

Choir Organ (CC to A).—Lieblich, Dulciana, Hohl Flöte, Flute Harmonique, Piccolo (Harmonic), Corno-di-Bassetto.

Great Organ (CC to A).—Double Diapason, Open Diapason, Claribel Flute (through), Wald Flute, Principal, Twelfth, Fifteenth, Mixture 3 ranks, Contra Posaune, Hautboy, Cornopean, Clarion, Vox Humana (with Tremulant).

Solo Organ (CC to A).—Wald Flute, Concert Flute,* Tuba, Orchestral Oboe,* Clarionet.*

Couplers.—Swell to Great, Swell to Great Sub-Octave, Swell to Great Super-Octave, Choir to Great, Solo to Great, Solo to Pedals, Swell to Pedals, Great to Pedals, Choir to Pedals.

Accessories.—Eight Compositions Pedals; four acting symmetrically on the Great aud Pedal Organs, and four on the Swell Organ. Double-acting pneumatic Pistons for Great to Pedal Coupler, and Swell to Great Coupler placed in the Great Organ key slip. Pneumatic Lever to the Great Organ, and Pneumatic Lever to the Swell Organ. Compressed air movement to the whole of the Pedal Organ.

Summary.—Pedal Organ: 5 stops.—Choir: 6 stops.—Great: 12 stops.—Swell: 15 stops.—Solo: 5 stops.—Couplers: 9 stops.—Total: 52 stops.

Kentish Town Congregational Church.—New Organ built by Hill & Son of York Road.

Great Organ.—Open Diapason (large), 8 ft.; Open Diapason (small), 8 ft.; Clarabella, 8 ft.; Principal, 4 ft.; Fifteenth, 2 ft.; Trumpet, 8 ft..

Swell.—Bourdon, 16 ft.; Open Diapason, 8 ft.; Stop, 8 ft.; Salicional, 8 ft.; Voix Celeste, 8 ft.; Principal, 4 ft.; Mixture, 3 ranks; Oboe, 8 ft.; Cornopean 8 ft.;

Choir.—Lieblich Gedact, 8 ft.; Dulciana, 8 ft.; Wald Flute, 4 ft.; Clarionet, 8 ft.;

Pedals.—Bourdon, 16 ft.; Open Diapason, 16 ft.;

Couplers.—Swell to Cholr; Swell to Great; Swell to Pedals; Great to Pedals; Choir to Pedals.

T Pedal to Great to Pedals; 3 Composition Pedals to Great; 3 Composition Pedals to Swell; 30 Concave Straight Pedals; Great Organ and Choir Stops on right hand of performer, all others on the left.

RECITAL NEWS.

Anderston United Presbyterian Church, Glasgow.—An Organ Recital was given by James T. Pye, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.C.O., December 14. Programme:—Minuet in the ancient style, J. T. Pye; Largo in D Minor, from Sonato Op. 10, No. 3, (Transcribed for the Organ by J. T. Pye,) Beethoven; Toccata and Fugue in D Minor, Bach; Andante, "The Surprise," 3rd Symphony, Haydn; Introduction and Allegro, "Cuckoo and Nightingale" Concerto, (with Cadenza by W. T. Best,) Handel; Grand Sonata in D Minor, (Dedicated to His Majesty the King of Belgium,) A. Guilmant.

Plymouth.—Mr. H. Moreton, F.C.O., gave an admirable organ recital in St. Andrew's Church, on December 3, before a large audience. The following was the programme, which was well rendered with the organist's well-known ability:—Overture "Samson," Handel; Caprice in B flat, Guilmant; Concerto in B flat, Handel; Adagio, Symphony in C minor, Beethoven; Adagio in G, Hummel; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Cavatina, Raff; Marche Religieuse, Adam. The new organ erected in the vestry by and for the use of the St. Andrew's choir, was used on this occasion, for the first time, with admirable effect in Mendelssohn's sonata, the chorale being introduced each time by one of Mr. Moreton's pupils. Mr. G. Tucker, of Plymouth, the builder, has used a pneumatic action. The keys are placed in the vestry, and the bellows, soundboards, and pipes in an adjoining inner porch of the church. The organist therefore sits facing his choir for rehearsals, and the distant position of the sounding portion of the instrument is found an admirable support to the voices, and is free from the too great power which a heavily voiced organ would have if placed within a comparatively small chamber, and in close proximity to the choir. Mr. Moreton will continue his recitals throughout the winter months.

---

[*] These stops will be enclosed in a separate swell box.

ECCLES.—A recital was given by Mr. W. T. Best, on December 19, at the Wesleyan Chapel.—Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Bach; Christmas Pastorale, W. T. Best; Marcia di Processione, Enrico Bossi; Andante in F major, Samuel Wesley; Air with variations, Auber; Organ Concerto, No. 7, Handel; Concert Fugue, in G major, Alex. Guilmant; Cantilène Pastorale, Grison; Fantasy on Old English Christmas Carols, W. T. Best.

ST. MARGARET PATTENS, ROOD LANE, E.C.—During Advent, Spohr's "Last Judgment" and Gounod's "Mors et Vita" (in English) have been performed to large and appreciative congregations. The former work has been given twice, and on Sunday evenings a large portion of Mozart's "Requiem" was performed, while the morning services on Sundays have been principally sung to unaccompanied music by Gounod, Palestrina, Rossini, &c. The chief features at the Christmas services were the production for the first time at this church of the fine mass in C of E. Silas,arranged for the English service by the organist, Mr. Horace Buttery. Christmas carols which have not been performed here for several years were also given at various services, and the larger portions of Handel's "Messiah" and Bach's Christmas oratorio were also to be heard.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—On December 17, by Mr. H. W. Weston, F.C.O.: Marche aux Flambeaux, No. 2, Meyerbeer; Barcarolle in F, St. Saëns; "Les Rameaux," Faure; Pastorale in F (posth.), Lemmens; Noël, "Chant du Roi Réve," Guilmant; Overture in C, J. Adams.

MAYERS GREEN CONGREGATIONAL CHAPEL.—The Tenth Organ Recital was given on December 17, 1888; Organist, Mr. A. S. Gorman. Programme: Fantasia with Choral, Henry Smart; Melodie, A flat, Guilmant; Toccata, F major, J. S. Bach; Andante, A major, Henry Smart; Kyrie Eleison, Schneider; Romance, Gounod; Marche Héroique, in C, Schubert. Three choruses from Handel's "Dettingen Te Deum," were also given by the choir, accompanied by band and organ.

STRATHBUNGO PARISH CHURCH, GLASGOW.—An organ recital was given by Dr. A. L. Peace, with vocal selections by the choir (conductor, Mr. R. Young), on Dec. 24. Programme: Duet, Sonata in D minor, Mozart; Andante with Variations, Symphony in D, Haydn; Marche á la Romain, J. E. Hummel; Offertoire on Christmas Carols, No 2, Alex. Guilmant; "Christmas Pastorale," A. Moriconi; Overture for a Church Festival (D minor and major), Morandi.—Specification of the Organ.—The organ, which has been built by Messrs. Henry Willis and Son, London, consists of two Manual Claviers from C C to G (56 notes), and two octaves and a half of Pedals from C C C to F (30 notes).

GREAT ORGAN.—Open Diapason, 8 ft.; Claribel Flute, 8 ft.; Dulciana, 8 ft.; Clarionet (to Tenor C), 8 ft.; Flute Harmonique, 4 ft.; Principal, 4 ft.; Fifteenth, 2 ft.

SWELL ORGAN.—Open Diapason, 8 ft.; Cornopean, 8 ft.; Lieblich Gedact, 8 ft.; Salcional, 8 ft.; Vox Angelica, 8 ft.; Gemshorn, 4 ft.

PEDAL ORGAN.—Bourdon, 16 ft.

COUPLERS AND ACCESSORIES.—Swell to Great. Swell to Pedals. Great to Pedals. Three Composition Pedals to Great Organ.

Mr. Henry Willis' patent compressed air movement is applied to Pedal Organ.

CLEVELAND, U.S.—The fine three manual organ built by the Wirsching Organ Co., Salem, O., for St. Bridget's Roman Church of this city, was opened by Mr. Clarence Eddy, of Chicago, on November 28. The compositions selected were most suitable to the occasion and gave ample opportunity to the organist to display a good technique. Particularly noticeable in Mr. Eddy's style was his perspicuity in execution, phrasing and attack. Also, like other experienced players, he knows thoroughly well how to make every possible use of his instrument, either for small or great works (a knowledge of the difficult art of registering or tone combination, being necessary to the Organist, who excels in this respect), besides revealing a learned technique. Miss Ella Miller, the organist of the church, played her solo in a careful manner, and no doubt with such an excellent opportunity as to the use of a fine instrument, will make every effort to avail herself of it. The attendance was good. Programme: Sonata in D minor, No. 1, Guilmant; Andante in B flat (Miss Ella Miller), Lefebure Wely; Concert Adagio in E, Merkel; Concert Fugue in G, Krebs; The Storm—Fantasie, Lemmens; Nuptial Song, Dubois; Professional Wedding March, H. R. Bird; Vorspiel to Lohengrin, Pilgrims Chorus from Tannhäuser (arranged by Mr. Eddy), Wagner; Grand Solemn March, Henry Smart.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FINGER TRAINING.

(To the Editor of the Organ Word.)

DEAR SIR,—I find the cost of the "Technicon" is given in this week's issue of the "Musical World." Would you kindly give the price of, and agents for "Mr. Smith's Apparatus," particulars of which have appeared in your columns.—Yours truly,

J. J. B.

[In reply, no information regarding Mr. Smith's Apparatus is at hand. That gentleman is, or was recently, residing at Oporto, and as far as the writer is aware, no final arrangements have as yet been made for the sale of his hand training apparatus.]

NOTES.

Mr George Ashdown Audsley is writing a "Handbook" on the organ, which aims at being both comprehensive and practical. The appointment and construction of church, concert-room, and chamber organs will be fully dealt with. Information respecting the latest improvements in the science, and directions as to the construction of all parts of the mechanism and pipe-work will find a place in this work; such subjects as voicing, regulating, and tuning not being overlooked. The volume will be fully illustrated. There is to be a large paper edition of three hundred copies. Messrs. Sampson Low and Company are now entering subscribers names.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' CALENDAR.

On Tuesday next (New Year's Day), the Library will be closed and will not be re-opened until January 22.

January 8—F.C.O., Examination (Paper work). Jan. 9—F.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). January 10—F.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). January 11—Diploma Distribution. January 15—A.C.O., Examination (Paper work). January 16—A.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). January 17—A.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). January 18—Diploma Distribution. February 5—Dr. F. J. Sawyer, F.C.O., will read a paper on "The History of the Theory of Harmony." March 5—Lecture. April 2—Lecture. April 29—Annual College Dinner. May 7—Lecture. June 4—Lecture. July 16—F.C.O., Examination (Paper work). July 17-18—F.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). July 19—Diploma Distribution. July 23—A.C.O., Examination (Paper work). July 24-25—A.C.O., Examination (Organ Playing). July 26—Diploma Distribution. July 30—Annual General Meeting.

Candidates for the forthcoming Examination should send in their names on or before January 1.

Further arrangements and particulars will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Secretary.

Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury.

THE FUTURE OF BAYREUTH.

The "Kölnische Zeitung" recently printed two articles in which, after discussing with great ability and impartiality the merits and defects of the late performances at Bayreuth, the writer goes on to say :—

It is all very well for Wagnerites to dismiss as insignificant trivialities the strictures we have felt ourselves compelled to make in the former section of this essay. As such they, perhaps, may be regarded so long as the general efficiency of the Bayreuth representation is not destroyed; but a clear and unbiassed understanding will discern in the deficiencies pointed out symptoms of degeneration which, if allowed to continue unchecked, are destined to increase to an unlimited extent. The crevice through which a single drop of water finds its way into a hitherto wind and watertight building will serve for other drops to percolate, and if, happily, up to the present so large an amount of artistic intelligence and artistic capability have successfully co-operated to exclude inartistic influences, so, on the other hand, it is undeniable that such influence is actively at work, and in a quarter, too, which all friends of Wagner will personally find it difficult to counteract. And yet it is this very influence that imperils the permanent maintenance of the Bayreuth enterprise.

Mulier taceat in ecclesia. It behoves Madame Wagner, who at present plays a predominant part in the circle of the Bayreuth artists, in the interest of the cause which to us, no less than to her, is a sacred one, to content herself with a consultative position, and to entrust the artistic organisation of the Festival plays exclusively to those recognised authorities who cherish with equal loyalty, though with greater technical knowledge of artistic details, the genuine tradition of Wagner's exalted ideal.

But, if by the bringing together of such authorities an undoubtedly essential and important step shall have been taken in furtherance of the Bayreuth Festivals, that alone will not suffice. There are two directions in which the present state of things requires amendment, viz., as regards the constitution of the personnel of the artists and as regards the business administration of the Festivals. To deal with the latter first, no one will refuse to bear witness to the enormous and ever increasing burden that is placed upon the shoulders of Herr Commercienrath Gross in Bayreuth; and one can hardly complain if, in view of the overwhelming and protracted labour, not unaccompanied, probably, with all kinds of annoyance and vexation which each performance must entail, he should, from his own standpoint, oppose an annual repetition of the performances. But is it right that an artistic undertaking should be made dependant upon the leisure of a man of business? The Bayreuth Festivals ought, in the interests of art, to take place annually in order that the general public may be ever and anon stimulated to put its foot down upon the heedlessness and mismanagement which still prevails in the greater number of our Court and municipal theatres and for which indeed the directors of such theatres are not always to be held responsible. The example of Bayreuth, in spite of everything, serves, at any rate, to open the eyes of the public to the claims which, even under ordinary theatrical management, it is entitled to make—claims which are, if at all, only to a very limited degree recognised. To purify and elevate the artistic sense of the public is indeed one of the principal tasks which Bayreuth is called upon to fulfil, and it is devoutly to be wished that the Festivals shall as frequently and as regularly as possible exert their power over the public at large. To this end should be established a paid bureau to which should be allotted the whole of the business administration and which should be entirely confined to that object.

Infinitely more difficult is the solution of the other question; viz., how to provide artists for the yearly festivals. Everyone knows that, up to the present, the performances have been maintained solely through the unexampled self-abnegation of the co-operating artists. After fatiguing labours at their respective theatres the Bayreuth artists disdain the enjoyment of a vacation in order to give themselves up to fresh exertions in pursuit of the Bayreuth art-ideal.

Gudehus and Van Dyck represented eight times in the course of four weeks "Walther Stolzing," and "Parsifal" respectively. Such labours exhibit exceptional enthusiasm for, and loyalty to, Art; and it is not improbable that these qualities will continue to be manifested by all concerned, if the performances are annually given. Apart, however, from such artistic reasons, which are extrinsic, there are intrinsic grounds which render it necessary that that conception of the representation should be attained with which Wagner so long busied himself, and the realisation of which, inexorable death denied to him; that is to say, the foundation of a school in and for Bayreuth. Wagner assuredly regarded the festivals themselves as training schools for the formation of style, and was little disposed to increase the number of existing High Schools and Conservatoires by the addition of a new one. But he also anticipated that illustrious professionals would be attracted to Bayreuth in order to equip with adequate technical training in every branch that young band of artists which, according to his expectation, would collect themselves around him. Wagner's view had, and still has, its full justification, having regard to the fact that the great State Conservatoires have in general assumed a hostile, or at least, an apathetic attitude towards the Wagner art-ideal, and that therefore the art material moulded in these schools has not answered to the demands which must be made upon the capabilities of those who take part in the Bayreuth festivals.

Especially is this the case as regards pronunciation and singing. Bayreuth requires training different from that which in general is supplied by Conservatoires, still persistently clinging, as they mostly do, to the ideal of rhe so-called Italian method. It is true that the great Italian vocalists of earlier times had their own method of singing—a product of the Italian language and opera; and so long as this method of singing keeps in view the production of a noble cultured melodious tone, pure intonation, brilliant techniqne, and a tasteful delivery, so long will its claims be incontestably admitted. But the German method of singing differs in all its essentials from that of the Italian to as great an extent as the German language differs from that of our southern allies, or Italian music from that of Beethoven and Wagner. In the one case, mere beauty of tone, in the other depth of feeling and truth of expression are the salient features. If art-students whose bent is the stage were in possession of that which the Italian School of singing can teach, they would supply, at any rate, material which might when worked up become available for the German and in particular the Wagner style; but then, how pitiably few students have perseverance enough to acquire a thorough grounding in music and the technicalities of vocalisation. Our chefs d'orchestre could a tale unfold of the lack of training among singers male and female, and of those budding artists who, having learnt next to nothing of singing, but being endowed by nature with stately forms and powerful lungs, dub themselves, by predilection, "Wagner Singers," in the belief that Wagner's music calls for vigorous voice-power but no training in singing. With these untrained Lohengrins and Siegmunds, these unmusical Brünnhildes, the German Opera Stage is glutted, and for this evil the sole remedy lies in a school such as Wagner himself contemplated. In Bayreuth, whilst being taught German singing together with an artistic manipulation of the German tongue, the students of the master-works of the classic and the romantic schools might be initiated into the mysteries of the pure method; and, from thence, might be sent forth young chefs d'orchestre, singers male and female, as apostles of true art-culture to every town in which was set apart a locale for the pursuit of musical art. Bayreuth itself would derive no small advantage from such a school. It could train not only its own soloists—and how requisite this is this year's performances have sufficiently demonstrated—but also its choristers; and its representations would be independent of the goodwill of artists who are engaged upon other stages, and of "Intendanten" and Theatre directors who are in a position to refuse to artists of their troupes the necessary permission for taking part in the Bayreuth Festival. That the representations would gain in artistic merit if a single method of singing and interpretation were adopted can hardly be contested; and there would then, at least, be one locale in Germany where the German might hear his mother-tongue spoken in all its purity. The mixture of lingual peculiarities with which one meets on every German stage was also noticeable in Bayreuth, and yet no one was there to insist upon the supreme importance that should be attached to correct pronunciation in Wagnerian declamation. Strange it is what a different criterion is set up for judging the capacity of the artists in the orchestra and that of the performers on the stage. Of the gentlemen of the orchestra it is required that in addition to adequate intelligence and musical training they shall possess in a high degree technical dexterity, and that they should have studied the work sufficiently long to have realised as nearly as possible the intentions of the composer. How different is it with regard to the stage, where imperfectly trained singers are tolerated without question, on account, perhaps, of their fine stage presence or the beauty of their voices. As little, however, does an excellent Stradivarius serve its possessor who has never learnt to play the violin, as a beautiful voice alone contributes to raise a singer to the rank of a genuine artist. In Bayreuth, though, it seemed, as already observed, that people were of a different mind, as regards at least particular personages, unfortunately to the disadvantage of the representations; and it is for this reason incumbent that attention should be distinctly drawn to the shortcoming and its removal demanded.

It may be objected that the costliness of establishing a school at Bayreuth renders such a proposal unfeasible. But the cost might be essentially lessened if the example were followed which the State has furnished in the case of certain institutions whereby artists resorting to the School might be bound by way of recoupment to take part for a certain specified time in the Festivals. Besides, for the foundation of this institution a portion of the reserve fund might be employed, which at present amounts in all to about £10,000, and would bear, in an artistic sense, heavy interest if it were dealt with in the manner indicated instead of lying as securities in the banker's safe. It is further possible that the right to make such proposals may be called in question, since, as a matter of fact, the Bayreuth Festivals are solely the business of the Wagner Family. To such a contention no argument could legitimately be advanced, unless, indeed, it be that by adopting that attitude the national significance of Bayreuth falls to the ground, and that thenceforth one would be justified in regarding the Festivals as simply and solely business speculations, differing only from those of other summer theatres in importance, price of seats, period over which the performances are spread, superiority of representations, and the small number of works produced. Let us hope that the day may never come when the business shall be preferred to the artistic interests of the Festivals. Bayreuth ought, in the interests of our art, never to give up its leading position as a model to be zealously followed until Richard Wagner's ideal of a complete regeneration of German opera has been accomplished. The leading circles in Bayreuth however will be compelled to decide upon a modification of the existing management if they wish to maintain Bayreuth as a sanctuary for the German people and for German Art. It would be sad indeed for this noble artistic growth, if after a spring so full of promise there should no longer be in store a blissful summer, but, in its stead, a premature autumn—the winter would then indeed be not far off.

MUSIC A DEVELOPMENT OF SPEECH

BY G. W. L. MARSHALL-HALL.

(Concluded from page 959.)

Shakespeare's grandest speeches set to music by another Shakespeare, would gain a trifold power (supposing, of course, that the audience were trained in music as they are in the use of words). For even after a life-long acquaintance with language, many, indeed, the majority, are only to a very slight degree affected by its roundabout way of appealing to the emotions. A fine actor, by passionately ejaculating "Oh!" will arouse more emotion in most people than the reading of Shakespeare's finest words. Goethe says "The worth of art appears most eminent in music, since it requires no material, no subject-matter, whose effect must be deducted; it is wholly form and power, and it raises and ennobles whatever it expresses," and, as usual, he pierces to the heart of the matter. No brain-work is required in listening understandingly to music; without thinking or imagining, the hearer is made to feel; attracted and held by the sensual pleasure attendant on its performance, his emotions are, as it were, in spite of himself, elevated and purified.

It is most natural that, just as language divested of its emotional power, appeals merely to the reason; so, divested of its thought, it should appeal altogether to the emotions. Language through words stirs the intellect, through music arouses the emotions. The emotions are the noblest part of man.

My contention is then (1):—That musical sound as an expressor of the emotions occurred primarily in speech. Melody becomes first perceptible in the inflections of the human voice under the influence of emotion; musical rhythm in the construction of words and sentences. (2.) That these inflections and rhythms have been separated from actual words (even as written words are separated from musical sounds), and gradually developed into their present capability of reproducing emotion—into distinct figures, rhythms, harmonies, forming a definite emotional language of their own, separate from, and yet traceable back to speech, in which the germs of every musical figure may be detected by a practised observer.

Many people there are to whom music as tone-poetry is merely a sensual delight, with little or no moral influence or meaning. Yet these same persons, impelled by their various emotions, hourly extemporise and utter, in the guise of speech, melodies, rhythms, and all that is deepest in tone-poetry. Were these to form a habit of noticing in themselves and others the inflections of voice, the rhythms and pauses, peculiar to each emotion, and of comparing these with the inflections or melodies of musical phrases, these latter would soon become comprehensible, and invested with a living interest. Not but that we must remember that what in music is heard as distinct melody and rhythm, can only be found in speech as a tendency towards these. To assign to every musical phrase its emotional parallel in words would be impossible, for whereas words are finite in their capabilitity of expression, music is infinite. As before said music adds to words the emotional meaning which these lacked. We endeavour to give a definite form to emotion by the use of words, then by adding voice-inflections to convey even more nearly to the hearer what is agitating within us. Each inflection has for all a definite meaning, differing only in intensity. So in music, the great tone-poets, to indicate a certain genus of emotion, employ a certain genus of melody. It is impossible, save in a few exceptional cases, to compare music with speech otherwise than generically.

If I were asked how a certain musical passage were derived from speech, I should sing the passage; fix the intervals of melody and general idea of rhythm firmly in my mind; then, using the speaking voice, inflect it in the same sort of manner, but without the same exactitude of interval. Having thus mastered the genus of emotion implied by this genus of voice-inflections, I should endeavour to find words which would fitly interpret this emotion—a process requiring considerable mastery of word-language. So well acquainted are we with the meaning of voice-inflections in speech, that it will be very easy in this manner to obtain a very definite insight into the composer's mind and aim—always supposing he had such!

Speech is but a subtle association of rhythms and tones, each such association depicting a certain emotion. Music is but a perfecting of these means of expression, and makes the inflection more distinct, the rhythm more marked, and both therefore more comprehensible. From the worm is produced a man—a mind; from a sigh, a "Tristan and Isolde" prelude.

LETTERS UPON THE POETRY AND MUSIC OF THE ITALIAN OPERA."*

LETTER IX. (concluded.)

But the imitation of which music is capable is not stinted to such positive resemblances as those now cited; general ideas of hugeness and immensity, of lightness and elegance, of operations that are performed with difficulty or with facility, of order, of confusion, of exertion, of repose, of energy, of debility, of similarity, of discrepancy, of union, of incompatibility, and many more, may be clearly conveyed by different qualities, modifications, arrangements, rhythm, and combinations of musical sounds. With respect to the more distant and obscure analogies, such as that to cold, light, darkness, pain, and the like, as, to those who are less sensible of the effects of music, they may seem to originate rather in the enthusiasm of the hearer than in any reality in the art, I shall not insist on them.

I hope, upon the whole, your Lordship will agree with me that it is evident that there are sufficient grounds to go upon to justify the attempt of imitative music as distinct from passionate; and that the introduction of airs of this last kind must, in consequence of the variety they give, tend to beautify the whole, and render it more complete. I must confess, however, that I have often seen them used too frequently in the same piece; and that the effect of them can never be completely fine when they are not dictated by, and accompanied throughout with some sentiment or passion of the speaker.

---

* "By the late Mr. John Brown, painter. Edinburgh, 1789."

The image of the oak itself on the high cliffs, the raging of the winds, and the dignity of the sentiment in the speaker, all conspire to produce the same effect of grandeur. But I have seen airs in which the subject of the passionate part was different from that of the imitative, so contrived, as to keep each most distinctly separate from the other, whilst, at the same time, the union of both made one beautiful whole. Handel, in his Oratorio of Acis and Galatea, has produced a master-stroke of this kind. Galatea, addressing herself to the birds that are supposed to be singing around her, says: there is no comparison made; the imitative part is only suggested by the sense, and the composer has taken the hint in adapting the music to it, and has indeed done it with the utmost propriety as well as ingenuity. It is plain, in this air, that, if the imitation of any thing is to be at all attempted, it must be that of the warbling choir; and it is as plain, that the passionate expression of the speaker has not even the most distant relation to the singing of birds; to have set the voice a singing, in imitation of the birds, or, whilst the voice sang the passionate part, to have made the birds sing either in unison, or in direct harmony, with the voice, would have been each equally absurd. It would seem, indeed, at first sight, almost impossible to reconcile two things so different; yet this great genius, by confining each part to its proper province, has so artfully managed the composition, that, whilst the vocal part most feelingly speaks the passion, a little flagellet from the orchestra carries on, throughout, the delightful warbling of the choir, and though perfectly different in sound, melody, and rhythm, from the notes sung by the voice, instead of distracting the attention from it, or confounding the expression, serves to add new beauty and grace to the effect; just as your Lordship may conceive a naked figure so veiled with some light and transparent vestment floating to the wind, as at once completely to reveal the figure, and, by its undulating folds, add new charms both to the motion and the form. Nothing can put in a stronger light the discrimination which I before made to your Lordship, of the passionate and imitative powers of music, than the above mentioned air, or more clearly evince the propriety of assigning the first to the voice alone, and on confining the instruments to the other only. This principle, indeed, long before it was perhaps ever thought of, either by philosophers or composers, must have been generally felt; and even the powers of the great Handel could not compensate its violation in composition; for, in the very same opera, a little after, when Galaltea is made to convert Acis into a stream, and, after the symphony has made a fine imitation of the winding of the stream through the vale, he makes Galatea repeat it with her voice; and, though the music of the air be, in other respects, beautiful in the extreme, yet I do not believe it was ever performed without appearing tedious, even to those who never dreamed of this principle; and, to those who were acquainted with it, at once tedious and absurd.

In the first example I gave your Lordship of these airs of imitation, the comparison is itself the subject, and the nature of the sentiment coinciding perfectly with it, only serves to increase, perhaps, the general pathos, without forming, in any degree, a separate subject. The second contains plainly a double subject, contrived with wonderful art to go on together, to set off each other, and to form one beautiful whole. There is still a third kind of these airs, that holds a middle place between those two, in which, there being no express comparison, the imitative part, as in the last, is only suggested by the words, but being, as in the first, of the same quality, as it were, with the sentiment, does not make the immediate subject of the music, but is kept subordinate to the expression of the passion or sentiment.

As the comparisons which make the subject of these airs, or, as the objects of which they only suggest the imitation, may be sublime, elegant, gay, boisterous, &c., so they may severally have a relation to some one or other of the classes before mentioned the portamento, the cantabile, the mezzo carattere, and the different divisions of the aria parlante,—and, of consequence, may be referred to them; the division which I have made of music into passionate and imitative being rather of a philosophical kind, whilst that by which the Italians have formed the different classes of their airs originates, as I have said, in circumstances of practice only. So just is their division, that to give a distinct idea of any of these airs, we must say it is an air of imitation of the portamento style, or of the cantabile, &c.

THE END.

Concerts.

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS

Last Saturday's programme included four numbers only:—Schubert's Quartet in A minor, Op. 29, played by Madame Neruda, MM. Ries, Straus, and Piatti; Mendelssohn's best-known Prelude and Fugue in E minor; Brahms' "Gipsy Songs," and Beethoven's 'Cello Sonata in A major, Op. 69. In the last three numbers, Miss Fanny Davies took a highly important, even when not a very conspicuous, part. Her accompaniment of the "Gipsy Songs" was delightful in its combined delicacy and brightness; and the quartet of singers (the same as on former occasions) left nothing to be desired. Indeed they sang as if they were in love with their theme; and the audience, being evidently in love with it too (for these songs have caught the popular fancy with unusual rapidity) the enthusiasm and pleasure in the performance was irresistible. No. 7 is a gem of part-writing—perhaps the most tenderly harmonised theme that Brahms has ever penned.

Miss Fanny Davies's reading of the Fugue was clear and straightforward. An encore piece was steadily refused, and wisely, considering the pianistic work still to be done.

In the 'Cello Sonata, Miss Davies again sustained her part with admirable ability and tact. It would be well if all young pianists would learn from her to obtain their effects by simple, healthy means, the absence of self consciousness, and the avoidance of exaggeration of every kind.

A word of praise is especially due to the performance of the finale in Schubert's Quartet; the quiet grace with which the movement was given, avoided the—to say the least—bucolic effect that is often obtained. The minuet is one of the most characteristic of all Schubert's movements; perhaps this, with the minuet in the pianoforte sonata in C minor (No. 8), stands at the head of all Schubert's writings for genuine, purely subjective Schubertism—if the expression may be allowed.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The last Students' Concert (Orchestral) of the year, was given at St. James' Hall on the 21st inst. The programme was long, and not altogether either well-chosen or well-arranged. It opened with Purcell's Jubilate, an interesting work, which shows in parts, especially in the concluding doxology, what a dangerous rival Handel might have had, if our great composer had not been so prematurely cut off. But justice is hardly done to the work, when it is sung by a choir in which the female voices outnumber the male, in the proportion of about 4 to 1. And we should wish to believe that some of the soloists were not the best that the Royal Academy could provide. It would try the patience of our readers almost as severely as the length of the programme tried that of the listeners, were we to enumerate all the eleven numbers which followed Purcell's work, but we must protest against the placing of two movements from Raff's Piano Concerto in C minor at the very end of the concert, when a great portion of the audience had left. These pieces were very well played by Miss Rose Meyer, whom we shall hope to hear again under more favourable circumstances. The only composition by a student produced on this occasion was a March for Orchestra by Miss Ethel Boyce, clever and spirited, but somewhat fidgety, both in orchestration and treatment. We may also make favourable mention of the performance of Miss Ethel Barnard in Mendelssohn's "Infelice," of Mr. Clement Hann in Bruch's "Kol Nidrei," and of Mr. Wilby in Mackenzie's Violin Concerto. The Royal Academy is unquestionably doing good work, but we hope that on the next occasion it will be found possible to exhibit the results in a more condensed form.

THE ROYAL AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.

The first smoking concert of the season, which took place at Princes' Hall on the 20th, was graced by the presence of the Prince of Wales and a host of literary, artistic, and social celebrities, and was in consequence a very brilliant affair. The smoking concert has of late excited misgivings among music lovers, on account of the difficulty which some minds seem to find in distinguishing through the haze of tobacco smoke the line which divides the concert-room from the music-hall. Happily, the society over which Mr. Mount presides remains faithful to higher ideals. The programme on this occasion was admirably chosen; it was neither heavy nor frivolous, and variety was a conspicuous item in the bill of fare, while its interpretation was quite worthy of the reputation of the society. There is probably no amateur orchestra in Europe which could have given so good an account of itself in the works presented. These included inter alia the Overture to "Masaniello;" Weber's "Invitation" as scored by Berlioz; a Slavonic Rhapsody by Dvorak; two charming pieces by Bizet and Gillet for strings only; and the Hungarian March from Berliozs' "Faust." Herr Emil Bach gave a masterly rendering of Liszt's Hungarian Fantasia; and Mr. Dalgety Henderson and Mr. Max Heinrich were greatly applauded for their artistic interpretation of songs by Shield, Jensen, Schumann, Schubert and Balfe.

MISCELLANEOUS CONCERTS.

Anerley Musical Society.—This society gave the first concert of their seventh season on Wednesday 19 inst, at the Vestry Hall, the principal item of the programme being Gaul's Cantata "Joan of Arc." The soloists in this were Miss Annie Swinfen, Mr. Lawrence Fryer, and Mr. R. C. Medcroft, who all acquitted themselves well throughout. The work was evidently a favourite with the choir, who entered with spirit into their task and, under the watchful care of their conductor, gave the various choruses with capital effect. The small orchestra of the Society, led by Mr. Allan Campbell, gave valuable aid, as did also Miss Annie Gruzslier, the hon. accompanist, who was at the piano. The second part of the programme included various songs, part-songs, and instrumental solos, the most striking feature being a brilliant performance by Miss Gruzslier of Mendelssohn's "Capriccio No. 1, Op. 33," for which she was twice recalled. The concert was under the able direction of Mr. Chas. H. Cellier, who has been associated with the Society as conductor from its commencement.

Hampstead.—The third of the Hampstead Popular Concerts of chamber music took place at the Vestry Hall, Haverstock Hill, last Friday. Messrs Ludwig, Collins, A. Gibson, and Whitehouse were the quartet, Mr. Dannreuther, the pianist, Miss Gomes, the vocalist, and Mr. Wilfred Bendall, the accompanist. The concert opened with Schumann's Quartet in F, Op. 41, No. 2, and closed with Brahms's Pianoforte Trio in C minor, Op. 101. The fire, originality and finei magination of the latter were beautifully felt and rendered by Messrs Dannreuther, Ludwig and Whitehouse. In Schumann's quartet the performers were occasionally, we thought, a little hurried and uncertain in time, perhaps from imperfect rehearsal; in such movements as the scherzo of this work which the strong accent on the 6th quaver of the bar and other circumstances combine to make a prolonged instance of "cross accent," the most absolute strictness of time is necessary and will not seem pedantic. The "quasi variazioni" movement was played with the greatest delicacy of tone and phrasing. Messrs. Ludwig and Gibson gave Spohr's duet for two violins in D, Op. 67, 2, with a finished skill and freshness of feeling which were very heartily acknowledged by the audience. Encores are by no means of constant occurrence at the Hampstead concerts, but on this occasion the players were induced to repeat the Larghetto. If Mr. Dannreuther's performance of Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue was less warmly received, the explanation is that the work was less generally understood. It was a powerful and masterly rendering. Miss Gomes has a voice which it is now superfluous to praise; its ease, strength and penetrating beauty of tone were admired here as they have been elsewhere. In Franz's song "Widmung," everything that is most attractive about her singing appeared; but she has something to learn in general musical culture, as her accompanist probably thought during the singing of "Er ist gekommen."

PROVINCIAL.

Leeds, December 24.

The last important musical event of the year in Leeds has been the annual performance of Handel's "Messiah" by the Leeds Philharmonic Society, which took place on the 19th, when a remarkably fine rendering of this familiar work—perhaps more familiar in the West Riding of Yorkshire than in any other part of the world—was given under the direction of the society's conductor, Mr. Alfred Broughton, who, by the way, has just been elected to the responsible post of chorus-master to the Leeds Festival. Madame Albani, Miss Hilda Wilson, Messrs. Edward Lloyd and Norman Salmond were the principals. All four did their work well, but we cannot refrain from particularising Miss Wilson's admirable efforts, which were characterised by that reticence which marks the true artist. The chorus never did better than on this occasion, and the freshness, brightness, and precision of their singing deserved the highest praise.

The musical profession in Leeds has sustained a severe loss in the death, at the early age of 28, of Mr. Whewall Bowling, the principal of the Yorkshire College of Music. Mr. Bowling, who came of a musical family, well known in Yorkshire, was an able organist and pianist, and a most conscientious teacher, but it is as a composer that he appeared to the greatest advantage, his works, though neither numerous nor on a large scale, being marked by a finish and refinement which raised them far above the average level. Mr. Bowling was on a visit to the Engadine for the benefit of his health when he met with the accident which caused his death. He was skating on a lake near the hotel at which he was staying, when one of the party fell through the ice, and it was in attempting a rescue that Mr. Bowling was drowned. He was a modest and unassuming man, best appreciated by those who knew him intimately, and the news of his untimely end has caused great trouble to his many friends, and called forth feelings of warm sympathy for his mother and sisters, with whom he lived.

Manchester, December 24.

Sir Charles Hallé, who is naturally very much en évidence here during the musical season, gave another recital in connection with the Gentlemen's Concerts on Monday, December 17. He hardly played as well as he usually does; frequently during the afternoon his touch was markedly hard and unsympathetic, and once or twice his customary precision was at fault This was chiefly noticeable during the first part of the programme, which included a Sonata in G major, by Clementi, a learned and polished work, though heartless enough, Handel's G minor suite, and Hummel's Rondo Scherzando in E flat, Op. 11. In the second half, however, he almost completely atoned for any discontent he might have aroused by a really fine performance of the "Sonata Appassionata"—nothing makes Sir Charles so enthusiastic as a work of Beethoven. A copious selection from Schumann's "Carnival" concluded what was, in spite of a few drawbacks, a very interesting recital. To judge from the multitudinous performances of the "Messiah" which are being given in Manchester and the neighbourhood, there is no immediate danger of the national passion for oratorio becoming extinct. When we say that for the next few days Handel's oratorio will prove a very formidable competitor with the pantomimes that are just now starting on their wearisome two months' course, no further testimony to the superlative attractiveness of the work is needed. The two presentations given by Sir Charles Hallé (December 20 and 21) have been so far presumably the best, and are likely to remain so. It goes without saying that on each occasion the hall was filled to overflowing by an enthusiastic audience. Concerning the performances it is unnecessary to say much. Both the band and the chorus acquitted themselves admirably, as they always do, when the "Messiah" is in question. The artists were, with one exception, those to whom we are so well accustomed, Mr. Santley, as usual, the favourite par excellence, though Miss Anna Williams and Mr. Lloyd were the recipients of an ovation which their fine singing entirely justified. Madame Belle Cole, the new American contralto, made her first appearance in Manchester at these two concerts. We hope to have an opportunity before long of speaking at length concerning the merits of this lady, who is undoubtedly an important addition to the ranks of our contralti; in the meantime we may say that she created a very favourable impression, which towards the close of the performance culminated in enthusiasm.

le,
ye
Un

la g, a su pa s li
As sj on ien or re a n a ble
the dc
, w lan vo ing
my.
l m n m , ar stai

f m se o ne s of at c hi lo ck.
p mec et and qui feel up
, ar
th lt a orr ling

o g l l o nib tua ren e u whi ting l l
, I ld g c goo
ing
ffec

D

RY
24

O
LU
ST
JR
TS
W

ME

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice.

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

Without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings

FOR

VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,
ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,

Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

Servants! Servants! Listen to Us.

SAVE your earnings by buying one of our Mob Caps. They are real hand-made lace, wash perfectly, and last for years. Price 7½d. and 1s. 1½d.

ADDRESS:

TAMBOUR WORK MANUFACTORY, 42, FOREST ROAD, DALSTON.

Works—COGGESHALL, ESSEX.

SODEN MINERAL PASTILLES.

TRADE MARK

FOR THROAT
IRRITATION
COUGHS
& COLDS.

"9, HARLEY STREET,

"I regard them as extremely valuable in obstinate Catarrhal affections of the Throat."

MORELL MACKENZIE, M D

(all Chemists 1s 1½d, or 15 Stamps from 10 Dyer's Bgs., Holborn

TRADE MARK

FOR BRONCHITIS
ASTHMA
& CATARRHAL AFFECTIONS.

SPECIALLY RECOMMENDED BY Sir Morell Mackenzie WHOSE TESTIMONIAL IS WITH EACH BOX

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING For a cheque for £5 we will print an eight line advertisement (sixty words) in THREE MILLION copies of leading English Papers. This is at the rate of less than One Halfpenny for each 1,000 copies actually sold. The advertisement will appear in but a single issue of any paper, and consequently will be placed before Three Million different newspaper PURCHASERS—or FIFTEEN MILLION READERS, if it is true, as is sometimes stated, that every newspaper is looked at by five persons on an average. Address with copy of advertisement and cheque, HY. SELL, SELL'S ADVERTISING AGENCY, LTD., 167 & 168 FLEET STREET LONDON E.C.

ESTABLISHED THREE QUARTERS OF A CENTURY.

A. S. MALLETT, ALLEN & CO.,

CONTRACTORS TO

HER MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE,

Type Music Printers,

LITHOGRAPHERS, &c.

PORTRAITS. (Speciality.) POSTERS.	WINDOW BILLS. BOOKS. CATALOGUES	STATIONERY. SHOW CARDS. PLANS, &c., &c.

68 & 70, WARDOUR ST., LONDON, W.

TELEGRAPHIC ADDRESS—"ASMAL, LONDON."

CASSON'S

PATENT

Organ-Building System.

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c., See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The Late Mr. J. STIMPSON
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A
Mr. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—

CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN COMPANY, LIMITED,

DENBIGH.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Stndio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO.

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had but little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me, or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

To Mr. Ainsworth. BURNHAM-HORNER, F.R. Hist. S.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and Organ student who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music or organ arrangement, with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is, as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours, I. B. THORNTON,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly, HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.
To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilitate the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number), each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS,

BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

Ascherberg Piano Depot,

211, REGENT STREET, W.

FOR SINGERS AND TEACHERS.

THE "MITRE" LOZENGE.

CONTAINS NO OPIATE.

PLEASANT TO THE TASTE

TRADE MARK

For Voice, Throat, & Coughs.

TESTIMONIALS.

"They are the very best I have ever used; they give an undoubted freedom and freshness to the voice."

VERNON RIGBY.

"I never experienced so much and marked benefit as I did last Sunday from your Mitre Lozenges."

T. MAJOR LESTER, Hon. Canon of Liverpool.

"The effect produced upon the voice is excellent. Please send another box."

H. SAYERS, Chaplain of Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford.

"Having had occasion to try the Mitre Lozenges for a severe hoarseness, I am pleased to say they have afforded me the desired relief."

BASSETT ROE.

"For clearing and strengthening the voice, I consider your Mitre Lozenges the best I have ever tried."

ELIZA THOMAS.

"Having found your Lozenges very good for the voice in singing, I shall have great pleasure in recommending them to my pupils."

ELLEN SAUNDERS, from the London Academy of Music.

"I have pleasure in testifying to the excellence of your Mitre Lozenges. As a vocalist and teacher of singing I have found them of great benefit to myself and pupils."

KATHERINE WALLACE.

"Miss Eldina Eldon was suffering from a most irritable throat, which the Lozenges instantly relieved."

"I have experienced great relief and assistance from your Mitre Lozenges."

GEO. GIDDENS, (Criterion Theatre.)

"I know the Mitre Lozenges well, and think them excellent."

GEO. GROSSMITH.

"They are very agreeable and effective."

STANLEY LEATHES, D.D., Prebendary of St. Paul's.

"They are the best Lozenges extant."

CHARLES STRONG,

Choirmaster St. Augustine and Christ Church, Highbury, & Teacher of Singing.

Dear Sirs,—"I have tried your Mitre Lozenges and consider them invaluable to Vocalists, or to anyone who has to exercise the voice much. Having found them so efficacious I have already recommended them to several of my pupils." Yours truly,

G. CARAVOGLIA.

"They are the best I ever used."

EGBERT ROBERTS,

"I have found the Mitre Lozenges very efficacious in restoring the voice, when impaired from the effects of cough and cold.

FREDERIC PENNA, Professor of Singing and Elocution.

"I find the Mitre Lozenges very palatable and efficacious."

SINCLAIR DUNN, (The Scottish Tenor.)

"The Mitre Lozenges arrived most opportunely as I was suffering from a severe cough and cold. I feel it was through them that I was enabled to sing that morning."

LIONEL DAVIS.

"I found great relief in clearing the voice when hoarse from your valuable Mitre Lozenges, and shall recommend them to my friends."

THORNBER ROE.

Sold by all Chemists at 1s. 1½d, and 2s. 9d.

Made for the Proprietors, J. & G. HAWKE, by ALLEN & HANBURYS, Plough Court, Lombard-St., London, E.C.

POST FREE ON RECEIPT OF STAMPS.

Printed by A. S. Mallett, Allen & Co., London, and Published by William Pearce, at 138a, Strand, W.C., to which address all communications must be sent

EDA KUHN LOEB MUSIC LIBRARY
3 2044 043 850 197

This book should be returned to the Library on or before the last date stamped below.

A fine of five cents a day is incurred by retaining it beyond the specified time.

Please return promptly.